I have been always, in the Legislature of my own State and here, in favor of giving to all railroad corporations such facilities as would enable them to transact the public business and place them all upon an exact equality. I would not restrict the Pennsylvania Railroad or the Baltimore and Ohio, but the line of the Baltimore and Ohio north from Baltimore to-day practically terminates at Philadelphia. It is making an effort to reach the harbor of New York, and has behind it 3,000 miles of railroad extending throughout the West as far as Chicago and Saint Louis. It desires to reach the port of New York in order to compete with other trunk lines, and which, as I think, will have the effect of reducing the cost of transportation to the people of this country.

But, Mr. President, before the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had the slightest interest in the construction of this bridge the measure was brought here as a local matter. It was brought here by the projectors of a railroad on Staten Island, and they came asking precisely the same privileges that are asked for to-day, to construct over this kill a bridge that would accommodate any road that should reach the banks of the kill so as to get over to Staten Island and utilize the immense water front and the deep water on the ocean side of the island. The Committee on Commerce treating it as a local matter, with no connection then with any other line, were unanimous in reporting a bill substantially the same as the one before the Senate to-day.

The objection urged is not that it will be a great obstruction to commerce, that it will obstruct all the interstate commerce passing down this kill and through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, and then down the Chesapeake Bay into the sounds south of Norfolk. If that were so, I myself would be opposed to the construction of a bridge across this kill. But what is the fact? Of all the commerce that passes up and down the Arthur Kill and goes through this line of canal, 90 per cent. is in barges and canal-boats, all of which, including the steamers that tow them, can pass under this bridge 32 feet high. There is but 10 per cent. of the sailing vessels that pass up and down this kill that can not pass under the bridge, and not one of them can go there unless it is towed. The width of the kill is 600 feet at the greatest extreme. The actual width of the kill for navigation purposes is about 400 feet, on account of the shoals on either side.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] asks me to repeat what I said about the towage. I say that 90 per cent. of all the immense tonnage that passes up and down the kill is in flat-boats, canal-boats, and barges that have no masts, and hence can pass under this bridge without opening the draw; and only 10 per cent. would require the draw to be opened, and of that 10 per cent. not a single vessel passes through under sail; they must all be towed by steamers.

If the statements of the Senators from New Jersey were accurate, that this draw would be required to be open nearly the entire time, the management of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad would not desire to construct a bridge there; they would not have it. They know that there is an immense tonnage passing there, and their object was naturally, when they concluded to buy the controlling interest in the Staten Island enterprise, to have a passage across that kill which would best facilitate their own commerce, and they made a very careful examination as to the approaches, whether a tunnel was feasible, and I have no question myself, from the examination which I have given (and I believe any Senator will be so convinced by looking at one of the Government maps), that the construction of a tunnel there within the cost of $5,000,000 would be impracticable. There can be no question as to this statement. On the west side the marsh extends for about 2 miles, and before you could make an approach to a tunnel you must reach a high point so that the water will not overflow it.

An attempt has been made to increase the facilities of crossing the North River by constructing a tunnel from Jersey City across to New York; but the undertaking has been found so expensive that there has not been money enough raised in this country to make a great tunnel for the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Erie Railroad and all the other lines that have their termination at Jersey City and Hoboken, and the engineers without exception say that it is not feasible within a reasonable cost.

Now look at the commerce that passes up and down this kill. The greater portion of it goes through the Raritan River and then through the Delaware and Raritan Canal. It passes through a bridge on the Raritan River not higher than the one proposed by this bill with a draw of 200 feet in the channel of a river that is only 125 feet in width, and then into a canal that is 80 feet in width and 19 feet in depth. Talk about interruptions to trade! Why, sir, all the trade going through this kill passes through a bridge with a draw less than 200 feet without interruption. Five million tons per annum have passed that one point alone. The truth is that 90 per cent., at least 3,000,000 tons, of that can pass under the bridge without the opening of the draw. And yet gentlemen say that it is not feasible, that it is impossible to take one of these long tows through a space of 216 feet without damage at the pier. As I have shown you, it passes up the Raritan River and the channel there is only 125 feet. It is not possible for the interstate commerce to be interfered with by this bridge.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] asks me how much passes up the Raritan River. It is almost impossible to get the data, but a very large amount of it. The Senator from New Jersey in that connection made the point—and if he had been correct in his facts it would have been a point of great force against the construction of a bridge across the Raritan River—that the tonnage of the Delaware and Raritan had fallen off from 5,000,000 tons to 2,000,000. The construction of the bridge has had naught to do with the falling off of that tonnage. The fact is that the Pennsylvania Railroad when it bought the railroads of New Jersey bought with them the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and made such a rate on the transportation of coal that the whole body of the tonnage which formerly passed over the canal now passes over the railroad, which runs parallel with the canal.

Mr. GEORGE. How far from it?

Mr. GORMAN. It is on the banks, parellel with the canal. The same company owns the canal and owns the railroad. It is their interest not alone in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, but it is the interest of railroads everywhere to transfer freights from the canals. The tonnage of the Delaware and Raritan Canal has fallen off from five or six million to two or three million tons, but that is not owing to the construction of the bridge on the Raritan River.

At Chicago, as this report states, 99 per cent. of all the tonnage that passes down the Chicago River from the lake passes through one bridge, and about 60 per cent. of it passes through three or four bridges the draws of which are all less in span than the one we propose here. There is no bridge at Boston, with all the vast commerce of that great city, that exceeds this in length. There are forty bridges in the State of New Jersey, all authorized by the action of that State, from 70 feet to 170 feet in length, over various streams many of which run into Newark Bay, and the Pennsylvania Railroad crosses them with a draw less than 60 feet. The great city of Newark, with 160,000 inhabitants and all its immense trade, has a bridge with a draw less than 80 feet. So they are dotted all over the State, and there has been no obstruction to commerce caused thereby and no claim of it until now.

Mr. President, my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] proposes a tunnel. I do not intend to say more about it than that it is not feasible at a reasonable cost and will prevent for a long time this road having an outlet to New York harbor. The other Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] says if that is not adopted he will propose an amendment requiring the bridge to be located at a different point and 70 feet in height. That proposition, if acceded to, would not benefit commerce in any way. Seventy feet in height would not permit a masted vessel to pass through without a draw.

Mr. SEWELL. The point I suggest is over half a mile from the present structure, where the stream widens out to a thousand feet and where there is an island in the center. My proposition is for a bridge 70 feet high, with a clear span on one side of say 400 feet and with a draw on the other side, so that the great body of the commerce of this stream which goes by the large tows may go clear and unobstructed in the 400-foot span.

Mr. GORMAN. I have shown that the greater portion of the commerce which passes up and down the kill passes in a channel 125 feet in width. One hundred and twenty-five feet width of channel is found sufficient for the great tows that pass up and down.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator inform us where the channel is 125 feet wide?

Mr. GORMAN. In the Raritan River.

Mr. SEWELL. The tonnage coming from the Raritan River is not more than 20 per cent. of the whole tonnage of Arthur Kill.

Mr. GORMAN. The draw in the Raritan River bridge is 200 feet, but the width of the channel is only 125 feet; and it is perfectly well known that there is no difficulty and never has been any with the tonnage of the Raritan and Delaware Canal. At this point the stream is to be left with a channel 216 feet in width—as wide as any river in this country—when the bridge is constructed as the bill provides, which will be wide enough for all the tows that come down the Hudson River; wider than the tows that go down the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, and there are no such tows on any of the Western waters. A bridge 32 feet high will admit 90 per cent. of the commerce that passes up and down the kill, and the draw will only have to be opened for 10 per cent. of it.

Mr. SEWELL. It is not creditable to the business capacity and intelligence of the Senator from Maryland to make a statement that this proposed draw is wider than the openings in the bridges on the Ohio River. The Ohio River bridges are required to have spans three or four hundred feet wide; I think the smallest is 300 feet; and there have been difficulties even with 300-foot openings and all the requirements there imposed. We have advanced in the science of bridge construction so that 500-foot spans are now feasible.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from New Jersey did not understand me. I say that the longest draw-bridge to-day in this country is 200 feet.

Mr. SEWELL. I was talking about spans. In the Ohio River the bridges are so high that they do not practically require the draw except in extreme high water.

Mr. GORMAN. There are no draws, as I understand, on the Ohio River bridges, and the spans are much greater than elsewhere; but upon all the rivers of this country where you have bridges with draws not one of them exceeds 200 feet. My friend from Missouri tells me the longest on the Mississippi River is 200 feet. Is it possible that the commerce passing in towboats, canal-boats, and barges on the Arthur Kill requires greater space than all the commerce passing up and down the Mississippi River?

Now, Mr. President, as to the construction of a high bridge, 70 feet; that would not give greater facilities than a bridge 32 feet high; but it would add to the cost of this structure. The difference is between $450,000 and $1,510,000. Besides, if placed at the proposed point for the high bridge, the railroad officials believe it would be an obstruction to the through freights of this country. But however that may be, the bill as reported by the Committee on Commerce provides that the location and height of the bridge shall be in the discretion of the War Department; that the engineers, who are not interested in either company, who have no interest except to see that proper facilities are given, shall locate this bridge at any point upon the kill and determine its height provided it shall not be less than 32 feet.

Mr. President, all the great cities between here and Boston are crossed by these very railroads, and every one of them has draw-bridges with less span than the one proposed in this bill. The Pennsylvania Railroad, as well as the Baltimore and Ohio road, in Maryland, in Pennsylvania, and in New Jersey, has bridges over navigable streams where the commerce is very considerable, and all less than the one proposed in this bill, and yet they do not interfere with commerce.

As I have said before, I myself would oppose the construction of any bridge that would interfere with this great inland water way, which I hope to see improved and taken out of the hands of private parties and made a highway by the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Maryland. He stated $5,000,000 as the cost of the construction of a tunnel. I ask him whether he has any data on that point?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] read a statement made by the second vice-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in which he said that owing to the marshy ground on the western side that approach to the tunnel would necessarily be of great length, making the approaches and the tunnel itself $4\frac{8}{10}$ miles in length, and that the cost of it would not be less than $5,000,000. That was a careful estimate. Taking the experience of the attempt to construct a tunnel under the Hudson River from Jersey City to New York, where millions of dollars have already been invested and it has baffled the best engineering skill of this country, it would not be safe to say that it could be done within the $5,000,000; and hence they came to the conclusion, and I think that will strike any practical mind as being correct, that no tunnel and no crossing of the kill could be had within reasonable cost except by a bridge.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, were it not to answer some of the extraordinary statements of the Senator from Maryland I should not ask the Senate to listen to me any further on this bill.

First, as to the tunnel scheme, we have here to-day a statement made by engineers in the interest that seeks this legislation, and given evidently to the Senate as a reason why the amendment I have had the honor to offer should not be accepted, putting the probable cost of the tunnel at $5,000,000.

Now, sir, I wish to present to the Senate a state of fact touching the construction of other tunnels, and then leave it to the intelligence of the Senate to decide.

Through what is known as the Bergen Hill, near Jersey City, in the county of Hudson, there are two railroad tunnels constructed, each 1 mile in length, through solid trap rock, the hardest rock known, the hardest to work. They are each about a mile in length, 80 feet below the surface of the ground. The contract price for building one of those tunnels was $800,000, and the cost of building the other was about a million dollars.

What are the conditions where this proposed tunnel is to be built? All the reports in the possession of the Senate go to show that 10 or 12 feet below the surface of the ground is solid sandstone. The sandstone crops out in the bed of the stream. It is easy to excavate and very easy to protect after it has been excavated by arching it over.

They propose to build a bridge to be 32 feet above low water. I propose to build a tunnel which shall go an equal distance, or say 40 feet, under the surface. Now will some Senator rise in his place and say as a common-sense proposition that it is necessary to have that tunnel with its approaches more than 1 mile in length from one end to the other for crossing a stream 600 feet in width, with solid sandstone from which to excavate the approaches and to build up, if you please, retaining-walls. No intelligent engineer or railroad man will come before the Senate of the United States and say that the probable cost of building a tunnel at this point across that stream, so that the navigation of the stream shall not interfere with the transit of the trains or the trains interfere with the commerce of the stream, would amount to any such sum. The statement is so absurd and unreasonable that its falsity appears on its very face.

There was one other thing touched by the Senator from Maryland of which I wish to speak. He spoke of the tonnage of the Raritan River and the canal and the great water way to the South. He spoke of the commerce of the Raritan River as being the major part of the commerce of Arthur Kill. I have read from the report of Major Gillespie, who is accepted as authority by the committee, that while the commerce of that canal at one time was 5,500,000 tons annually, and continued to increase after it went into the possession of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company until the Raritan bridge was built, which was built across the mouth of the Raritan River where it empties into the kill, and that after that bridge was built the difficulties encountered in the navigation of the Raritan River were so great that the commerce fell off to 2,300,000 tons, and why? For the very best of reasons, and for a reason that is unanswerable as to the location and construction of this bridge.

Now, what is it? When that bridge was built across the Raritan with a draw of 200 feet, a tow coming down the Raritan River dare not go through the draw when the tide was ebbing, but it was forced to come to anchor above the bridge, the channel of which the Senator from Maryland says is 125 feet wide. Instead of that being true, the bridge is almost 2 miles long where it crosses the Raritan, and there is a basin there that would almost cover the whole city of Washington. A tow comes down the river and has to anchor until such time as the water flows in and keeps the tow straight by running against the stream or inland flow. When the bridge was first constructed and the boats undertook to pass the draw with a tow there were more boats wrecked and in the bottom of the river than were upon its surface by reason of coming in contact by the action of the tide with the draw at the opening of the bridge. Now of the 16,000,000 tons which pass through the kill but 2,300,000 tons pass through the Raritan River.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator does not intend to misrepresent me. I did not say 16,000,000 tons pass through the Raritan River. I said that prior to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company getting possession of the Delaware and Raritan Canal the tonnage of the canal had increased to five or six millions, but that it had fallen off to about two million since.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Did I fail to make that plain to the Senator? I stated and I state now that from the time that property went into the possession of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company up to the time the bridge across the mouth of the Raritan was built, the commerce of that canal increased from 3,500,000 tons per year to 5,500,000 tons, and until the bridge was built the commerce never decreased.

Now take the tow as it leaves the Raritan bridge we will say. It proceeds to the Arthur Kill. It is under the control of a large steamboat. The largest tugboats in this country are the tugboats that navigate Long Island Sound, which take hold of these boats in Arthur Kill, pass up with the current as the tide comes in, and if they have a fair run they can reach Long Island Sound before the tide begins to ebb. When they reach this proposed bridge, what are they to do? They find the same conditions existing that require them to come to anchor at the Raritan bridge, because the water of the tide is then going against the tow and in the middle of the channel you have a pier 580 feet long upon which these draws are located.

I have myself, at that point, when a steamboat from any cause whatever broke down or was suspended in its motion for a minute, seen the tows go, part on one bank and part on the other. The tow is almost turned around there by the action of the current. With this great mass of water forced up, first as it will be through the Raritan Bay and the Arthur Kill up into Newark Bay and the Hackensack Bay and the Rahway River, when it begins to ebb it goes out with tremendous force. Now there is nothing to obstruct the whole path of the channel; it is free and unobstructed, and it will continue to be if a tunnel is built under its waters; but if you locate this impediment in the stream, then you add to the difficulties.

With regard to this tunnel I will take upon myself the responsibility of saying that I think I can produce within forty-eight hours from this moment a responsible party who will agree to construct the tunnel for all the purposes needed by any railroad or any number of railroads for $1,000,000, and give bonds for the faithful execution of the contract.

Mr. President, the State of New Jersey, by a concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, passed by an almost unanimous vote, has asked that the Congress of the United States do not destroy this water way; and it would be to my mind under all the circumstances of the case, with all the fears expressed here on the part of those who are interested in the commerce of that stream, a strange thing for the Senate of the United States at the behest or dictation of any railroad corporation or any number of them to say, "notwithstanding your objections, notwithstanding your fears, notwithstanding your appeals, still we think the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad or some railroad ought to have the privilege of crossing this stream just as it pleases; and if it is a matter of a million dollars or $300,000, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad ought to have the benefit of that reduction in cost."

Now, I have another proposition to make, and that is this: If the tunnel cost $5,000,000, if it cost double $5,000,000, the Congress of the United States should not permit any corporation to imperil by any bridge of any kind whatever (other than one that entirely spans the stream and is high enough to permit the commerce of the kill to pass unobstructed) the navigation of this great water way.

I understand this bridge will cost about $350,000. I think it can be built for much less. As to the cost of a bridge 70 feet high, we have estimates for that.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly. Anything is satisfactory to New Jersey and to the people interested in this stream that places the piers on both sides of the channel, leaving the channel free, and is sufficiently high to permit the navigation of the stream; either a cantalever bridge or a suspension bridge may be erected and nobody will find fault with that. Let notice be taken by every Senator that New Jersey does not object; I do not object to the crossing of this stream by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. I wish it to be done. New Jersey wishes it also. She would be glad to have it come into New Jersey and add to her wealth and importance. She only objects to the manner in which the work is proposed to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I came to the opinion a good many years ago, when it was proposed to bridge the Detroit River and when I had observed for years the constant bridging of navigable streams, which always more or less interrupts a free highway for a monopolized one, that I would never vote again, if I knew it, in favor of anything that would in the slightest degree obstruct any free navigable highway of the United States that was necessary to any reasonable amount of commerce. I think that is especially true in reference to water ways like that at Detroit and like those in the vicinity of New York and other great cities and centers of commerce and traffic in our constantly growing country. And when we look at the map of the United States and see, what all of us know without my referring to it, that a comparatively very slight expense will make from the city of New York to the Gulf of Florida on the west side of that State, and without any considerable canal at all to the east side of it, an internal water way free from the dangers either of water or of storms that will go from the city of New York to Fernandina at least and then by a ship-canal across Florida to the waters of the Gulf and so to Pensacola and Mobile and New Orleans, I mean to be very slow in voting for any bridge that is not so high above the water or so deep below it as shall disturb what I hope we shall all live, and what many of us will live, to see done, an internal water way for the commerce of the United States in peace and war that shall traverse the whole eastern seaboard of this country and bring us substantially to New Orleans.

This little piece of water that looks so small on the map is the opening key to that whole enterprise. More than forty years ago when I was a lad I sailed through this very Arthur Kill in a large steamboat in order for the first time in my young life to see the capital of my country, Washington, and my recollection of it is very vivid. I seemed to be sailing through land, but there was water enough, and even in that day there was a great deal of commerce on it. How much it must have grown since! And as New York situated on an island has got to overgrow itself and expand as it is doing to the Jersey shore, the same business, the same people, the same commerce, the same manufactures, the same enterprise, the same common welfare require this water way to be maintained; and I feel that I must be very slow indeed to put any obstruction to this natural tide-way that connects the upper harbor of New York with Raritan Bay and so to the southward with the commerce of the United States. These waters are free to everybody. The humblest citizen with his little vessel and the wealthier citizen with his larger vessel, without paying toll to anybody or waiting for anybody, has the right to go.

I think it will be better for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for its own interest, with the vast commerce that it will undoubtedly bring to New York—and why it does not go to Jersey City I do not know as it is nearer still—to spend one million or two or five million dollars for a bridge that shall go high above this water or for a tunnel, if that be practicable as it is stated to be, that shall go below it, than to be subjected as this bill seems to require (and as I suppose is intended to require except when its trains are actually passing) to stop the trains and open the draws every five minutes for the constantly increasing commerce in that water.

Mr. President, for the reasons thus briefly stated, as this bill now stands I shall vote against it. If it be provided that there shall be built a railroad bridge high enough above the water or low enough below it not to interfere with the free and perfectly unobstructed commerce, without any pier in the middle of this little channel or near it, then I shall vote for it with pleasure. Without it I can not.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a single word in regard to the matter of the tunnel which is now brought up for the first time in legislative form.

The point made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has not been answered and I think can not be. What has the Congress of the United States to do with a tunnel under a navigable stream? Undoubtedly, we have a right to regulate commerce among the States under the Constitution, and according to the decisions of the courts to say whether a bridge may go over a tidal stream anywhere; but when it comes to the question whether Congress shall regulate tunnels under a river, whether it is a tidal stream or an internal stream, that, I take it, will require some adjudication.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would that not be the same as if the State of New Jersey and the State of New York authorized a bridge so high above the water as not to interfere with navigation? Is it not precisely the same?

Mr. VEST. That is a novel question and one that the Committee on Commerce were not required to determine, for the reason that this subject of tunneling was not brought before us in any legislative form. Although it was mentioned in the arguments of counsel, it was not brought before the committee in any sort of proposition. This proposition for a tunnel comes to us to-day for the first time in a legislative form, though it was mentioned in argument before the committee. But aside from that, when a railroad company comes before Congress and proposes to construct a bridge the only question for the committee or indeed for the Senate or for Congress to determine is whether that structure as proposed is an obstruction to navigation—not an obstruction in the way the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says. I understand him to say that he will vote for no bridge that obstructs navigation to any extent upon navigable streams. Then he will never vote to construct any bridge at all. I undertake to say that no bridge can be constructed of any size that does not to some extent obstruct navigation. A bridge can not be put up that to some extent does not obstruct navigation; and the only question for Congress to determine is whether the demands of commerce are such that a railroad company should be permitted to have a bridge in order to meet the general demands of the country.

The Senator from Vermont asks why not make this a high bridge of 70 or 80 feet? Because the evidence before the committee showed that the expense would be intolerable almost to any corporation, because of the long approaches and the condemnation of land; and we have no right to force any corporation, large or small, to spend more money upon such a bridge than is necessary in order to cross the stream, provided always that the least amount of obstruction is brought about to navigation. That is the whole thing for us to determine.

It is a remarkable thing that the Senator from New Jersey comes here now and talks to us about a high bridge of 70 feet. Why was not that proposition made to the committee? Why not offer an amendment to the bill of that sort?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator to say that the proposition was not made in committee?

Mr. VEST. I heard the proposition as to the height of the bridge, but it was never made in any authoritative form by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say that I never appeared before the committee at all, but I did understand——

Mr. SEWELL. Allow me to say that I heard the suggestion made to the committee, but the Senator from Missouri was not there.

Mr. VEST. I know that all sorts of suggestions were made. I have heard the question discussed five or six times.

Mr. MCPHERSON. May I have leave now to make the suggestion?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator wants to offer an amendment, let him do it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the committee will prepare an amendment providing for a bridge 70 feet high that will span the stream so as not to impair or obstruct it in any form, with the consent of the Senate I will withdraw my amendment for a tunnel.

Mr. VEST. We have reported our bill. We have examined this question over and over again and heard all sorts of arguments and read all sorts of briefs; and we have heard from the captains of schooners and sloops and steamers, and from lawyers of the highest rank in the profession, and from members of the other House of Congress and the Senate, and we have reported unanimously this bill, which the Senate can take or reject as they please.

I will say as the result of our investigation, without any prejudice I am sure on the part of the committee, that this bridge can be constructed under the details presented in this bill without materially affecting the navigation. That is the result of our conclusions.

Now the Senators stand here and say that a bridge of a certain height shall be built; that nothing but a bridge 70 feet high can be tolerated over that stream. If they have this amendment to propose, let them propose it and we will meet them and discuss it. These statements amount to nothing.

I propose to offer an amendment to this bill, as I notice in reading it over that it is not sufficiently explicit as to a certain limitation which should be in all bridge bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] proposes an amendment to the part proposed to be stricken out, which is in order. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert:

If the Secretary of War shall at any time deem any change or alteration necessary in the said bridge so that the same shall not obstruct navigation, or if he shall think the removal of the whole structure necessary, the alteration so required or the removal of the whole structure shall be made at the expense of the parties owning said bridge; and if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall determine and cease.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate more than a few moments upon this question.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has expressed his opinion upon this bill in a very few words and his judgment against it. I regret that he did not consider this matter of sufficient importance to listen to the argument of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who was chairman of the subcommittee which reported this bill, or to the remarks made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who also was a member of the committee which reported this bill to the Senate. If he had, perhaps he would have been convinced that this bridge when built will not be an undue obstruction to the free navigation of the Arthur Kill. If I understood the Senator correctly he is opposed to all bridges across navigable streams for the transit of railroads because they will in some way obstruct the rights of private navigators upon those waters.

Mr. President, we have passed through this body at this session a score of bills of a similar nature to this, bridging the Missouri River and the Mississippi River and a number of other streams, and, if I remember rightly, one in the State of Vermont, and I have never heard the voice of the Senator from Vermont raised here against any of those propositions, and if he has not voted for them directly he has indirectly, because every one of them has been passed by the unanimous consent of this body, and in every case they were bills for low bridges and for draws.

As I have listened to the opposition to this bill, coming chiefly and almost entirely, except the last protest that has been entered by the Senator from Vermont, from the two Senators from New Jersey, I have wondered why it was that the State of New Jersey alone stood here opposing this measure. The arguments made against this bill by the Senators from New Jersey, if correct, should elicit the warm support of the Senators from New York and from all the New England States, which are interested more than all other States in the navigation of the Arthur Kill and in the commerce which passes over it.

I have no desire to question the correctness of the estimate which the Senators from New Jersey have given as to the amount of commerce passing through this kill. It is said to be sixteen or twenty million tons per annum. Where does it come from and where does it go to? How much of it originates in the State of New Jersey and how much of it terminates there? The Arthur Kill is a tidal stream, bounded upon one side by the State of New Jersey and upon the other side by the State of New York, and presumably the State of New York might have as much interest in the commerce of the Arthur Kill as the State of New Jersey, and I do not hesitate to say that it has a thousand times greater interest, for nearly all these 16,000,000 tons of freight passing through it find their terminus and market in the State of New York and not in the State of New Jersey, and that which does not go to the State of New York goes through Long Island Sound to the New England States. In short, probably not 5 per cent. of the commerce passing through the Arthur Kill either originates in the State of New Jersey or terminates there. The coal comes from the mines of Pennsylvania, and that is the principal part of the commerce of the Arthur Kill. It goes to New York city and up the Hudson River or around Long Island Sound and to the New England ports.

How does it happen then that the State of New Jersey is exclusively charged with a watchful care over this most valuable stream? If this is to destroy the commerce of the Arthur Kill, why are not the great merchants of New York, and its chambers of commerce, and its Legislature here protesting against the passage of this bill? Most certainly if they believed for a moment that it would seriously interfere with the commerce of that stream, all those great interests centering in the city of New York and in the State and also in the New England States would be here in vast numbers protesting against it. But what are the facts? Nearly all the leading shipping merchants in the city of New York have petitioned this body for the passage of the bill. The Maritime Association and I think nearly if not quite every commercial body in the city of New York have petitioned the Senate for the passage of this bill. The Legislature of New York have repeatedly passed resolutions favoring it.

Would this appear for a single moment or could it happen if the people most deeply interested in this commerce believed that the bridge would injure it? Why does it not happen that the State of Pennsylvania from whence all this coal comes is not here protesting against the passage of this bill? Because the merchants of New York and its commercial bodies and the miners and shippers of coal in Pennsylvania know full well that the building of this bridge will be no serious obstruction to the commerce which has hitherto floated upon it. The people of Pennsylvania and of the entire South and Southwest know that the building of this bridge is to add vastly to the terminal facilities of the port of New York. They know full well that anything done to reduce the cost of terminal charges in that great harbor will redound to the interest of the grower of cotton and the grower of grain and the miner of coal in all the States which I have mentioned.

It is undoubtedly the interest of the whole portion of the country traversed by the great railroad which proposes to go in there that this bridge should be built. It is equally for the interest of all of New York's merchants and financial people and shipping merchants and also for the interest of the New England States that this bridge shall be constructed and that the terminal facilities of the harbor of New York shall be thereby greatly increased.

Any one looking at the map will discover that upon the north end of Staten Island there is a vast water front which could be well utilized for the building of piers and wharves, and that is what it is proposed to do; and when that work shall have been completed, then the harbor of New York will have a terminal which will be as cheap or cheaper than that to be found in any other city in the Union. Go to Baltimore to-day, and you will find there the cars of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad running directly upon the wharves, and the produce of the West is taken directly from the car and loaded into the ocean-going steamer. That will be done in New York if this bill passes. By what right, then, does the State of New Jersey introduce itself here and demand of the Congress of the United States that permission shall not be given for the bridging of the Arthur Kill? What can be its object?

Mr. President, I do not care to go into the motives which have actuated that State or its representatives here in opposing this measure. It is perfectly natural that that State should desire that this great terminal should be upon its own shores, and that out of the property thus created the State should draw a large revenue in the way of taxation. I am not disposed to criticise it for that desire; but shall the demands of this great commerce be at all interfered with or checked because the State of New Jersey desires to keep this terminal within its own borders when a much better terminal, a terminal where freight can be handled much more cheaply, can be found upon Staten Island within the bounds of the State of New York? No, Mr. President, the Congress of the United States can not and will not be actuated by any such motive as that.

As to the contest between the two great railroad systems, the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio, I have nothing to say. We all know that there has been a sharp rivalry and a great contest between them, and, growing out of it, the Baltimore and Ohio Company has found it necessary to expend large sums of money in building a new and independent line from the city of Baltimore to Philadelphia, and from there to New York. It has met with opposition at every step of its progress. It was with the greatest difficulty that it secured the right of passage through Philadelphia. And now, when it would erect for itself an independent and a great terminal upon the harbor of New York, to which it can bring all the produce of the country through which its lines and its branches run, it is met here by the opposition of the State of New Jersey.

It seems to me that the one proposition which I have stated, that New York, that its merchants and its Legislature, and that substantially the whole of New England, have interposed no opposition whatever to the construction of this bridge, should be evidence enough to this body that it is not seriously to interfere with the navigation of the Arthur Kill; but if more testimony be necessary, the Senate has only to turn to the report made to this body by the Committee on Commerce, and there they will find the report of the Chief of Engineers, submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War. That report was made to the Forty-eighth Congress. It was distinctly and fairly in favor of this proposition. It undertakes to show that this bridge, built according to the provisions of the bill, will be no serious obstruction to the navigation of the Arthur Kill. The committee again this winter, when the question was brought before it, after nearly two years had elapsed, and when the engineering corps had had an abundance of opportunity to restudy this question, re-examined it and resubmitted the question to the engineering department of our Government for another opinion, and that opinion is to be found in the report made by the committee. It fully bears out the favorable report which was made two years ago, and it gives sufficient reasons for the report which has been made to this session of Congress. Let me read one clause of it. This report was made January 16, 1886:

Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, provides for the construction of a pivot draw-bridge, which shall have a width of span of not less than 200 feet in the clear on either side of the pivot pier, and a height of not less than 30 feet from lower chord to low-water level. These provisions, in my opinion, meet all the demands of the present or future commerce of the kill, and the restrictions contained in section 4 of the bill are ample to secure a location and construction for the pivot pier such as will cause least interference with the existing deep-water channel and at the same time will be least obstructive to the tidal currents.

The construction of the proposed bridge under the provisions of the bill will not injuriously affect any interests over which the Government has control.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Brt. Lieut. Col. United States Army.

This is indorsed by General Newton and by the Secretary of War. These, in brief, are the conditions and the circumstances under which this bill comes before this body. It is desired by all the merchants and business men of the city of New York who have seen fit to express their opinion upon it, and they are numbered by hundreds. It has been indorsed by the State Legislature, and it has met with no opposition, so far as I know, in any portion of New England lying along the Atlantic coast.

The proposition now made to change the bridge into a tunnel needs no rebutting argument. If a tunnel were desired, or were possible, it would not be necessary to come to this body for permission to build it. For years the attempt has been made to run a tunnel under the North River between Jersey City and New York. Thus far its projectors have been unable to complete it or even to continue its construction, and to-day it stands substantially an abandoned project, undoubtedly one which the commerce of the port of New York would be very glad to see completed. The letter read here to-day, written on the authority of the engineering corps of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, is a sufficient answer as to the feasibility of building a tunnel under the Arthur Kill.

Failing in that proposition, the Senators tell us that they propose to ask for a high bridge at some other point. But this bill does not locate the bridge at any point. As originally presented, it did locate it near Elizabethport, Union County, New Jersey, and the town of Northfield, Richmond County, New York. The committee have stricken out of the bill those points designated and left the location of the bridge to be approved by the Secretary of War. If he sees fit to require the bridge to be built at some other point than the one that was originally intended in the bill, he has absolute power to do it. If he should see fit to order it to be located a half-mile below at the island of which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] spoke, the Secretary of War has power to do it. If the Secretary of War and the engineering corps, after a most careful consideration of this matter, should see fit to order the bridge to be built higher than is provided for in this bill, they have power to do it, for the bill does not limit the height of it, but it simply provides that it shall be built at not less than 32 feet above low water.

In all its provisions, then, the bill leaves it absolutely in the power and control of the Secretary of War to say how the bridge shall be built, and where it shall be built, and what its height shall be. Any attempt to change the bill by turning the bridge into a tunnel or into a high bridge is simply intended for the purpose of defeating the entire measure; but if it should pass this body in any such amended form it would be absolutely destroyed, and thus one of the great trunk lines of this country would be shut out from one of the best terminals which can be found upon the Atlantic coast for the delivery of goods for shipment to foreign countries. I do not believe that any of the interests of this country demand that that shall be done. If I believed for a moment that the building of this bridge would seriously interfere with the commerce of the Arthur Kill, I should be here protesting against it more warmly than the honorable Senators from New Jersey have protested against it, for if the State of New Jersey has any interest in this commerce whatever, the State of New York has a thousand-fold greater interest in it, for it forms no inconsiderable portion of the commerce of the great city of New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moved an amendment to the part proposed to be stricken out, which is first in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MILLER. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

If the Secretary of War shall at any time deem any change or alteration necessary in the said bridge so that the same shall not obstruct navigation, or if he shall think the removal of the whole structure necessary, the alteration so required or the removal of the whole structure shall be made at the expense of the parties owning said bridge; and if the said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act the rights and privileges hereby granted shall determine and cease.

Mr. VEST. Let that be added to the end of section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCPHERSON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. I understand this strikes out the bridge and puts in a tunnel.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. FRYE. I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Senator from West Virginia can withdraw his pair and vote.

Mr. CAMDEN. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired on the bill with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who has been called from the Senate Chamber. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. DAWES. I am paired for the day with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. If any one can inform me how he would vote on this amendment, I shall be governed accordingly. I should vote "nay" if the Senator from Texas were here.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but I have been requested to transfer my pair on this question to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], so that I will allow my vote to stand, the Senator from Pennsylvania being paired with the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MILLER. My colleague [Mr. EVARTS] is necessarily absent, but is in favor of this measure and would vote against this amendment. With the consent of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] I will change his pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Senator from Maine announced his pair with the Senator from Alabama.

My colleague can be paired with him and the Senator from Maine can vote. My colleague desired me to get a pair for him on this measure.

Mr. FRYE. Then I vote.

Mr. MILLER. It is suggested that I did not announce how my colleague would vote. He is in favor of this bridge-building bill, and would vote against the amendment.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], but I am advised he would vote "nay" if present; therefore I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 40; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWELL. I propose to offer an amendment to locate this bridge within about a half-mile or three-quarters of a mile from the location intended by the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question? Where in this bill does he find any location?

Mr. SEWELL. I find the map of the company locating the bridge at a certain point.

Mr. MILLER. That does not locate it at all without the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SEWELL. That is a subsequent matter.

Within half a mile the stream widens out from 600 feet to 1,000 feet, with an island in the center, where I propose that this bridge shall be located. There with a sufficient elevation of the bridge—an elevation not as much as is required on the Ohio River by the general law—the great body of the traffic that goes by tow, large numbers of vessels, as I stated in my remarks, being towed, can get through. This can be secured by an elevation of 70 feet, leaving on the other channel space for a smaller draw, which I provide for by reducing the size of the draw fixed in the original bill from 200 to 100 feet, so as to allow masted vessels to go through in a single tow. I will read the amendment and afterward send it to the desk.

In line 9 of the first section of the bill I propose to amend by locating the bridge at Buckwheat Island, and in the second section by striking out all down to "mark," in line 6, and inserting:

That said bridge shall be constructed with a draw over the channel on the New Jersey or westerly side of Buckwheat Island of not less than 100 feet opening, and with a span of not less than 400 feet on the easterly side of said island, and said bridge shall not be less than 70 feet above mean high-water mark.

Providing for a clear span on one side and a draw on the other.

After the remarks of the Senator from New York favoring this project I beg to say that the only charters that exist to-day passed by the Legislature of New York are one for a bridge 137½ feet high, which has not been built, and one for a tunnel at this very proposed site.

Mr. MILLER. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. SEWELL. I mean that that is the legislation of New York State.

Mr. MILLER. We have three bridges across the Hudson River at Albany.

Mr. SEWELL. I speak of this particular locality between Richmond County, New York, and New Jersey.

Mr. FRYE. This whole matter was discussed and considered by the committee, and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the location of this bridge should be left to the Engineer Department. The bill itself as it was first presented rather indicated that the bridge was to be built at the location to which the Senator from New Jersey objects. It has to-day been amended by an amendment reported by the committee itself giving the Engineer Department a latitude of several miles, so that if in their opinion commerce requires that it shall be located over this island, they will so find.

As to the height of 70 feet, there is not the slightest advantage in a 70-foot bridge over a 32-foot bridge, and 32 feet is the minimum, but not the maximum. No masted vessel can go under a 70-foot bridge any easier than it can go under a 32-foot bridge, and these coal-barges can go under a 32-foot bridge as well as they can under one of 70 feet.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In regard to this amendment I only wish to state one fact: For the 70-foot bridge but one approach is necessary, to wit, on the Jersey shore. The altitude of the island is so great that the trains can run to and from the bridge right on a level, so that but one high approach would be needed.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say that I have estimates of the difference in cost, and they correspond very nearly with what the Senator from Maryland stated. It is a question of $400,000 or a million; my estimate makes it $500,000. The increased cost for towing the vessels would be more every year than the additional cost of construction of a high bridge if it should be $600,000.

Mr. PLUMB. As far as I am concerned I am not willing to leave the question whether this bridge affects commerce or not to the judgment of some engineer officer we do not know about. I really candidly think that in many respects the engineer officers of the Army are disqualified to judge of that question. Their education and their prepossessions run in certain lines, and they may not take into account all the ramifications of the great trade that has existed from time immemorial and which are to be affected by the location of the bridge or by the height of it or by the manner of its construction.

There is no parity, as I think, between this case and that which is cited by the Senator from Missouri of the commerce of the Mississippi River. As every one knows, the commerce of all that great section of the country has been comparatively diverted by means of the construction of railroads in such a way that the river does not now carry anything like what it did formerly in proportion, and that diversion, as the Senator from Missouri says very well, will continue. At the same time we shall vote before this session is over, I have no doubt, many millions of dollars for the purpose of improving and keeping open the Mississippi River, which is so unimportant a channel of commerce and which is becoming less important, as the Senator from Missouri says, every day.

But the commerce which traverses this stream, as I understand, is not to be changed or taken off, or in any way diminished by reason of the construction of the railroad. It is the local traffic incident to approximation to a great city that comes along this water way, not because of its cheap transportation alone, but because of the enormous facilities furnished by the extent of frontage for the receipt and deposit and redistribution again of all the products of this trade, and it is the end also, as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] suggests, of railroad transportation. And so every single thing which is carried upon this stream will continue to be carried there no matter how many railroads may be constructed across it. So we are confronted with this proposition as to whether we will authorize the construction of an impediment or anything that may possibly prove to be an impediment to a traffic that is bound always to continue.

No one objects, as I suppose, to the construction of a bridge across this or any other stream where it is necessary for the purposes of railroad transportation; but what damage we may do by improvident action here can not be repaired, and whether we require a railroad company to build a bridge costing a million dollars or a million and a half of dollars does not touch the question of the cost of the transportation that is finally to make use of that railroad. It will not affect the price of cattle or corn or hogs in the State of Missouri or the State of Kansas, as every one knows. Is it not, therefore, the part of wisdom to require the building of such a structure as shall in no possible case interfere with a traffic which is essential to the welfare of the people who live in that section of country and which is always bound to be carried on by the same means that it is now carried on unless it is to be destroyed?

I think, then, if it be true that this bridge will not cost more than half a million dollars built with the span suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, or even if it will cost not more than a million if thereby we make perfectly sure that we shall not harm in any single vital particular the business now carried on upon that stream, there ought to be no hesitation in taking that precaution and voting for the more costly and the higher structure.

It is true that this business, when we come to speak of the amount that a man's little boat carries of clay, chemicals, and things of that kind down this stream, cuts a very insignificant figure compared with the enormous business of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. At the same time it is not only vital to him, but the trade itself and the ability to carry it on in the way it has always been carried on affects very seriously all the population of the adjoining country, and for the reasons which I have already stated.

Why shall we not, therefore, give to that existing traffic every possible chance to continue as it always has continued, as it exists to-day, rather than run the risk of taking away one single iota for the benefit of a railroad company, when by taking it away we do not add at all to the value of the railroad property practically, or to the value of the railroad as the transporter of the great products of the country, and in no sense tend to increase the cost of that transportation, for, as I said, if a corporation of that kind is capitalized at forty, fifty, sixty, or perhaps one hundred million, the addition of half a million or a million dollars to the cost of such a structure affects in not the slightest degree the cost of transportation over that line, because it is not the transportation simply from one bank of the stream to the other, but the haul from the great interior of the country to the Atlantic seaboard, to which the distribution of the interest upon half a million dollars or a million dollars, the cost of the entire bridge, is as nothing.

I would guard as jealously and save from all harm just as certainly every single owner of any means of transportation upon this stream and every one who has been carrying on and is now carrying on any commerce or trade there, however humble, as I would save the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company with its forty millions of capital. And when I speak of that railroad company I speak with great respect, for it is a great channel of commerce, which ought to have all reasonable facilities for getting into New York and all other cities where it wants to go. But at the same time when it comes to the essential matter of right, it is not right to run any risk at all of taking away privileges already existing, humble though they may be and small in amount, for the purpose of giving additional privileges to corporations which always find in one way or another means of accomplishing their purposes. It will not add to the revenues of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to take away these privileges. It will not add to the cost of maintaining and operating that great railway to require them to build such a bridge as shall under no possible condition of things injure the slightest or the humblest of the people who now use this water way for their own purposes and as an adjunct to the commerce of the city of New York and of all the vicinity. Therefore, if there is any possible chance that this low bridge or this bridge to be built at the place fixed upon this map will do harm, we ought to vote to put it somewhere else and put up a different kind of structure.

When I come to consider that question I am bound to give credit and great weight, in fact almost controlling weight, to the statement made by the two Senators representing that State on this floor, the men who know more about it than I do, the men who have had an intimate connection with the affairs of that section of country all their lives perhaps, and who represent that people here. While they claim nothing as I understand in any way to deprive New York of any privilege of access to the West, they do claim that we shall not take action which will in any wise impair the interests that have grown up there and are important to the people of that section of the country; and that claim, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to concede.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is willing to be guided by the judgment of the Senators from New Jersey in the matter. Will he tell us how the State of New Jersey has any greater interest in the commerce of Arthur Kill than New York has?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not suppose it has any greater interest.

Mr. MILLER. The commerce neither begins in the State of New Jersey nor does it end there.

Mr. PLUMB. The State of New York is not interested in any way in the question as to whether this bridge is 30 feet high or 70 feet high; it is not interested in any way, near or remote, in the question of whether the bridge costs half a million dollars or a million or three million dollars. That may be left out of account entirely; that concerns the railroad company; and in view of the fact that it concerns the railroad company solely and only, I am not willing to put in the balance that question of the interest of the railroad company against the interest which has been built up, which exists to-day in enormous volume, which is the means of existence and profit to many thousands of people, who use this means of communication planted there by nature, and all the affiliated interests which they serve by means of the navigation they carry on in their modest and inconsequential boats. Therefore, as I said, the question is whether we will, for the purpose of enabling this railroad company to get along with a little less cost, take risks, however slight, of doing harm to somebody who is not able to respond to the loss and damage which are threatened, not half as able to respond to that loss and damage as the railroad company is to pay out of its ample revenues the additional sum of half a million or a million dollars for the purpose of making this structure in such a way that there can be no question at all that it will be equally useful to them and lacking the power of harm to existing interests.

For this reason I will vote all the time to resolve doubts in favor of the commerce existing there and the people who are carrying it on and against those who seek to take a privilege, which, while useful to the public interest, can be exercised in some other way by them, and which only costs them a little sum of money without value to the public.

As I said before, I do not speak with any special disrespect of the Engineer Corps of the Army or of any member of it, but I ask the Senate seriously to consider whether they are willing to put the question as to whether a commerce of the magnitude which this commerce is by common consent known to be at the mercy of a single person, whoever he may be?

The engineer officers are not charged with any question relating to commerce; they are not educated in such questions; they know nothing about them except in some remote way. They know less about them, I venture to say, than almost any other class of educated people, because their education, their instruction, their means of observation have not been in that line. They are not men to whom should be committed those great questions as to whether these interests, made up of a multitude of small transactions, but in their ramifications extending hundreds of miles along that coast, embracing interests aggregating large amounts, and yet in many respects no doubt of a delicate character, are to be interrupted, and whether this course which has become to a certain extent a prescriptive right, will be trenched upon by the erection of this great highway across this other great highway.

For my part, therefore, as I said, I am not willing to permit that question to be decided by any one having less authority than Congress itself. With us ought to rest the ultimate responsibility, and we ought not to dodge our responsibility by committing this great question to any one, either to the Secretary of War or any member of the Army under him. We ought to decide it ourselves. For the purpose of the vote which I shall give, I shall vote for the longest and highest and most costly structure within a reasonable limit which may seem to give the most assurance that the business which now plies along this water way shall ply with the same safety, the same convenience, the same volume, the same lack of impediment and restriction that it always has had; which can be accomplished by the erection of such a structure as shall be not only within the means of the railroad company, but a structure of safety for all the traffic which it will carry over it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have listened to this discussion with considerable interest, and with an honest and earnest desire to be instructed on this subject. Observing the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas, I should like to ask him whether a bridge was ever authorized to be constructed by an act of Congress where the bill did not have in it the provision that it should be placed in the hands of the War Department and conducted by the engineers?

Mr. PLUMB. That is true in minor cases, but not in all cases, and not as broadly as is the proposition in the bill. The length of the span is provided for always, and the height above high-water mark, and no discretion is committed to the Secretary of War, except that if at any time thereafter the structure authorized in all its parts to be put up in a particular way by Congress shall prove destructive to commerce, he may then take certain action.

Mr. VOORHEES. My recollection of bills upon this subject is perhaps not as accurate as that of other Senators, but I know of no precedent by which the construction of a bridge was placed in different hands than those proposed by this bill, nor indeed can I conceive how it could be done otherwise. I do not suppose that Senators sitting here could devise the method, the details, the distances, and the heights of a bridge. The construction of a bridge must necessarily be placed in the hands of the engineer officers, capable men upon that subject.

I will observe further, in response to what the Senator from Kansas says, as to the risk of interfering with navigation, that we could not interfere with it if we tried to do so. We could not obstruct navigation by law. If we were to enact a law for that purpose, and if a bridge built by the engineers, or the War Department, or by anybody else should interfere with navigation it would be torn down; it could not stand. There is no risk on that subject.

The matter at last resolves itself back as to whether the committee which reported this bill has done its work intelligently or not. If we can not trust such attention as has been given to this measure by the committee, I know not how we can legislate upon a subject of this kind. There is a safeguard to navigation in the Constitution. It is there, and can not be taken away by an act of Congress. The committee assures us that this structure will not interfere with navigation. If it should interfere it will give way to the supreme right of way which navigable waters have. I do not believe that it will interfere with navigation for the reason that the committtee who have investigated this subject give us that assurance. Therefore I can see no risk in voting for this measure.

As a Western man, representing in part a Western State, we have but one interest, and that is to have as many competing lines to carry our mighty products to the markets of the East as possible. I can not sympathize with an attempt to shut out any competing line of railroad by other roads and by other lines. It is impossible for us to do so. This looks to me like an honest and legitimate effort upon the part of one great railroad system to get into New York, and there is an attempt, natural though selfish, because selfishness belongs to corporations as well as to individuals, to keep it out of that market. That is the light in which it appears to me, and as to the risks I can not find them, investigating the matter in the brief space in which I have given it my attention.

Mr. SEWELL. I wish to correct an impression necessarily created by the remarks of the Senator from Indiana in relation to the construction of these bridges. I doubt if Congress has ever passed an act for the construction of a bridge in which it did not specifically give limit to the height and to the spans. I will cite an instance in point which covers this case to a great extent, that of the Newport bridge, authorized in 1868 to be built by the Newport and Cincinnati Bridge Company, where it was prescribed that the lowest point should be 73 feet high. The tonnage of the Ohio River is not 25 per cent. the tonnage of this passage-way. The steamboat interest on the Ohio River after that bridge was half built—and I have the maps of it here showing the process of construction of that bridge at the time—came to Congress and complained that 73 feet was not sufficient for the passage of just such tows as go through the kills; and by an act of Congress they had it increased to 103 feet, although the bridge was more than half constructed and the piers were all laid and one-half of the superstructure was up, as this map will show. A railroad company arbitrarily is empowered by this act of Congress; and the protection I seek now for the people who navigate the kills is to change the plan, elevate the bridge 38 feet, and spend $600,000 in doing it.

Mr. VEST. I do not choose that the Senator from Kansas shall come into this debate at this hour like a cavalry charge and put me in a position I have never occupied. The Senator said I stated that the Mississippi River was becoming unimportant as a portion of the carrying agency of the country. I said no such thing. The whole scope of my argument was simply to the effect, and it is true, that the river men were unable to appreciate the fact that the railroads of the country were doing the largest portion of the carrying trade.

As to the Mississippi River becoming unimportant, it can never become so; and it is idiotic to suppose that it ever will. It is to-day the great conservative factor in the carrying trade of this country, and it is the only check we have upon the great trunk railroads that run from east to west. I do not propose to be put in any such position by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not think I represented him as saying that it was unimportant, but comparatively unimportant. I was probably not listening very closely at the time, although I noticed that particularly, because he lives on the river and is as competent to judge of its comparative importance as anybody. I understood him to say that an increasing amount of commerce was constantly being taken away from that river by railroads, and of course that would mean that the river had lost its comparative importance. That it is important in the way he speaks of, as a corrective, I agree; that no one denies. I do not care to discuss the question as to whether it has lost either its absolute or its relative importance; but the statement which he made had the effect upon my mind certainly of conveying the impression that the Mississippi River was not the factor in the commerce of this country, in the transportation of products, that it formerly was, by reason of the fact that the railroads had diverted traffic from it.

Mr. VEST. Yes; and so far as that statement is concerned I repeat it. There was a time when there were no railroads in the country, or only here and there a sporadic road which did not meet at all the demands of commerce, and then we were dependent entirely upon the rivers. When I first became a citizen of Missouri I found upon the Missouri River seventy-odd packets equal in accommodation to any of the coast packets of Louisiana or to be found now upon the North River, and to-day I believe between the city in which I live and the city of Saint Louis there are two boats, dependent almost entirely upon way traffic. I simply meant to say that the changed conditions and circumstances of the country had brought about a condition of affairs which the river men seem very reluctant to admit but which still does exist. What I meant to say at the same time, and I repeat it, was that the Mississippi River and its great tributaries must always remain a most important factor and a conservative one in the carrying trade of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator a question. We do not differ about this matter. I agree with him entirely in what he now says, and certainly I did not mean to misrepresent him. Does he mean to say now in support of the bill that he thinks the building of a bridge by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad across this channel will in any way interfere with the commerce of this stream as an auxiliary of trade with New York and all that section of country? In other words, does he believe that the Baltimore and Ohio will take up any of the business that now comes down it?

Mr. VEST. I do not know that it would, and it is not necessary to consider that question in regard to the propriety of passing this bill. The only question which was before the Committee on Commerce, and which is now before the Senate, is whether we can authorize the building of this bridge in the interest of the general commerce of the country without doing manifest injustice to the people who navigate the stream; and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of some of the lawyers of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri can answer. Perhaps the question will exhibit a good deal of ignorance on my part. But as I understand the Senators from New Jersey the State of New Jersey opposes this project, and its Legislature has put itself on record against it.

Mr. VEST. I believe they do.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if that be true, what operation is there in this bill at all to accomplish anything? I understand that Congress may, in the first place, by national authority, remove the objection in regard to a structure across a navigable stream that it obstructs navigation so that the persons building the bridge would not be indictable at common law or by any other proper process, and the structure would not be destroyed as a nuisance. I understand that many persons, not everybody, claim that under our power to regulate commerce we may authorize a railroad under the law of eminent domain to cross the country and take land, in which case, however, there must be provisions for its condemnation, and provisions which must attend the exercise of the power of eminent domain. But here there is nothing of that kind. Here is one New Jersey corporation and one New York corporation, either of which is authorized to build a certain structure which must rest at one end upon land in New Jersey and must occupy New Jersey soil. There is not any authority to use eminent domain.

Has not the State of New Jersey the absolute power over this New Jersey corporation, the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, and has it not the absolute power over all corporations to prevent them from building this bridge or any part of it in the State of New Jersey, notwithstanding this assent given by Congress? So, how does this measure do anything against the insistance or remonstrance of the State of New Jersey?

Mr. SEWELL. It is the peculiarity of the bill that the Congress of the United States proposes to give a power to a corporation of New Jersey which the charter of that corporation especially prohibits it from using.

Mr. HOAR. But this bill has not said that A B and C D, a corporation which we create, or a corporation which any State has created, or any individuals may have delegated to them the power of eminent domain to build a bridge or to build a railroad. It has simply said that a New Jersey corporation may build a bridge on certain conditions, and that is all it has said. It has not undertaken to exercise in a proper way or in any way the authority which I named.

Is not this corporation, although Congress has said it has no objection to its doing so, still under the control of New Jersey? Is not New Jersey soil still under the control of New Jersey for the purpose of building bridges or constructing railroads or anything else, unless Congress by national power, if it can do so, as most of us think, has authorized an exercise of eminent domain? I can not see that any Senator has yet answered the proposition that if it be true that New Jersey objects we have been entirely wasting our time in bringing in and passing this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What has New Jersey done?

Mr. HOAR. Nothing, except her Legislature have voted to instruct her Senators on the subject.

Mr. SEWELL. The Legislature of New Jersey have on two occasions voted, the first time unanimously, the next time by a two-thirds vote, requesting Congress not to pass this bill, and they have passed an act prohibiting any corporation of New Jersey from exercising the right of crossing this stream without their consent.

Mr. HOAR. What can be done under this bill if New Jersey objects?

Mr. SEWELL. I presume the corporation can throw the matter into litigation in the United States courts.

Mr. VEST and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. VEST. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VEST. I yielded, but the statute of limitations is still running.

The charters of these two railroad companies have in them the ordinary provisions in regard to the crossing of a navigable stream and the condemnation of such portions of the land upon each side of the stream as may be necessary for piers or abutments or the appurtenances to a bridge. That is a sufficient answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he requires an answer.

But aside from that, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that Congress has the power, notwithstanding the act of a State Legislature, to give to a railroad company the right to condemn so much of the soil of a State as is necessary for the construction of a bridge.

Mr. HOAR. But that is not done by the bill.

Mr. VEST. The charters of these railroad companies give them a general right to bridge navigable streams.

Mr. HOAR. That is my precise proposition. If Congress gives it to them, then it may be that it is beyond the power of the State Legislature; but if they have got no power except from the State Legislature which created one of these corporations and which can give or refuse to give powers to the other, how can they go on under the bill without New Jersey legislation to accomplish this result?

Mr. VEST. I have already stated that these charters contain the ordinary provisions for the passage of the railroad tracks over navigable streams, and the construction of bridges from each State, one from New York and one from New Jersey, with the right to condemn land for abutments or for piers upon the soil of those States. But even aside from that, if no such right existed under the charters, under the bill that we have now any court would imply the right absolutely to use so much land as was necessary.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it denied that the Arthur Kill is a navigable stream?

Mr. VEST. I think not.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he understands that this Kill von Kull is a part of the navigable waters of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Of course.

Mr. INGALLS. Then what has New Jersey got to do with it? Suppose that New Jersey passed a thousand acts of her Legislature forbidding a corporation from building a bridge over that stream, what effect would that have over an act of Congress declaring that a railroad corporation might construct a bridge over it? I do not understand the point made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Kansas——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Kansas to tell me how the act of Congress is going to give the authority to acquire soil that is inherent in the State of New Jersey itself?

Mr. INGALLS. They have got the right already under the act of incorporation from New Jersey and New York to go up to the line of those navigable waters.

Mr. SEWELL. That is just where the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course, if I am mistaken, that is the end of it.

Mr. SEWELL. There is a special provision on that subject.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from Missouri says, and it has been repeatedly stated in this debate, that existing corporate rights have been conferred both in New Jersey and in New York. If that is the case they have the right up to the navigable line of that water, already upon the soil. Then to assume that an act of the New Jersey Legislature forbidding the crossing of the navigable waters of the United States by a bridge could interfere with the power of Congress, which has been exercised a thousand times over all the navigable waters of this country, is imputing a power to New Jersey that never has been claimed for any other State in this Union.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to restate my proposition that it may be understood? The Senator from Kansas manifestly does not understand it.

It is conceded that the power exists in the United States to authorize the dealing with navigable water as it sees fit. It may authorize the extension of a wharf into Boston Harbor, and it may authorize the taking of land by eminent domain for that purpose, if that be a matter of general public interest. It may authorize the crossing of the Mississippi River. That is one thing it may do.

There is another thing which Congress may do. It may authorize the crossing of the entire continent for purposes of interstate commerce with a railroad and confer eminent domain. That is a separate thing which it may do. But it can not take away the power from New Jersey to control its corporations. If a corporation whose charter New Jersey created and whose charter it may alter or repeal, as I assume it can the charter of this corporation, undertakes to go into a business of interstate commerce, to build a railroad across Pennsylvania or anywhere else, New Jersey may stop it, and that is in the control of New Jersey, notwithstanding all the authority which Congress may have given it.

In the next place, if it be necessary to take New Jersey soil to come down to the line of navigable water on one side, and the bridge can not be built without that, the control of that proceeding is solely within the power of the New Jersey Legislature, unless the Congress of the United States, in addition to its license to cross or occupy or interfere with the waters of the navigable streams, have added the authority to come down to the bank, and have added the authority to exercise eminent domain under national power conferred upon it for that purpose.

That does not appear in this bill. We have simply said that a New Jersey corporation may cross this navigable water, and that is all. A great deal is necessary to put this thing out of the control of New Jersey. New Jersey may destroy this New Jersey corporation. It may say that it shall exist only on condition that it shall not exercise the power to interfere with this navigable stream; but in the absence of any such thing, unless New Jersey has conferred the power of eminent domain to put one end of this structure upon her soil, this bill, it seems to me, is nugatory. That is the proposition I make.

Mr. VEST. We have nothing to do with the powers of these corporations. Here are two corporations created under State law. One of the corporations is in New Jersey and the other is in New York. They come to us full and complete or incomplete as the State Legislatures have made them, and they simply ask from us the exercise of our jurisdiction, which is that to regulate commerce among the States. We say to them, you may go with your corporate power as the Legislature of your State has invested you and pass over a navigable stream of the United States. Now, that is all. We can not consider the question as to the powers of these corporations.

If I understand the Senator from Massachusetts he wants Congress to put in this bill a provision to condemn land in New Jersey. We have nothing to do with that. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that no State Legislature can by any sort of legislation mar or decrease in any iota the power given by the Constitution to Congress to regulate commerce. That involves the right to put a bridge over a navigable stream, and if New Jersey were to attempt by any legislation after we have passed this bill to say that these corporations should not have this land, the New York corporation especially in New Jersey, for the purpose of constructing the bridge, it would be as much a nullification as South Carolina or any other State has ever been charged with attempting. There is no question in regard to that matter. No Legislature would have a right to nullify an act of Congress in any such fashion.

As I said before, it is a complete answer to the Senator from Massachusetts for us to say from the Committee on Commerce that we have nothing to do with the power of these corporations. They come to us and say, "We exist, we have our powers, and we ask from you the exercise of the jurisdiction which you possess, and only that jurisdiction; that is, to say that we may construct a bridge over a navigable stream;" and when the United States Congress does that it does all that it has the power to do.

That is the whole of this question, sir. I hope the Senate will now take a vote upon the bill and determine it at once, as I presume the debate has developed every question which is necessary to a correct determination of the whole subject.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question we have been considering, so far as the law of this matter is concerned, is whether, as the bill provides, a corporation created under the laws of New Jersey, dependent upon the laws of that State for its very life and existence, can do anything forbidden by the public policy and the laws of that State?

There can be no objection about this proposition; and when the Senator from Missouri speaks of a corporation created in New York being authorized by Congress to exercise any power under its authority to regulate interstate commerce, he varies the proposition. That is true, but it is not true that a corporation, in defiance of the law that creates it and of the sovereign power to which it is amenable, may do anything.

The statement here is that the State of New Jersey has forbidden this creature of it to pursue a certain line of policy. That New Jersey corporation is completely subject to the laws of the State of New Jersey and can have no power conferred upon it by Congress in violation of the law that creates it and the law to which it is amenable.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to state right there that the State of New Jersey forbade the exercise of the right to bridge that stream without submitting the plans of the bridge to the action of the Legislature? It was intended just to protect the people navigating that stream from a low bridge; that was all; and New Jersey will grant these companies the power if they will only build a decent bridge.

Mr. CALL. The coporation is a creature of New Jersey law, and the law can not be violated by that corporate body which depends upon New Jersey law for its existence and for its powers.

I propose to vote for the bill; yet I wish to say that I think there ought not to be, unless it is absolutely necessary, any obstruction placed in a great water highway adjacent to a great commercial city like New York. It is immaterial whether the State of New Jersey or the State of New York or any other State has the principal interest in the commerce that is to be found upon that highway. The question with me is that it is immaterial whether it be a million or two million dollars that is necessary to make a single span across a highway that bears upon its bosom such a vast and stupendous traffic or a smaller amount; if it be practicable to do it, it ought to be done without any pier which may obstruct even in the smallest degree the navigation of that great highway.

We are deficient in information upon that subject, and I think this matter ought to go over until some information of a definite character is presented. If the two Senators from New Jersey who have spoken upon this subject are right, and a bridge without a pier and with a single span can be built for any reasonable cost, in my judgment it ought to be done, and I shall sustain a proposition to that effect.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST and others. I hope not.

Mr. MILLER and others. Let us vote.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote I withdraw the motion.

["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 9, after the words "Arthur Kill," it is proposed to insert the words "over Buckwheat Island;" and in section 2 to strike out all down to and including the words "low-water mark," in line 6, as follows:

That said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the sound at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than 200 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and said spans shall not be less than 32 feet above mean low-water mark.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That said bridge shall be constructed with a draw over the channel on the New Jersey, or westerly side of Buckwheat Island, of not less than 100 feet opening, and with a span of not less than 400 feet on the easterly side of said island; and said bridge shall not be less than 70 feet above high-water mark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to state that he was called from the Chamber, but is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I will announce for the last time the pair between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who was called out of the Chamber and who will be absent for a few moments. He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MAHONE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have agreed to pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and therefore withdraw my vote. He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform Senators that so many are paired that less than a quorum have voted, although more than a quorum are present in the Chamber.

Mr. MILLER. I suggest to the Chair that the announcement of the result be delayed for a few moments, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms go into the committee-rooms and ask Senators who are there to come in and vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. More than a quorum are present in the Senate Chamber, but many Senators present are paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not suppose anybody desires a roll-call on this subject. The negation is sufficiently strong on the side of those opposed to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the call be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the call for the yeas and nays be withdrawn. There being no objection, the call is withdrawn, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will offer one amendment to which I think the committee will agree. If I thought the committee would not agree to the amendment I should not delay the bill. Looking at the fourth section it reads as follows:

That the plan and location of said bridge, &c.

I desire to offer an amendment to that section by inserting after the words "and location" the words "height and span;" so as to read:

That the plan and location, height and span of said bridge, with a detailed map of the sound at the proposed site, &c.

And at the end of line 3, in the same section, after the words "shall be," I move to add the words:

First recommended by a board of engineer officers of the United States Army, not less than five in number, whose recommendation shall be—

Providing that their recommendation shall be submitted to the Secretary of War. Instead of leaving it, as you do now, to Major Gillespie to report, the amendment provides for a board of engineers, not less than five in number, who must examine into the location and the height and span. I suppose the committee will not object to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I think I shall have to object to the amendment. I do not feel authorized to speak for the committee, but I introduced the bill. This matter has been under consideration by the Corps of Engineers for two years——

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw his objection. This will only delay the matter for a short time, and really I think there is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Perhaps I do not understand it fully.

Several SENATORS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me explain to the Senate that the amendment proposes to do exactly what was done in regard to bridging the Detroit River and other streams. Instead of taking the opinion of a single engineer officer, I propose a board of engineers. They may meet within a week for that matter. They are to be appointed by the Secretary of War, to determine the question as to the plan and location of the bridge and the height and span of the bridge, taking into consideration the commerce, and to make a recommendation to the Secretary of War who shall approve the same before action is begun.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER. This is a very sudden movement, and it is not very fully understood; but if the Senator from Maryland thinks it is all right I do not know that I shall object. As the amendment is explained it entirely does away with the provision for the bridge being 32 feet above water; it entirely does away with the proposition of a draw of 200 feet in the clear on either side, and puts the whole thing absolutely, without any provision of Congress whatever as to the bridge, either as to the length of span or the height or length of the draw, not only out of the hands of Congress, but commits it to a board of Army engineers. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the board decide that the bridge shall be higher than 32 feet, and that should be the opinion of the board taking into consideration the commerce, I do not suppose the Senator from New York would complain, when the bill says it shall not be less than 32 feet.

Mr. MILLER. The Senate has never yet undertaken, in authorizing the building of a bridge, after having made provision in regard to the limitation of the width of span and height, &c., then to turn around in an addendum to the bill and say that the whole thing shall be referred to a board of engineers, who shall have absolute control of the plans and propositions connected with it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 1, after the words "and location," insert the words "height and span;" and at the end of line 3, after the words "shall be," add the words "first recommended by a board of engineer officers of the United States Army, not less than five in number, whose recommendation shall be"—

So as to read:

That the plan and location, height and span of said bridge, with a detailed map of the sound at the proposed site of the bridge and near thereto, exhibiting the depths and currents, shall be first recommended by a board of engineer officers of the United States Army, not less than five in number, whose recommendation shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, and until he approve the plan and location of said bridge it shall not be built.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that he had probably better say "to be appointed by the Secretary of War" than to be submitted to him.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There will be no objection to that modification.

Mr. BUTLER. Pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn. ["Let us vote!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. MCPHERSON. Let us finish the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. If we can vote I will withdraw the motion. ["Vote!" "Vote!"] I withdraw the motion for the present, and give notice that I shall renew it pretty quickly unless a vote is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCMILLAN. If this amendment is adopted it seems to me, with the very brief examination I have been able to give it, that it is entirely inconsistent and in conflict with the second section of the bill. There is no express repeal of the section, but it leaves the bill in a shape in which it seems to me it can not be executed. I have not charge of the bill, and therefore will say nothing further.

Mr. MILLER. I must protest against the adoption of this amendment. We have provided in the bill for a certain kind of a bridge. We have specified that it shall be a pivot draw of not less than 200 feet in the clear on each side, that the bridge shall be built not less than 32 feet above low water, and that so far as the location is concerned and the rest of the plans of the bridge all shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval before anything can be done.

Now there is a proposition made to put the whole thing in the hands of the Secretary of War, he to be guided by a board of Army engineers consisting of five, who shall decide upon the location, upon the length of span, upon the height of bridge, and upon every particular pertaining to it before anything can be done.

As the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. MCMILLAN] has suggested, this amendment is in absolute conflict with the second section and in fact with nearly all that precedes it in the bill. It is simply a part of the attempts which have been made to amend this bill and to destroy it, first, by authorizing the building of a tunnel and then by compelling the bridge to be 70 feet above high water. Failing in that, it is now proposed to entirely destroy the bill and simply pass a bill, if it amounts to anything, which says that a bridge may be built at some point across the Arthur Kill, of such dimensions, of such height above the water, and of such width of spans as the Secretary of War, guided by five Army engineers, may decide.

It was only a few moments ago when the opposers of this bill were arguing here that it was not safe to leave even the discretion which we had put into the bill with the Secretary of War and the Army engineers. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] argued strenuously against giving the Secretary of War even that discretion, and urged that we should absolutely locate it at some particular point on the stream, and that we should provide carefully in every particular. Now it is proposed to take out all the provisions guarding the bill and put it absolutely into the hands of the Secretary of War guided by a board of Army engineers. I protest that that kind of legislation has never been proposed in this body and has never been carried.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion to lay the amendment on the table was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, numbered 1 and 2; that it had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, and 6, and that it had agreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States."

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 21, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 20, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CARPENTERS, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy for pay of carpenters at the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PANAMA CANAL—PROGRESS IN 1885.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a special intelligence report by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROGERS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KELLEY, on Friday and Saturday next, to enable him to visit Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.

CORRECTION OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. STORM, unanimous consent was given for the reprinting of the bill (H. R. 8746) to allot lands of the Seneca Indians in New York with the following correction, being the insertion of words omitted by mistake: On page 5, section 8, line 6, after the word "Indians," insert the words "and said commissioners shall;" also, on page 6, section 9, line 2, after the word "them," insert the words "or made by Indians."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 91 be taken from the House Calendar and considered at this time. It is an act to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I do not make objection to the consideration of the bill. I understand that this is in the nature of a private bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is considerable doubt about such bills, as to whether they properly go to the House Calendar or to the Private Calendar. The Chair understands that this is a bill giving the consent of the United States to a private corporation obtaining the right of way through certain Indian lands.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but I desire to make some remarks on the bill if it is to be considered at this time.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] whether this is an act granting a right of way, or simply an act extending the time for the building of the road?

Mr. CULBERSON. Extending the time. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was misinformed as to the character of the bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Is there any land grant that will be affected by reason of this extension of time?

Mr. CULBERSON. None at all, sir. The reason why the extension is needed is that under the original act the Secretary of War was required to designate the point at which this company should cross the Arkansas River with its bridge, and he failed to make the designation in time to permit the completion of the road within the time prescribed by the original act.

Mr. BRUMM. The bill, I believe, is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir; there is a unanimous report of the committees, both in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. How long does it extend the time?

Mr. CULBERSON. One year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on that bill.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Maine to withdraw his demand for the regular order long enough for me to make a request for unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. REED assented.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MACKEREL FISHING.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up House bill No. 5538, which was made the special order for the 18th of May, but was, I believe, on motion of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, postponed until to-day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that that bill will not occupy more than an hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the bill demanded?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the bill should be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the period of five years from and after the passage of this act, no mackerel, other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year shall be imported into the United States.

SEC. 2. That section 4321 of the Revised Statutes is amended, for the period of five years aforesaid, so as to read before the last sentence as follows: "This license does not grant the right to fish for mackerel, other than for what is known as Spanish mackerel, between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of this year." Or, in lieu of the foregoing there shall be inserted so much of said period of time as may remain unexpired under this act.

SEC. 3. That the penalty for the violation or attempted violation of this act shall be forfeiture of license on the part of the vessel engaged in said violation, if a vessel of this country, and the forfeiture to the United States, according to law, of the mackerel imported or landed, or sought to be imported or landed.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with existing treaties.

SEC. 5. That all laws in conflict with this law are hereby repealed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been presented by the Committee on Ways and Means in response to numerous petitions referred to the committee, as well as urgent representations by gentlemen of the House who are well informed on this subject. The object of the bill is to prevent mackerel fishing when the fish are first moving to our shores and for the most part are spawning. Gentlemen are familiar with legislation of this kind relating to other species of fish, and the general nature of the measure will be apparent, perhaps, without much explanation from me.

It may be well to remark that the committee proposes two amendments, one of which arises from the lapse of time since the introduction of the bill. The bill as drawn proposes to embrace the present season as one during which mackerel caught in the early part of the season can not be landed. That period having substantially passed, the bill, of course, can only begin to operate with the coming year.

There is also one section, section 4, which has been inserted by mistake, and which at the proper time I will ask to have stricken out. That section provides—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with existing treaties.

Upon inquiry at the State Department we have learned that this provision is unnecessary verbiage.

Mr. Speaker, I would not consent to any extreme and permanent legislation upon a matter of this sort; but a conservative proposition like this, temporary in its duration, is, I think, only a reasonable response to the views and solicitations which have been presented to us. The bill can only operate for five years; and it will only preclude, so far as it may be effectual, the catching of mackerel during a period of three months of each year, mainly the spawning season, when, as is well known, so far as the salting of fish is concerned, they are ill-suited for that purpose.

There is considerable doubt among the authorities as to whether or not any appliances for catching fish that rove in the open sea can have an appreciable effect upon their quantity. I am less of opinion now than I was in the earlier stages of such investigation as I have been able to give to this matter that it is possible to practically exterminate opensea fish. But, as I before remarked, there is considerable difference of opinion on this subject, especially in view of modern appliances dealing with classes of fish that congregate closely in great schools and upon limited areas. By means of immense nets operated by steam fish are now taken, not as in olden times by hook and line, but as many as hundreds of barrels at a single haul.

But apart from that, a matter about which there is practically no dispute is the unwisdom of their being harassed in the early part of the year and during the spawning season by being pursued, as they sometimes are, by hundreds of vessels, plowing among them and dispersing them from our coast, driving them far out to sea, where it is difficult to get them, and of course much more expensive to dispose of them after they are caught. Especially is this realized in the warm season of the year—and the mackerel-fishing season proper is mainly from about the 1st of July to the 1st of November, running through the warm months of July and August—when the fish are taken at a point remote from shore, and when there must, of course, be more expensive arrangements made for preserving them until they can be properly handled.

Therefore, sir, the concurrent testimony being that, independent of the question of extinction, while the fish are coming into our shores and during this earlier portion of the season embracing at least a greater part of the spawning season, they should not be disturbed, and should not be harassed until fully upon our fishing grounds and fitted for consumption, I have come to the conclusion (without myself knowing by experience anything at all of this business, but after conferring with those who have experience and from reading the productions of those who are considered authorities upon the question) that the passage of a bill of this character is a reasonable and conservative step, and so far as food products are concerned will tend to cheapen the supply of food. I am all the more strengthened in my support of this measure because it seems to be in accord with the almost unanimous wish of the men who catch the fish and see the need of some regularity and system.

It may be well to remark that of the fleet we have engaged in this business, three hundred and fifty-eight vessels in 1885, carrying five thousand four hundred and twenty-five men, all but four of the vessels came from the States of Massachusetts and Maine. Of those four, one comes from Portsmouth, N. H., one from Connecticut, one from Pennsylvania, and one from New York. I believe the principal opposition will come from my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT], who I suppose represents that single vessel.

Mr. REAGAN. Will my friend from Arkansas be kind enough to state (because I have not examined the bill) in what waters the bill proposes to control fishing?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We do not specify any waters in the bill. We can not do that. The bill seeks to prevent the landing of mackerel from the 1st of March to the 1st of June, wherever they may be caught, upon the theory that if people can not land and sell them they will not catch them.

Mr. REAGAN. What I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas in this connection is if there is anything in the bill that applies to the waters within the marine league of the shore on our State coasts.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is nothing in the bill that affects the waters within the marine league, at least no thought of interference is entertained, nor is there anything that applies to the fish caught in the estuaries along our shores.

Mr. REAGAN. I asked the question because there was a bill referred to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of extending to citizens of each State the rights granted to citizens of any other State to fish for floating fish——

Mr. COLLINS. They reported adversely on that bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This has no connection with that bill.

Mr. REAGAN. That is what I understand, that the Committee on the Judiciary reported adversely as to the authority to do that. How then can authority be assumed to do it here?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But we do not touch that question; this has reference to deep-sea fish. We do not say, or I do not wish to say, that citizens of the United States shall not catch fish within the jurisdiction of the State.

Mr. REAGAN. But if you disregard the principles that the waters within the marine league belong to the States, and if this bill applies to such waters, then you do restrict the rights of the citizens of the State.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We do not touch that question at all; this applies to the waters beyond the marine league.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This has reference, as the gentleman will observe, only to the fishing for mackerel, which do not run up the streams or come into the estuaries. They are an open-sea deep-water fish, perhaps do not come within the marine league, or least of all during the season here embraced, and hence the point that the gentleman from Texas raises is perhaps not touched by this bill. But I will be glad to see any proper features that may be lacking added by the House.

Mr. REAGAN. But the gentleman from Arkansas must remember that the marine league extends a good way out from the estuaries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am aware of that, but I am stating the fact that these, being what are termed open-sea fish, do not come into the estuaries like shad and herring, and perhaps are not caught to any appreciable extent even within the marine league. Other gentlemen here can speak to that point better than I can.

Mr. COLLINS. And they do not catch them with a hook and line any more.

Mr. LORE. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether the Fish Commission of the United States have favored this bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will state in response to the gentleman from Delaware that the Fish Commission of the United States has not been asked specifically about the bill; though I have talked fully with the Commissioner and others of the service, and had some correspondence with them about the propositions involved; and I have here in my hand a very interesting letter from the specialist employed by Professor Baird to study and observe the habits, &c., of the mackerel. Captain Collins, a gentleman whom I am assured by Professor Baird is the best living authority on the subject, and his statements of facts strongly sustain this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas another question. In reading this bill it seems to me it does apply to waters which belong for the purpose of fishing to the States as well as the waters beyond the marine league or domain of the States.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman point out the provision of the bill to which he referred?

Mr. TUCKER. The second section of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, that I shall be glad to hear further upon; but I can not understand now how you can make such a construction.

Mr. TUCKER. I am asking only for information, not pretending to criticise the bill. The second section of the bill provides:

That section 4321 of the Revised Statutes is amended, for the period of five years aforesaid, so as to read before the last sentence as follows: "This license does not grant the right to fish for mackerel, other than for what is known as Spanish mackerel, between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of this year."

Now, what is the nature of this license to which reference is made?

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is simply for the purpose of giving notice to the fishermen directly in their licenses.

Mr. TUCKER. Does this license which the Government allows under this bill apply to waters which belong exclusively to the States?

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. It applies then only to the ocean, or to waters beyond the marine league?

Mr. REED, of Maine. It applies only to such waters as the United States has the right to issue a license for.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that this first provision of the bill is more indefinite than the other.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman point out——

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. There are a number of gentlemen here who are very anxious to hear what this private conversation is about.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been endeavoring to secure order upon the floor, and gentlemen will facilitate the transaction of the public business by assisting the Chair in that respect.

Mr. REAGAN. By permission of the gentleman from Arkansas I want to call his attention to the reading of the first section:

That for the period of five years from and after the passage of this act, no mackerel, other than what is known as the Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

There is nothing in this that would indicate that the bringing in of mackerel caught within the territory of the States may not be covered by this act.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is not intended to cover it, and has not that effect.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not think it will cover it, for I take it for granted that the section applies only to mackerel caught in waters beyond the boundary of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. It does not say so.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; it says "shall not be imported," and that implies that it is caught in foreign waters; and therefore I think the first section applies only to fish caught in foreign waters.

Mr. HEWITT. Fish caught by American vessels in the deep sea and brought into our ports would not be classed as an importation under our customs laws and regulations.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will now surrender the floor, and yield one-half hour to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to understand the rule which governs the disposition of time in this discussion. I do not know whether this bill is open for general discussion without limit of debate, or whether it is limited by the hour rule for the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule of the House a gentleman who obtains the floor in his own right has an hour, and the discussion continues until the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to call the previous question at the close of one hour.

Mr. HEWITT. I decline to have time yielded to me. I wish to take the floor in my own right. This is a much more important subject than it might be inferred to be from the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from New York can consume the half-hour which I yield him, and then take the floor in his own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas holds the floor.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to have the floor in my own right.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say to the House and to the gentleman from New York, that while I am deeply interested and my constituency is also deeply interested in this bill, I have not the slightest desire to limit him or any one else in debate.

But we all have to be governed in dealing with matters before the House by the situation of affairs as we find them. We can not cut these debates out of whole cloth. We have got to do as we can; and we could only get this question fairly before the House upon an understanding that we should not interfere with other business. Now if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has no objection to let the discussion go on, I do not care how much time is given. But under the circumstances, having only an hour, we desired to give the gentleman from New York one-half the time and take one-half ourselves, and then close up the discussion, having reference to the actual time there is for business before the House.

Mr. HEWITT. I do not propose to be dependent upon the grace of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] when I defend the rights and interests of my constituents. If the House chooses to close debate in an hour, I must do the best I can. But this is a subject which can not be properly discussed in an hour; and for myself, I claim either that the subject shall go over or that we shall have time to deal with it intelligently.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] does not desire to speak, I will make a few remarks and then call the previous question.

Mr. HEWITT. I want to be recognized in my own right; and I notified the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who understands it perfectly, that this discussion could not be ended in an hour. I do not think the subject can be properly discussed in an hour, and I wish ample time. If I were in condition to enter upon discussion to-day, as the gentleman from Maine knows I am not, I might in fifteen or twenty minutes state the case; but as it is, disabled by utter loss of sleep, I must take considerable time in reading authorities which otherwise I would state.

Mr. LORE. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether this is not a question of cheap food for a large portion of the people of this country?

Mr. HEWITT. It is certainly an important question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman from New York declines to take the time yielded to him I shall endeavor to state both sides of the question.

Mr. HEWITT. I simply ask the Chair to decide whether at any time in the course of this debate I will be able to take the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not state that, because the House may order the previous question. Unless the previous question is ordered, the gentleman from New York being a member of the committee and opposed to the bill, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to be recognized now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] yield the floor?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If I am permitted to resume the floor after the gentleman from New York has made his remarks I am willing to yield to him now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas, was it not understood he would call the previous question at the expiration of one hour if I would not antagonize this proposition with the Post-Office appropriation bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There was no absolute agreement. I desire, however, to call the previous question at the expiration of one hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood from the gentleman from Arkansas and from the gentleman from Maine that this matter would take only an hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I expressed an opinion as to what time it would take; that is all. I expressed a wish to call the previous question at the end of one hour, and I still have that wish strongly and I will enforce it if within my power, and if I can do so without rudeness to my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. BLOUNT. As there seems to be a misunderstanding about this, I think the gentleman had better withdraw the bill for the present and take it up to-morrow.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Very well. Every proposition is at a disadvantage in this House, and deservedly so, which looks like crowding anybody. The gentleman from New York states he is not in physical condition to go on with the debate, and for my part I do not want to press him to do it. If unanimous consent can be given that we shall go on with this bill and finish it to-morrow, I shall consent to that arrangement with great pleasure.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I consent to that.

Mr. COBB. I feel compelled to object to that arrangement.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then say next Saturday.

Mr. HAMMOND. In the absence of the chairman of the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests I beg to state that Saturday is specially assigned for the consideration of the bill as to free ships.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request which has been made. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is that objected to?

Mr. COBB. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine then asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered on Saturday.

Mr. COBB. I shall object to that also.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is it in order to move to postpone the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I move that the consideration of the bill be postponed till to-morrow.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas; and there were—ayes 106, noes 22.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, as to-morrow is private bill day, I make the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that there is no quorum, the Chair will designate the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BUCHANAN, to act as tellers.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the result of this vote, if decided in the affirmative, set aside the Private Calendar to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It does. If this bill is called up under a special order of the House naming to-morrow specifically, the Private Calendar will not be considered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7207) making appropriation to supply deficiency in amount required for expenditure to June 30, 1886, for examination and surveys required by acts of March 3, 1875, and June 19, 1878, to ascertain depth of water and width of channel at South Pass of Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. 570) for the relief of E. P. Thompson; and

A bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN (before the completion of the division). Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it is evident that a large majority of those present do not desire to have the private bills acted upon which we have reported, I withdraw the point as to no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point that no quorum has voted is withdrawn. The ayes have it, and the motion to postpone the further consideration of the pending bill until to-morrow is agreed to.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON BUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a resolution dated April 26, 1886, to fix a day for the consideration of business from the said committee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. General debate upon the bill was concluded at 5 o'clock yesterday. The Clerk will now read the first amendment.

Page 1, at the end of line 16, insert:

"And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building on Capitol Hill for use as a branch of the Washington city post-office, at a rate not exceeding $30 per month, until further action of Congress."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the propriety of this amendment may be briefly stated. Section 98 of the Postal Laws and Regulations (which is but a part of the Revised Statutes) is as follows:

That the Postmaster-General, when the public convenience requires it, may establish within any post-office delivery one or more branch offices for the receipt and delivery of mail matter and the sale of stamps and envelopes; and he shall prescribe the rules and regulations for the government thereof.

The Postmaster-General is allowed a gross fund for rent, light, fuel, &c., and but for a provision in the deficiency bill passed in 1874, which prohibited a contract for the rent of any building in the city of Washington until an appropriation had been made therefor, there would be no occasion for this provision here. No special appropriation having been made for this purpose, the Postmaster-General is unable to make a contract for a building; and the committee have therefore deemed it best to recommend concurrence in this amendment. For further justification of the amendment I ask to have printed in this connection the opinions of the Postmaster-General and of the Attorney-General in reference to the construction of the law.

The amendment was concurred in.

The following are the opinions referred to by Mr. BLOUNT:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I hand you herewith a copy of the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General in regard to the East Capitol station. This supplies the vague remembrance, which I could not give specific fixity to, of some statute which prohibited the renting of a building in the city of Washington except by special direction. It is in the deficiency bill of 1874.

The residue of the opinion is too clear for any question, as it seems to me. The opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, furnished July 1, 1885, to which reference was made, was, if I mistake not, based upon a prior decision of the Court of Claims, and in consequence of that decision there was enacted by the Congress in the act of March 3, 1885, authority to rent post-offices and buildings for post-office uses in general. That stands, of course, qualified by the clause in the deficiency bill of 1874, quoted in the inclosed opinion.

Very respectfully,

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. H. BLOUNT,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of date 10th instant, asking my opinion relative to the law in regard to the renting of buildings and rooms for the use of the Government in the District of Columbia.

You refer to me therewith the letter of Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, and of Hon. W. B. ALLISON, and Hon. JAMES B. BECK, giving their views of the state of the law as affecting the renting of a station for use as a branch post-office on East Capitol Hill.

The state of the law on which I gave an oral opinion some time since was, and still is, as follows:

The deficiency bill of 1874 enacts that "hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building in Washington, not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress."

The act of July 5, 1884, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, reads:

"For rent, light, and fuel, $480,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building on Capitol Hill for use as a branch of the Washington city post-office, at a rate not exceeding $30 per month."

The act of March 3, 1885, did not re-enact this provision, and makes no appropriations in terms for the rent of such branch office.

It reads: "For rent, light, and fuel, $490,000. That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for use for post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding five years," &c.

The opinion of the Attorney-General furnished to this Department July 1, 1885, upon the authority of the Postmaster-General to lease buildings for post-offices, advised this Department that the Postmaster-General could not, prior to the act of March 3, 1885, lease a building for a post-office anywhere for a longer term than the appropriation provided for the payment of the rent.

The act of March 3, 1885, makes no provision in terms for a renting of the branch office on East Capitol Hill.

There is nothing in the act of 1884 authorizing this particular building to be rented for a longer period than the appropriation from which it was to be paid, and, under the rule of the Attorney-General's opinion, the act of 1884 must be held as authorizing the renting of that branch office only for the year covered by that appropriation.

I find nothing in the subsequent acts which will warrant me in the view that a renewal of the lease was authorized, or that it was intended to be covered by the general appropriation for rent, light, and fuel of the act of March 3, 1885. The opinion of the Attorney-General makes it quite clear that the act of 1884 did not authorize a continuing contract. The act of 1874, above quoted, seems to my mind to preclude the Postmaster-General from incurring this expense in the absence of an appropriation in terms therefor.

The general authority to lease post-offices of the several classes therein mentioned in the act of March 3, 1885, does not affect or modify the act of 1874 prohibiting the renting of buildings in this city. That prohibition is still in full force, and it seems clear to me that the only safe rule is to keep within its terms, much as I would like to see my way clear to advise otherwise in this case.

It is with no little diffidence that I adhere to these views in view of the fact that eminent and learned gentlemen differ with them. But I am led to think that the Senators formed their conclusions without having before them the act of 1874, and without having their attention called to the legal aspects of the case presented by Attorney-General Garland's opinion.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. A. E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 20, after the word "cents," insert "forty thousand dollars of which may be used in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the establishment under existing law of the free-delivery system in cities where it is not now established."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, under the law the Postmaster-General may establish free-delivery offices wherever the gross receipts reach $20,000 or the population served thereby reaches 20,000. Appropriations have been provided for the service to the fullest extent allowed by law.

The Senate, however, inserted this provision, which does not extend the free-delivery system beyond the limit authorized by law at this time; and the only reason the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads could see for its insertion was that it had been found in a previous bill, and out of abundance of caution has been inserted here. It amounts to nothing; it is mere surplusage; and we thought, in order to get the question out of the way of the conferees and out of the way of the House, we would recommend concurrence.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the effect of that provision might not be that not more than $40,000 could be so used, and whether, in view of the circumstances of the cities that might take the free-delivery service under existing law, the $40,000 embraced in this proposition would not in all probability be applied to the extension of the free-delivery system to cities where it is not now in operation.

Mr. BLOUNT. This provision was in the last bill, and there was found no objection of that kind.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment of the Senate, it was concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

After the words in lines 46 and 47, "Inland transportation by steamboat routes, five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars," insert the following:

"The Postmaster-General is authorized, after the due advertisement, to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than 200 miles distant from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service; said contracts to be made with and performed by American built and registered steamships."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, although not able to be present continually, I have followed the debates on this question in the RECORD, and there remains perhaps little new or important to be said. The carrying of the mails in the United States, and between the United States and foreign countries, is, or ought to be, a business operation and nothing else. In the transmission of mail matter two methods are employed. In the one case, the Government advertises for bids and lets contracts to the lowest bidder for a specific service; that is, for carrying the mails to and from certain points—this and nothing more. If the contractor chooses to connect with that service the duties of a common carrier it is merely incidental; he may do so or not as he chooses. The other method is to employ the common carriers of the country to transport and distribute the mails, and by this method, to a large extent, the mails of the United States are transmitted and distributed. The first method, that of contracting for particular service, is known as the star-route service; the other is employed on all the railways of the country.

Common carriers are as much under obligation to perform service for the Government as for private parties. Lines of steamships upon the high seas are common carriers as much as railway lines. The oceans are covered with steamships and vessels of every sort plying between different countries as common carriers. The established steamship lines between Key West and Cuba are common carriers, as are those between New York and Brazil, or between San Francisco and China. The Government has the same right to employ these common carriers for the transmission of its mails that express companies or private parties have to employ them for the transmission of any matter which these common carriers are engaged in carrying.

It is upon this principle or by this method that we are carrying our mails across the ocean between the United States and foreign countries; and anything beyond fair compensation as common carriers to lines already established, for carrying the mail, is subsidy. And although gentlemen on the other side and others in favor of subsidies say this proposed increase is not intended as a subsidy but only fair compensation for carrying the mails, yet scarcely one has spoken three minutes without throwing off the disguise and conceding that the proposed appropriation is needed in order to maintain steamship lines and increase and extend our commerce with other countries, especially South American countries.

That constitutes a very different proposition from merely carrying the mails. For my part I desire to see the carrying of the mails not only throughout the United States, including coastwise steamers, but everywhere else entirely separated from the idea of maintaining commercial lines of transportation. It is true—I am bound to admit it—that in many cases, indeed generally, the Government in its contracts with coastwise and river steamers pays not for carrying the mails only but to maintain steamboat lines for travel and commercial purposes. That is what the Government really does, although it is all done under the guise of carrying the mails. This is a practice which I think should be discontinued. The Government should act upon business principles alone. The transmission of the mails should be with the Government a business operation solely. The Government should employ for this purpose all the agencies that commerce and trade provide for carrying the mails, and should employ them in precisely the same way as private parties employ them for purposes of transportation.

The Government does not ask railroad companies for bids and let the carrying of mails to the lowest bidder. That would be impracticable even if it were desirable. But the Government employs them as common carriers and provides what is deemed reasonable compensation. The contract plan is no more applicable to steamboats or steamship lines than it is to railway lines, and I desire to say here that the Postmaster-General is entitled, I think, to no small degree of credit for having reduced and cut off excessive allowances to a number of steamboat lines engaged in the coastwise trade; but the reform will not be complete until the contract system as applied to steamboats is abandoned and they are treated as common carriers, entitled only to fair compensation, like the railways, for the services they perform for the Government in carrying its mails; for when you go beyond this there are no limits or bounds except the discretion of Congress in making appropriations. For instance, if it is proposed to pay more than sea and inland postage, which the law now provides, and which is much more than the Postal Union has agreed is fair compensation for carrying the mails on the high seas, these additional payments being made for the purpose of maintaining commercial lines, where are we to stop? Let us see. One party says the trade with South America is important. I agree to that; no doubt it is important.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am obliged to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. Chairman, suppose we undertake to establish and maintain lines of steamships for commercial purposes. Where will that principle lead us? We can go into the markets of South America with our products only when we can place them there as cheaply as any other country. We can go there with our manufactured products only when we can sell them as cheaply as any other country. In other words, when manufactured commodities can be bought as cheaply in this country as in England, then the buyers from South America will come here or we can go there with our goods, not otherwise.

I am obliged to admit the logic of things; and I say to my protection friends that we can not consistently with one hand by protective tariff laws make more costly, as we we do, the production of commodities in this country, and with the other hand try to cheapen them for foreign markets by offering bounties to steamship lines to carry them at reduced rates.

Why that is like pouring water into a sieve. It is wasting with one hand what we try to save with the other. There is no question about that; there is no escaping that conclusion.

Suppose, for instance, the price of commodities in Boston and New York was 20 per cent. higher than in England, and it cost 20 per cent. to transport them to the markets of South America. Suppose then we maintain lines of steamers to transport these commodities for nothing. Then we would be upon an equality when we got to Brazil. That would be in effect the same thing as taxing the whole people to pay 20 per cent. of the cost of producing these commodities, and then let them pay their own way to market. Now, it is quite apparent that the larger our trade carried on under these conditions the greater would be our loss.

But, Mr. Chairman, that would not be the case respecting things in the production of which we have a natural or acquired advantage in this country over other countries; but in that case we can go into other markets without subsidies. Trade and commerce will go there under such conditions without help.

There is, however, let me say, one condition in which perhaps it would be proper for any government to offer bounties or lend help in some form, and that would be where it was desirable to open new communications and establish commercial relations with countries promising new markets for what we can supply as cheaply as any other country, but which at the outset might be attended with loss which private interests would be loath to sustain. If in such a case there was a sufficient public interest to warrant public aid, I see no impropriety in extending such public aid for a limited time, provided also there was a reasonable certainty that when once well established such trade would be self-supporting and remunerative. On this principle the Government lent its aid to the construction of the Pacific Railroad. It might be the same in establishing or starting a steamship line, but let it be done under no disguises, but as a subsidy, intended to afford temporary aid to an enterprise that would be of national importance and in the end prove a benefit to the country generally.

But that is not this case at all. This is one where common carriers are already on the seas engaged in commercial operations. The Senate amendment would add no new common carriers and would add no new facilities for trade.

It is not claimed that any of these lines are about to be abandoned, or that there is any such necessity or importance as I have named, but merely that it would be such compensation as would enable the owners of these steamship lines to pay larger dividends or make larger profits, which otherwise perhaps they could not. But I say that to attempt to wrest trade from Great Britain and secure it to this country by subsidizing steamship lines in order to place us on an equal footing in foreign markets with our products must necessarily fail; for we can only maintain ourselves permanently in foreign markets with those things which we can produce more cheaply than other countries produce them. I am opposed, therefore, to the amendment of the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment was this: From Tampa to Key West is inland service, and can be provided for under existing laws, under what is known as the steamboat service. From Key West to Havana, Cuba, about 95 miles, is foreign service, and must be provided for under the Postal Union regulations, and can be paid only sea and inland postage.

The object was to unite the two in one contract; so the Postmaster-General, instead of making two contracts, need only make one. There was disagreement among certain gentlemen who are opposed to subsidies of any kind, some believing this was a concession. I did not so regard it. I do not think it would amount to a dollar one way or the other to the Government. I am authorized to say, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, whether in or out, he will be amply provided to pay for such service as is desirable for the speediest and most frequent service.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in the amendment, and as I believe there is no struggle at this point I therefore ask for a vote.

The Senate amendment was disagreed to.

The fourth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "$8,000" and insert "$88,000;" so it will read:
"Railway post-office car service, $1,888,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the smallest length of post-office car which the law allows is 40 feet. Under preceding administrations there was a rule allowing for less length of post-office car space. The present Postmaster-General and Attorney-General have held that rule is wrong, and the former has withdrawn the service below 40 feet. The service has been reduced $80,000 by reason of that opinion. The Senate passed a bill providing for less space of post-office car service and sent it to this House, which never yet has acted upon it. I suppose in the view of the possibility of the passage of such a measure the Senate inserted this increase of appropriation.

The present Postmaster-General is of the opinion that the money provided in the bill to which this is an addition is sufficient, and therefore the committee recommend non-concurrence. And I believe that is the unanimous opinion of the committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, there is a proposition now before this House, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to render more explicit the law in relation to payment for post-office car space. That law until within the last twelve months has been uniformly construed to embrace not only post-office cars, but apartments in cars, a proposition which is manifestly just, because, if a whole car 40 feet long is paid for at so much, certainly one-half of a car, say 20 feet in length, ought to be paid for at something like one-half the same sum per mile.

Such has been the construction of the Department until very recently, when all former rulings have been reversed, and a saving has been made of the paltry sum of $80,000 out of $1,888,000. Now there is a proposition before the House, which has passed the Senate, for the purpose of making the law so plain as to do justice to all classes of our roads carrying the mails, and, as stated, it involves only the expenditure of $80,000. Such a proposition, one so reasonable, it would seem is likely to commend itself to the judgment of the House and be enacted into a law. If it does not become a law, and the Postmaster-General adheres to his present position, there will be only a surplus of $80,000. If it becomes a law, and this amendment is not concurred in, there will be a deficiency of $80,000.

I therefore think, and would submit to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that instead of recommending non-concurrence, this Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads should recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have hoped and still hope that we shall have but little controversy at this point. I think it but fair, however, to the Post-Office Department to correct a statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, who has said that it will require only $80,000 to provide postal cars where necessary; I mean to say where the measurement is less than 40 feet.

The gentleman was misled into making this statement doubtless in this way: There are very few roads where the car service was less than 40 feet. Such cases have been exceptional. If provision was made for roads in similar condition to those which had this service, it would cost the Government more than $1,000,000; so that instead of being a deficiency of $80,000 it amounts to $1,000,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would ask the gentleman from Georgia if this bill as it came to the House makes a difference or commits the Government to more than $80,000? I am talking now exclusively of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. This bill does not commit the Government to anything at all, for if you pass the $80,000 the Postmaster-General can not use it; and that would be the answer to the gentleman's proposition.

But I would like to know if it did, upon what principle the House could agree to have the facilities extended to a dozen roads in this country, and say to all the balance of the country you can not get similar privileges. Let us, if we are to make any change at all, do it by general legislative provisions based upon experience.

One other word. The gentleman has stated that it has been the uniform ruling of the Post-Office Department, prior to the present administration, that less than cars of 40 feet might be allowed. I wish to say in response to the suggestion that there never has been any opinion of any Postmaster-General in that respect.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would ask if that has not been the practice?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; and there are many practices that need correction, and this is one of them. I hope we shall continue the principle of legislation which has been inaugurated in this House, that wherever there is a violation of law, no matter by whom, we shall stay the hand of the violator. Sir, this practice has come up on an order sometimes of a Second Assistant Postmaster-General or a Superintendent of Railway Transportation without any knowledge on the part of the Postmaster-General or any Cabinet officer, so far as the policy is concerned; and I say that thorough search has been made for it without effect; and in the light of these facts it is not to be wondered at that gentlemen upon both sides of this House who have examined the statute concur in this as a proper provision of law. I say, then, it is no wonder we have not disagreed to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in charge of this bill in his remarks just made either by direction or indirection meant to charge corruption on the past administration of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me I will answer him. I was referring to the declaration on the part of the gentleman from South Carolina that the Department had sanctioned this practice.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no question of that. The judgment of the present administration of the Post-Office Department in the construction of the law is simply the utterance of the Assistant Attorney-General of that Department. So far as the gentleman's proposition is concerned, it is a question of construction of the law. I do not think that it has been or can be charged as a corrupt practice on the part of the Department.

There is on the Calendar of this House, reported from the Senate, a bill giving the Postmaster-General authority to make contracts for cars of less than the number of feet as construed by the present administration of the Post-Office; and that will allow the usual sums to be appropriated for this purpose. I want to say with the chairman of the committee that I concur in the judgment of our committee in asking non-concurrence on the part of this House with the proposition contained in the bill as amended in the Senate.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads will have the first and second days of the coming month for the consideration of bills reported from that committee. I have no doubt that the very proposition contained in this amendment of $80,000 for these additional facilities on cars of less than 40 feet in length will be considered at that time. Should it pass, the House can then either consider the question of appropriation to carry out that law, or if this bill has not been agreed upon between the two Houses then the question can come there. I think the House will act wisely in following the recommendation of the committee in a non-concurrence of this amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand the former ruling or practice of the Department has been simply this: that while the law provided that $25 should be paid for cars 40 feet long, in cases where cars of that dimension were not necessary they have paid for smaller cars pro rata; that if a car not more than 20 feet was necessary to carry the mails over the same roads, then the Department has paid $12.50. And it seems to me that that practice was a saving rather than an expense to the Government.

The present Postmaster-General, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, has ruled that there was no warrant in law for giving this pro rata, and has discontinued the payment. Now, as has been stated, there is a bill before this House to pay these companies up to the time they had notice of this decision by the Department; and there is also another bill which comes down from the Senate to give authority of law so that the present Postmaster-General shall see his way clear if he desires to do so to continue the old practice.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that certain roads have had certain privileges in this way. I do not understand this is a privilege to railroad corporations. I understand it is a privilege to the people to have their mails carried, and it is a privilege to the Government if they can have them carried in a car 20 feet long at $12.50 to do so, rather than have them carried in a car 40 feet long at $25.

Mr. DIBBLE. I feel very much assured at what has been said in the way of promise of the early consideration of the measure proposed to make clear a section of the Revised Statutes which is not now absolutely explicit. But in the judgment of a good many who have been accustomed to construe laws this section is now considerad as being ample for furnishing the authority to contract for less than 40 feet, because the expression is, "at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length;" thus fixing the rate. And under that hitherto it has been the practice to adopt that rate, and to give pro rata for cars under 40 feet in length.

A different construction has been adopted by the present administration. Either construction might well be adopted, and it is well to have an act to settle the matter beyond a peradventure—an act whose equity and reasonableness will commend it to this House. As that act will come before this House in a separate measure I have no desire to press my motion for concurrence.

Mr. BLOUNT. With the view of showing the opinion of the Department with reference to this matter I shall ask leave to print the opinions of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the Assistant Attorney-General. These gentlemen claim that there is a question of construction. I wish to say that when the bill was passed the Senate had a limitation of 40-foot cars; the House reduced it below that; the Senate rejected the amendment of the House and the bill finally passed in this form.

The opinions referred to by Mr. BLOUNT are as follows:

[Letter of Second Assistant Postmaster-General to the Postmaster-General.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 21, 1885.

SIR: In compliance with your request for information as to the amounts heretofore allowed for railway post-office cars, or apartments less than 40 feet, I beg to submit the accompanying tabular statement, prepared from records in the railway adjustment division, which exhibits in detail the amounts paid certain railroad companies for such apartment cars since the passage of the act of 1873 fixing the compensation of railroads for the transportation of the mails, and up to the date such payments were discontinued.

The preparation of this statement has been attended with considerable difficulty and many careful and tedious calculations. It was necessary, in the first place, to examine the weight returns of the various weighings on almost all of the sixteen hundred railroad routes in operation, in order to ascertain definitely on what routes allowances had at any time been made during this long period for post-office cars less than 40 feet in length. This done, and the routes upon which such allowances had been made separated from the files, it became necessary in each case to compare the several weight returns with the orders making the allowances, and by calculations apportion the proper sums for weight and for regular railway post-offices, and for apartments less than 40 feet, in the manner shown in the tabular statement.

Prior to the 1st of July, 1879, there was no separate appropriation for railway post-office cars, as at present, the cost for that branch of the service being included with the cost for transportation. The act making the appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, made the first separate appropriation for railway post-office cars, and required that thereafter separate estimates be made for transportation and for railway post-office cars. Orders for payments to railroad companies were, prior to the above date, at the rate of so much per annum, without specifying what part was for postal cars and what part for weight of mails. While it is believed that the amount set down in the statement as expended for the several items, before the accounts were kept separate, are correct, it is proper to state that they are the result of calculations arrived at by placing to the weight of mails and regular railway post-office cars what would be the legal allowances therefor, and counting the remainder of the expenditure as for apartments less than 40 feet. The railroad route-books were for a long time kept by the different corresponding clerks in charge of star routes, and it is probably owing to this fact that a want of uniformity is often manifest in the wording of the orders and in the manner of stating the allowances.

It is worthy of notice that the allowances for apartments were much more common some years ago than in more recent years, and that the practice began immediately after the act of 1873 went into effect. The preparation of the statement has disclosed that, in many cases, the 10 per cent. reduction authorized by the act of 1876 was applied to allowances for apartments, the practice not being uniform in this respect, while it has always been held that the reduction does not apply to allowances for regular railway post-office cars.

No uniform rate per mile for apartments seems to have been observed. In some cases the rate was $10 per mile without regard to the length of the apartments; in others, 62½ cents per foot was allowed, the rate per foot for a 40-foot car at $25 per mile. When the apartments were run on a line in connection with full regular railway post-office cars, they were known as "adjuncts," and were paid for at the rate per foot of the regular cars. For example, if the apartment was run as an "adjunct" to a 40-foot car, the rate allowed for the apartment would be 62½ cents per foot; if run in connection with a 45-foot car, 66⅔ cents per foot; and 80 cents per foot if run in connection with a 50-foot car, and so on.

From the best evidence attainable it seems to have been an understanding in the Department that allowances could be made for apartments less than 40 feet where there was a second daily line, and this interpretation seems to have commenced with the inauguration of the present method of fixing the compensation of railroads. In the great majority of cases where such allowances were made there were two daily lines of apartments, though there are some instances of such allowances where there was only a single daily line. It appears that the Department experienced, in many cases, considerable difficulty in inducing the railroad companies to provide equipment for a second daily line of apartment cars unless extra allowance was granted. No difference could be made on account of pay for weight, whether the same was carried on a single daily line or two or more daily lines. Thus, a road carrying 3,000 pounds per day, and making one trip per day, and furnishing one line of apartments would receive as much pay as a road carrying the same weight, but making two trips per day and incurring the expense of equipping and maintaining two lines of apartment cars. The practice seems to have grown up in this way, and has of late years been confined almost exclusively to the Eastern States, on lines where there is a frequent service and many post-offices requiring a greater proportion of space for distribution as compared with the weight of mails carried.

One column in the statement shows what officer signed the formal order making the allowances; but in some cases it is known that pay for apartments was agreed upon by the division superintendents of the railway mail service, who made the necessary arrangements without previous specific authority from the Department, and afterward reported their action, when a formal order in conformity therewith was passed. It was generally customary, when it was deemed advisable to establish a line of railway post-office cars for which pay was to be allowed, for the Second Assistant to authorize the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service by letter to take the necessary steps to that end, and no formal order was made until the line was put in operation and reported to the Department. By my direction the practice has recently been changed. Now, the first step in establishing a line of railway post-office cars is to pass a formal order authorizing such establishment, leaving the date of the commencement of the service and pay to be determined by a subsequent order.

This order states the exact length, inside measurement, of the cars authorized, and goes upon the appropriate route-book. Notification is then sent to the General Superintendent that such a line of cars has been authorized, and requesting him to take the necessary steps to put the line into operation and report the date of the commencement of the service. When this report is received, giving the date, another order is made fixing the pay, which also goes upon the route-books. Thus a clear history of the establishment of each line is placed upon the records of this Department, which will leave no doubt in the future as to what was authorized and by whose authority.

It will be seen from the statement that the aggregate amount paid for apartments from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1885, is $979,959.67.

Payments for apartments have recently been discontinued, amounting to $80,161.73 per annum.

Very respectfully,

A. LEO KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

[Copy of opinion of Assistant Attorney-General.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 25, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have considered the question of "apartment service," so called, upon which you request my opinion, and to advise you of my views thereon.

Sections 4002, 4003, 4004, 4005 of the Revised Statutes read as follows:

"SEC. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned.

"First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed, and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment, properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route-agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

"Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct." (P. L. and R., sec. 629.)

"SEC. 4003. In case any railroad company now furnishing railway post-office cars shall refuse to provide such cars, such company shall not be entitled to any increase of compensation under the provisions of the next section." (P. L. and R., sec. 630.)

"SEC. 4004. Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars, and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 foot cars.

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General may use such portion of the postal car service appropriation as may be spared from it to supply any deficiency that may arise from insufficient appropriations in the item for railway transportation." (Act of March 3, 1879, sec. 1, 20 Stat., page 357; P. L. and R., sec. 631.)

"SEC. 4005. All cars or parts of cars used for the railway mail service shall be of such a style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner, as shall be required by the Postmaster-General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, and lighted by and at the expense of the railroad companies." (Act of March 3, 1879, sec. 4, 20 Stat. L., p. 358; P. L. and R., sec. 632.)

The question you desired to be advised upon is this: Can a railway company, under the above quoted statutes, lawfully be allowed any compensation for furnishing an apartment in a car, instead of a railway post-office car devoted entirely to that use, in addition to the pay by weight provided for by section 4002; or is the company limited simply to the compensation by weight per mile when it furnishes not a full railway postal car, but simply an apartment in a car devoted in part to other uses?

I think the term "railway post-office car" used in the sections above quoted means a full "railway post-office car," devoted entirely to that use and 40 feet in length or upward, and that a company which furnishes merely an "apartment in a car" is entitled only to the pay by weight per mile specified in the second clause of section 4002 Revised Statutes.

Long before the act of March 3, 1879, the full railway post-office car was in use. The law recognized two kinds of post-office cars on railways, as it seems clear to me, namely, apartments in cars used in part for the carrying of the mails, such as are mentioned in section 4002, in part for express or baggage or for other uses, and the full railway post-office car.

The full railway postal car was put on as early as 1864. (See History of Railway Mail Service, page 154.)

It appears historically that the railway companies made some threats of refusing to furnish this kind of cars (see History of Railway Mail Service, page 183, also report of committee, page 50) about January, 1873, and as a result of their threats the act was passed on March 3, 1873, which is now R. S. 4004, and which provided that if any company which was then furnishing railway post-office cars should refuse to provide such cars, such company should not be entitled to any increase of compensation under the provisions of the next section (4004). This section (4004) is as follows: "Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars, and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 foot cars."

This authorizes additional payment for what? For 40, 45, 50, and 55 to 60 foot cars. The price in each case has a maximum limit. But this additional compensation is not pro rata as to cars less than 40 feet, nor to cars in which a part only of the car, and less than 40 feet, is made into an apartment for mail service.

All companies must furnish apartments properly lighted and warmed for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails, whether daily trips each way are made or not. The additional compensation is only allowable when the line comprises daily trips each way, and when railway postal cars, at least 40 feet in length, are furnished. Should cars or apartments less than 40 feet in length, or less trips than daily each way be made, no additional compensation can be made.

This view seems very clear to me in view of the fact that when this act was passed the Senate expressly refused to adopt a system of compensation that would give additional pay for apartments of parts of cars.

In the bill which passed the House in 1873, making appropriations for the Post-Office Department, was contained the following proviso:

"Provided, further, That additional pay may be allowed at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for every line of railway post-office cars of sufficient and suitable size, fixtures, and furniture, properly lighted and warmed, provided for railway post-office clerks to accompany and distribute the mails, and run once a day each way upon such trains as may be satisfactory to the Post-Office Department."

This proviso would have given them additional pay for a railway post-office in a car of suitable size for the service required on the line on which it was run. But this proviso was stricken out, and in lieu of it, the provisions were inserted which now constitute sections 4003, 4004, and 4005, Revised Statutes, above quoted.

Since that time the Department has, until recently, and then only in exceptional cases, as I am informed by the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, construed the law as allowing no additional payment for apartment service, even where the apartments were equipped for and used as a railway post-office. The railways of the country have very generally accepted such construction as being in accordance with the true intent of the law.

Thus the intent of Congress appears from the history of the legislation, as I think, from the action of Congress above referred to in rejecting the measure that would in terms have warranted the payment for "apartment service," and from contemporaneous construction, both by the Department and by the great mass of the railway companies, no less than by the subsequent action of Congress in making appropriations upon estimates that excluded from calculation the payment to railway companies for such "apartment service."

I think, in view of the terms of the act and the considerations above stated, that additional pay provided in section 4004 can not be allowed in cases where only apartments in cars less than 40 feet in length are furnished.

That subsequent legislation was framed on this construction of the statute is further evidenced by the proviso of the act of June 11, 1880, which reads: "Provided, that in case any railroad company fail or refuse to provide railway post-office cars when required by the Post-Office Department, said company shall have its pay reduced 10 per cent. on the rates fixed in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of July 12, 1876," &c., * * * and as further amended by the act of June 17, 1878, &c. (21 Stat. L., 178.)

The appropriation for 1881-'82 was as follows: "For railway post-office car service, $1,426,000. And hereafter, when any railroad company fail or refuse to provide railway post-office cars when required by the Post-Office Department, or shall fail or refuse to provide suitable safety heaters and safety lamps therefor, with such number of saws and axes to each car, for use in case of accident, as may be required by the Post-Office Department, said company shall have its pay reduced 10 per cent, on the rates fixed in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, as amended," &c.

This legislation, and the fact that the appropriations for each year have been based upon estimates which exclude payment for "apartment" car service, leave no doubt that the understanding of Congress and the railway companies of the country generally is in accord with my construction of these statutes.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. A. LEO. KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Letter of Second Assistant Postmaster-General, transmitting tabular statement, &c.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I herewith send you the accompanying tabulated statement, showing in detail the sums of money paid to the various railroads for apartment-car service from July 1, 1873, to December 15, 1885, and which pay, as I have already informed you, was by a recent decision of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department held to be not warranted by law, which opinion was subsequently submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States and orally approved of by him. The table also exhibits in detail the number of routes, the termini, locality, and the amount and character of the service so performed, and the length of the cars so paid for.

I also transmit herewith a copy of my letter of the 21st of December, 1885, to the Postmaster-General, explanatory of the matter [Exhibit F], and a copy of the opinion of Hon. Edwin E. Bryant, Assistant Attorney-General, above referred to. [Exhibit G.]

Very respectfully,

A. LEO KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

The question being taken on the amendment of the Senate, it was not concurred in.

The Clerk read the fifth amendment of the Senate, as follows:

On page 4, line 68, strike out "$251,725.82" and insert "$291,000;" so that it will read:

"Necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $291,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, for several years there has been an appropriation for special facilities, which has been always understood to be for the purpose of increasing the speed of mails along the Atlantic coast. It has been especially beneficial to merchants in Boston and New York in giving quicker and more frequent trips to Havana. It has also been of advantage to the Southern section of the country in two ways: Without it the mails would have to go to New York and then to Cuba; with it they would go direct to Tampa and to Cuba. In addition to that, along in that section of country the local mails were distributed more rapidly. Whether this system was wise or not it has been adopted for many years, and has been agreed to in effect by the two Houses at this session by the appropriation for special facilities herein contained. It appears that the Senate thought, and I have no doubt correctly thought, that a quicker trip could be given by means of a special fund for some point between Jacksonville and the western coast of Florida. They have estimated it at $40,000. It is evident that the estimate must be conjectural. The Department do not think that more than one-half this sum will be needed; but being unable until the effort is made to contract to determine what it may be, they said if it only took half that sum the remainder could be left in the Treasury, as it could not be appropriated to any other purpose. With that understanding the committee have unanimously recommended concurrence in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I beg pardon of the Chair. The committee have instructed me to recommend this addition to the amendment: "To be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in the Senate amendment, insert "to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this to the House in all frankness, there is no concealment on the part of the Department about this matter; there is no purpose in the proposition except this: The debates in the Senate looked to one line of railroad. Now there are three lines from Jacksonville to the west coast of Florida, and the idea is simply to make it quite clear that the Postmaster-General may use this appropriation on any one of those three lines. That is the sole object of the amendment, and if any gentleman is apprehensive of anything about it I shall ask to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee to withdraw the amendment, for this reason: There is nothing in the section now which designates any particular line. The whole appropriation is "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines."

The Postmaster-General has discretion now as to what line he shall employ it on. But if these words are added it will put the expenditure of the whole appropriation in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It is equivalent to saying "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, provided the Postmaster-General deems them necessary and proper." That is throwing the entire responsibility upon the Postmaster-General instead of the House assuming its own proper responsibility. For these reasons I ask the chairman to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I find some objection to the withdrawal of the amendment; and as it is unanimously reported from the committee and as what I have stated with reference to the use of the fund is by authority, I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the Senate amendment was agreed to—ayes 92, noes 5.

The Senate amendment as amended was then concurred in.

The Clerk read the next Senate amendment, as follows:

(6) For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil; the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies; China and Japan, $800,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with the owners of such American steamships, for a term of not less than three years nor more than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points, in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth. And if he shall be unable to make such contracts for any of such respective services, he shall, so far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places, respectively, in the best and most expeditious manner practicable, in American vessels, and for a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the rate aforementioned.

The Postmaster-General, if in his judgment it be practicable, shall contract for a semi-monthly mail service between the ports of New York and New Orleans, alternately, and the port of Rio de Janeiro, under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it would be superfluous for me to say anything in the way of argument at this time in reference to this amendment. The committee is divided upon the question, but the majority of the committee recommend non-concurrence. My object at present is to move that the committee rise to limit debate upon this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will allow the debate to go on for a little while. I do not think it will occupy much time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to be very liberal about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that there has been no debate on this proposition under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thought I had just made a speech, Mr. Chairman; if not, I have got to make one. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. I think we can come to an understanding about it. How long are you willing that the debate shall continue?

Mr. BLOUNT. We shall have debate on other amendments, and I think that two hours is a reasonable time.

Mr. BURROWS. Say that the debate upon this provision and amendments shall close at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLOUNT. I agree to that, Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose it is understood that the time will be divided equally?

Mr. BLOUNT. I so understand it, unless some gentleman objects.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that some one be designated to have charge of the time on the other side of the House and some one on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless it is objected to, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT, as having control of the time on one side and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS, on the other.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I supposed that this debate was to proceed under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. RYAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, if that be so, it seems to me that the proper way is for the Chair to recognize each side alternately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have taken that course but for the request which came from that side of the House, that there should be a division of the time agreed upon and that certain gentlemen should control the time on either side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that it is a very difficult task which the Chair is putting upon me, and I trust I shall be relieved from it and that the Chair will control the time.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment adding the proviso which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not exceeding $400,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended in payment of existing American steamship lines for the transportation of foreign mails according to the schedules heretofore in force; and that so much of the balance as may be required shall be expended in increasing the frequency of the postal service of such steamship lines and in the establishment of postal service by American built and registered steamships between the United States and such ports of the foreign countries herein named, not now connected with the United States by American steamship lines, as the Postmaster-General may select, including Buenos Ayres and Montevideo.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, the argument upon this amendment of the Senate has proceeded upon the theory that $800,000 is to be distributed among the existing steamship lines carrying the foreign mails. The most cursory examination of this amendment will disclose that this theory is clearly and positively without foundation. The Senate amendment proposes no such thing, but simply declares that the Postmaster-General shall have $800,000 at his disposal to provide for the transportation of the foreign mails instead of paying for such transportation the sea and inland postage as now provided by law. And how shall he use this $800,000? He shall advertise for bids for carrying this foreign mail, shall let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, and shall make no contract at a rate exceeding 50 cents a mile. This $800,000 is placed at his disposal to be used for that purpose, just as you place sixteen and a half millions at his disposal for the transportation of the mails on railroads, five and a half millions for the star-route service, and half a million for the coastwise and inland steamboat service, to be expended upon contracts let to the lowest bidder. This is all there is of the proposition; and all this talk about paying the Pacific Mail Steamship Company $350,000, and the Brazilian line so many thousand dollars, and some other line so many thousand dollars, is indulged in simply to alarm the members of this House.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. But it is said that if upon a given route there are two lines and the Postmaster-General lets the contract to the line which puts in the lowest bid the other line will be driven from the service. That is not so; for there is another provision of the amendment which authorizes the Postmaster-General to expedite the service and to contract also with the other line sailing on another day.

It is also said that where there is but one line there will be no competition, and that one line will simply put in a bid at the rate of 50 cents a mile, so that we might as well estimate the entire cost of the service at that rate.

But gentlemen forget that the Postmaster-General has the right to decline all bids; and if after advertising for carrying the foreign mails upon American steamships he finds the bids are too high, he can refuse to accept any bid whatever. The last provision of this amendment is put in for the very purpose of meeting that condition of things.

Why, sir, in advertising for the star-route service the Postmaster-General reserves the right to reject all bids, and he does so frequently. So he may decline the bids of all these lines—the Pacific Mail, the Brazilian line, the Red D line, &c. And then, what?

And if he shall be unable to make such contracts for any of such respective services, he shall, so far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places, respectively, in the best and most expeditious manner practicable, in American vessels, and for a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the rate aforementioned.

So he may decline to receive all bids; and then he has $800,000 at his disposal to be used in providing for the foreign mail service. There is nothing else in this provision.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. There is not much of a "steal" in it after all.

Mr. BURROWS. That is all there is of it. We appropriate $900,000 for the messenger service, and the Postmaster-General distributes it for this service. We propose to appropriate in this bill $800,000 for the foreign service, and the Postmaster-General may use it in making contracts at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a mile.

One thing further. My amendment proposes that of this $800,000,

$400,000 shall be used for existing lines, and the other $400,000 in extending the service of existing lines and putting on new ones. As I showed the other day, we have no connection with any country in South America except Venezuela and the Empire of Brazil. With all the other countries of South America we have practically no communication. Under this amendment $400,000 can be used by the Postmaster-General in extending the service and establishing new lines. Under this authority see how readily the Postmaster-General can connect the ports on the Gulf of Mexico with Rio Janeiro and other South American ports. Under this provision the Postmaster-General may expend $400,000 in contracts with lines running from Mobile, from Galveston, from New Orleans, connecting with the Brazilian and Red D lines from South America, thus giving to the Gulf States a semi-monthly service to the great countries of South America.

Mr. CANNON. I notice by this provision in the bill the Postmaster-General "is authorized to make," &c. Now, in view of the previous action of the Postmaster-General under similar authority, is not this a vain contest, even if the House and the Senate should concur in adopting the provision?

Mr. BURROWS. I say to my friend distinctly that the question will be entirely within the discretion of the Postmaster-General; but it is hoped that if this House should concur in the amendment he will feel constrained by this expression of opinion to execute the law, and undoubtedly he would if both Houses should adopt this provision.

Mr. STRUBLE. Has he not already disregarded an act of Congress?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly; but that was for certain reasons which I do not now care to discuss. This provision simply places at the disposal of the Postmaster-General $800,000, $400,000 of which may be used to extend the service or establish new lines; and he is authorized to let this service to the lowest responsible bidder or to reject all bids if he so desires, and to contract upon the best possible terms.

How gentlemen on this floor can possibly twist this provision into a subsidy I confess I can not understand. You might as well call the star-route service, for which we make appropriatiou of five and one-half millions of dollars, a subsidy. You might as well call the $900-000 you pay for carrying the mails from depots to the post-offices, the messenger service—you might as well call it a subsidy.

It simply gives this $800,000 to be used in the foreign service for carrying the mails by American steamships; and if my amendment be adopted, it restricts the Postmaster-General to $400,000 to the present lines and leaves $400,000 to extend lines along the Western coast of South America, putting on new lines to connect the ports of the Gulf States with a line going to South America and return.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last sentence. Sir, this is a proposition to subsidize certain steamship lines by giving them $800,000 under the pretense that it is for carrying the mails to foreign countries. The amount really involved is about $4,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who advocate the Senate's amendment have spent most of their time in trying to prove it is not a subsidy. Those who have looked dispassionately at the measure will, I think, agree with me in the opinion that that effort has been futile. No man who scrutinizes this amendment of the Senate can come to any other conclusion than that it is a subsidy in the boldest, broadest, and most unmitigated form.

It might properly be denominated an effort, a strenuous effort, to appropriate $800,000 of money and ultimately four millions without obtaining an additional mile of mail service, without reaching a single new port with our mails, and without placing a single new steamer afloat. The proposition is to pay $800,000 for a service we can get done as well for $60,000. The question for this House to determine is whether it is ready to enter upon such a gratuity.

In the last Congress this same job to the extent of $400,000 was attempted and rushed through in the closing hours of the session under an impression that if it were not granted its advocates would let the bill fail and force an extra session. But I am happy to say that although it passed the House, there was a Democratic administration in power that refused to squander the money in any such way. The masses of the people have heartily indorsed this action, and we will be unworthy the trust reposed in us by a confiding constituency if we fail to hold up their hands in the fight and proclaim that the action taken was right.

Mr. Chairman, I know not what others will do, but for one I will stay here till August, till Christmas, ay, till March, before this vicious amendment shall prevail and this dangerous subsidizing policy be adopted. Let us fight it out now and here.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] spent much of his time yesterday in deprecating the action of the American Government and lauding that of Germany. I have sometimes wondered why those statesmen who are so well pleased with Germany, so delighted with its iron chancellor, and so contented with its measures of administration, so charmed with its system of government, could not take themselves, "bag and baggage," and get under its jurisdiction. The sooner we quit trying to imitate all that is vicious in European systems, against which our ancestors rebelled, against which they fought, and against which our victories were won, the sooner we will prosper as a nation, and the better we will perpetuate our liberties. [Applause.] I want no effete monarchy, no hereditary nobility, no system of subsidy, which makes the poor poorer and the rich richer as my model for a government.

The gentleman from New Jersey says that the principles of this bill applied to a line from Havre to New York would only receive $3,000, while the same trip under the German subsidy would receive $14,000. Suppose it is true. If true, it will only prove this, that the German Government will at last outsubsidize us and our subsidy will in the end do us no good. We can not compete with them in subsidies. A government that has planned a system giving thirty millions of subsidy can not be beaten by a government which hesitates to give $800,000. One gentleman said the English Government has given in subsidies to its shipping two hundred and forty millions in forty years. I accept this as true, and hold up the frightful figures to the people as a warning against the taxing robbery they may expect if we once begin this business.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has given the secret out by admitting that only $400,000 was demanded last year because it was thought only $400,000 could be obtained. He also intimates, I believe in so many words says, the reason why more than $800,000 was not demanded in this bill was not because it was enough, but because more could not be obtained. You are to be treated with small doses at first, the amount to be increased as you will bear it, like the skillful physician gives medicine that is poisonous.

Then, sir, when reduced to its last analogy, this is the entrance to a system which would work viciousness only.

My distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] read yesterday from the investigating proceedings which resulted from our last subsidy about the year 1872. He read telegrams or letters from parties managing that subsidy, putting in the hands of their paid lobbyists hundreds of thousands of dollars to engineer and buy it through Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will take the floor, and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thank my colleague for his kindness.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the gentleman will direct his attention to the pending provision before he closes his remarks.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am doing it now. I have shown that the other subsidy to one of these lines ended in extravagance and a disgrace to the country. In the line of what the gentleman wants I will say this subsidy will result finally as the old one did, and if the lobby is not using money now the lobbies that succeed it will use money. I do not believe, in fact I know, that money can not be successfully used now, for fortunately this House of Representatives is not for sale.

Mr. BURROWS. It is no subsidy.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Did the gentleman from Tennessee vote for the river and harbor bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I can not yield hereafter. I will yield long enough, however, to say I did vote for it and I will do it again. Everything in the river and harbor bill that goes to Hell Gate is satisfactory to my friend from New York, and everything else in it is unsatisfactory to him. [Laughter.]

As a proof that this is only an entering-wedge for subsidies, I refer gentlemen to the debate on the subject in the last Congress, when the gentleman from Michigan, who had the matter in charge, admitted it.

Mr. Chairman, who is to reap the benefit of this subsidy? Does it go to any of the hundred thousand men now out of employment in our land? Does it go to the poor and needy? No, sir. But one of the chief beneficiaries is the steamship line now owned and controlled by Jay Gould, Russell Sage, C. P. Huntington, and others. Are they paupers, that they must be fed from the public crib? Are they weak financially and unable to keep their vessels afloat without Government subsidy? What obligation is this Congress, this country, under to open its coffers and pour out its treasure to them? Sir, I will never consent to pay $800,000 a year for a service that can be as well done for less than one hundred thousand—never! never!

Gentlemen have tried to draw an analogy between this provision and the star-route service, the railway mail service, forgetting the fact that under the subsidy provision contained in the Senate amendment the amount will be paid, not in proportion to the amount or weight of mail carried, but by the miles the vessel traverses. It virtually gives 50 cents a mile for every mile traveled by the mail steamer. That is not so with the railway mail service, for at stated periods the mails of the United States are weighed and on the railway the carrying is paid for in proportion to the weight of mail carried, whereas under this loosely drawn and obnoxious amendment if a vessel carried only one postal card the full amount of the subsidy would have to be paid to it, possibly amounting to 50 cents for every mile traveled.

Gentlemen have said they want to expedite the service. Mr. Chairman, that discussion was had once before, and while talking so much about the star-route service and expediting mails we may also stop and consider for a moment what has resulted from the unlimited discretion of officials in expediting service once before. Dorsey, Brady, and such a band of thieves as never infested any country before broke into the Treasury under a former administration, and, from 1878 to 1881, stole millions of dollars. This was done under pretext of giving speedier and better mail service.

Mr. BURROWS. Is that an answer to this question?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is in answer to the proposition to lodge more discretion in executive officers and to pay more for service than it is worth.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask is it an answer to the question presented here?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have stated my position on this question, and if the gentlemen do not understand it it is futile to undertake to impress it upon them. If this bill is intended to encourage shipping between the governments named and our own I repeat it will not be effectual, because other governments will outbid us. That is inevitable.

We should not enter upon this system of subsidizing. I glory in our American institutions because of their purity; and I would keep them inviolate. There is no need for such a policy to build up our shipping interests. If it paid better to navigate the ocean than to work upon the land the people of the United States with their enterprise, their intelligence, their ingenuity, and their business capacity would turn to navigation, and when the time comes that it does pay better they will do it. But while you can make 10 per cent. on the land and only 2 per cent. on the high seas the American people will not abandon the land and take to the water.

Mr. Chairman, is it claimed by any man on this floor that the service is not as well done under the present system as under that proposed by the Senate amendment? I repeat, is that claimed? The rashest man on the other side does not, I am sure, claim that it would be more effectual.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman is mistaken; I do claim it, and I will show the facts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am afraid my friend in his zeal upon this subject would claim anything that is not contained within the decalogue.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no; I will not. But I will show that the gentleman's statement is not correct.

Mr. Chairman, we have a country unequaled in its beauty, unrivaled in its resources. It is inhabited by a race gathered from every quarter of the globe. In assimilating the different nationalities coming here our people have striven to adopt the good and reject the evil of all. We have a Constitution the wonder of the world, in the framing of which our fathers strove to take only enough of the natural liberty of man to make it impossible for him to injure others and to give him a stable, safe government. Mr. Jefferson, the wisest of the founders of our system, laid down one of the essential principles of our Government to be: "Equal and exact justice to all men. * * * Exclusive privileges to none." Let us not depart from this sound principle today by granting to a favored few of our citizens without consideration money which belongs to all.

Mr. McMILLIN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, can we build as good ships as England, as France, Germany, and Italy build? We can. Can we build them as cheaply as those countries do, as the Old World can? We can not. Why? We have all the material of the best quality, and we have, without exception, the best skilled labor the world produces. But with us educated expert labor is paid at least 60 per cent. more than the expert labor of foreign lands. With us labor is protected by law; with them everything is protected by law except labor. If we paid our labor the same wages they pay theirs we could build as cheap ships as they do and better ones, for our labor is the best. Do we want to build ships as cheap as they do? Do we want to build them cheaply to the degradation of our labor? We do not; we should not; for to do so is to destroy the homes, wreck the happiness, and disband the grandest army of free, intelligent laborers, part of our educated, liberty-loving and Christian citizenship, the most exalted band of human toilers, who earn their living as by the Divine command it was ordained, by the sweat of their faces, found anywhere on God's sin-cursed, yet beautiful footstool.

I want to see good ships in our merchant marine, and I want them to carry our flag on all seas. We must have such ships, must have a strong, progressive, prosperous merchant marine. It will be an honor to us as a people; it will be a protection to us as a nation. But we must, we can have these ships without the degradation of our labor, without the injury of our industries. We can have them without that sacrifice, without the destruction of our firesides and the desecration of our household gods. How? Simply by paying American-built ships, manned by American sailors, flying the American flag, carrying American cargoes, and establishing American trade fair compensation for the labor they do for the American Government by giving them preference over foreign ships, and by aiding them in extending our commerce. This is not subsidy. If it is, then I am for subsidy.

The labor with which the ship was built was paid fair wages; the labor with which the cargo was manufactured was paid fair wages; the labor with which the ship is sailed is paid fair wages; pray tell me why should not the ship have fair compensation? Why should not the men who built it, who go out with it on the sea, taking its risks, aiding you as well as themselves by its success, have fair compensation and just remuneration? We virtually have no trade with South America, with Central America, with Mexico to-day. It should be immense. We never will have such trade unless we aid in its establishment. Once established it will take care of itself. It will furnish a market for our surplus productions, if such we have; will give employment to our labor; will open new fields for our enterprise and industry.

Give us a foothold there and I defy the world to dislodge us. Why? Because the productions of our skilled labor, if it can reach market, will always sell. If not always the cheapest, it is always the best; hence cheapest in the long run. It is the best, because made by intelligent, liberty-loving American citizens, and will always and everywhere sell in preference to the shoddy production of pauper toil. The educated expert American laborer is the grandest monarch that walks the earth. I would not reduce him to the level of the workman of the Old World, but I would sell his product over the labor of the ignorant toiler of despotic lands because it is the best, because it is made by American citizens.

It is not right to say to those who build and sail our ships—it is not just for the United States, speaking through its duly constituted agents, to say: "We can have our mails carried cheaper than you offer to do it. The ships of other nations have underbid you; unless you lower your rates we will favor your foreign competitors." May my tongue be palsied before I so speak, and may my arm wither before, the power being mine, I write such an order. It is wrong in principle, it is shameful in practice, it is a crime against free institutions, it is non-republican; still, it is thoroughly democratic as democracy is interpreted by those who speak for it to-day.

Foreign ships can well carry our mails at foreign postage rates, for the difference between that and fair compensation is more than made up by the subsidy paid them by the governments whose flags they fly, by governments that not only pay them a bounty, but guarantee to their owners fair remuneration. Our ships not only contend against such competition, such fearful odds, but here in the House that should be the House of their friends they find an enemy as unrelenting as the one they find on the seas.

Were I your Postmaster-General, and my hands were not tied by laws such as the majority of this House enacts, the flag of my country should float from every vessel carrying her mails to foreign shores——

Mr. WADSWORTH. To accomplish that you would require to have a Congress with an American spirit.

Mr. GOFF. Yes; and I would have the ships of my country sail over every sea, to every land where American enterprise has established commercial dealings or contends for supremacy; and I would so do, even if it did cost the "round dollars" of your Treasury to do it. And they would all come rolling back again, bringing many others with them by the increase of our commerce, by the commercial prosperity so brought about. Trade, individual happiness, national greatness will surely follow that flag, Mr. Chairman, that now gives dignity to you in your high position and power to this House in its deliberations, typifying as it does all that is great of human action, all that is grand of human thought.

Gentlemen of the other side of this Chamber, this is not the first time you have combined with foreign powers, if not for the purpose now, at least with the result, and certainly with that object heretofore, of destroying the merchant marine of the United States. The first serious blow our carrying trade received was from the cruisers of the so-called Confederate States of America, set afloat through your instrumentalities, with the connivance of those very governments in behalf of whose ships you oppose this amendment. Our commerce has not declined; on the contrary, it is far greater than ever. The trouble is that in our commerce we resort almost entirely to foreign vessels. The rebel cruisers captured and destroyed many of our ships, much of our merchant marine, and with the aid of foreign power drove the residue almost entirely from the sea or to registration under foreign flags.

Gentlemen, you gave us as much as we could well do to see to you on land, and those unfriendly powers, said to be neutral, with your aid, played havoc with us on the seas. And now when peace has come again those foreign powers claim the rights you helped them take which you concede, and then, wonderful to relate, you say to us that this deplorable result is brought about by burdensome taxation, by vicious legislation, and the delinquencies of Republican administrations. O shame! where is thy blush?

Mr. Chairman, it is well known, it is a historical fact, that England and France especially seized the opportunity presented by our civil war to cover the seas with their great fleets of iron ships, then just coming into use, subsidizing them, guaranteeing their prosperity and protecting them with their magnificent navies, thus securing their continuance and supremacy. Mr. Chairman, that was in the day of our country's weakness—in the hour when she drank of the dregs of the bitter cup. Now we are strong again, now our flag is supreme over all our land, and it is our duty to see that it is known and respected on all seas and is a stranger to none.

I shall vote for that policy, call it what you will—gratuity, bonus, bounty, subsidy, I care not—that will open up our dismantled shipyards, encourage our ship-builders, build up our grand old John Roaches instead of tearing them down, employ our unemployed, drive the wolf from our cabin doors, and send great iron merchant ships, planned by American genius, built by American labor from American material, and floating the flag of our Union—the stary banner of our fathers—out over all the seas, into all ports, unto all peoples, even following the sun around the globe.

I am for the American system and American interests always as against British free-trade and foreign supremacy. [Applause.]

Mr. RIGGS. To secure for our own people the carrying of our own commerce we need something more than this amendment. I call attention to the fact that in 1885 more than 81 per cent. of all we exported went to Europe and a portion went to Africa. This amendment does not propose to secure to our own people the carriage of any portion of those exports, so that really the object can not be by this amendment to aid our own people very greatly in securing the carriage of what we export.

Nearly all our exports go somewhere else than to South America, Central America, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, and China; and the argument we have just heard is inapplicable to this amendment in the light of the facts.

I want to call attention to some figures that have been presented heretofore in the course of the argument on this amendment. Statements have been made about what was paid in 1885 to steamboat and coastwise lines in connection with the figures as to what was paid to the sea lines. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] first employed the figures and some of them were employed by others afterward.

That gentleman mentioned the fact that in 1885 we paid $18,000 for carrying the mails from Baltimore to Norfolk, and he compared that with some one of the lines carrying the foreign mails which received less money. Now, in order that there may be any fairness in his comparison he must assume that the steamboat line from Baltimore to Norfolk received none too much. That assumption is necessarily involved. Why have I not the same right to assume that the steamship line he mentioned received enough and therefore the coastwise line received too much? That is the real truth so far as the coastwise line is concerned. I call attention to the fact that since 1885 the same service between Baltimore and Norfolk has been let for $6,000—one third of the amount paid in 1885.

I have the statement here, the official figures, from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, furnished yesterday. So there is no force in that argument based on the comparison the gentleman made. The gentleman from Michigan also mentioned that in 1885 we paid the line from New Orleans to Port Eads $22,719; and he compared those figures with the amounts paid to some one of our sea lines. Since then that service has been let for $7,900—a plain evidence that too much was paid before. The comparison therefore falls to the ground.

The gentleman also mentioned the route from New Orleans to Grand Isle, on which $3,950 was paid in 1885. Since that time that service has been entirely discontinued and the points served by it are now served otherwise.

He mentioned the steamboat line from Memphis and Arkansas City, to which we paid in 1885 $24,000. Since that time the same service has been let for $14,000, and I think that is too much. The facts, when we get down to them, do not warrant the inference which the gentleman sought to draw and to have this committee draw. So you may go on through the figures from the beginning to the end, and, as a rule, you will find that they do not warrant the inference which the gentleman drew from them. If the argument proves that steamships did not receive enough, then a similar comparison will prove that one-half our steamboat lines are paid too little, because some steamboat lines, traveling equally as many miles as those named, received much less pay.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question yesterday I had occasion to remark and to call the attention of this House to utterances and declarations made by boards of trade and chambers of commerce throughout the country to show that those great organizations, dealing not only with commercial questions but with every industrial question, were looking to this House to formulate some measure of wise legislation that would in some way aid American shipping in reaching the rich markets of the world. I am in receipt this morning of a communication from the chamber of commerce of my own city of Philadelphia, wherein I am requested to read to this House their opinion and their utterances upon this subject. It is unnecessary for me to speak of that organization individually. It is representative of the mercantile and commercial interests of the city; it is typical of the same character of organization that is common to the great industrial centers of the country. I read:

PHILADELPHIA, May 20, 1886.

The Philadelphia Board of Trade, representing the vast manufacturing interests of the city, and including in its membership every branch of mercantile and commercial activity, respectfully memorialize your honorable body to take some positive and efficient measures to extend our commerce and open new outlets for our products, especially in South American and Central American markets. To this end they have united with the National Board of Trade and other leading commercial organizations in urging the necessity of a department of commerce, charged especially with the duty of extending commercial relations with foreign countries. They have united in urging the passage of a bill giving a bounty to sailing vessels and steamers based on an equitable mileage system, and they are of the opinion that a measure of this kind would soon be followed by a rapid extension of our trade into the leading markets of the world. The board of trade have reason to feel great encouragement at the aroused public sentiment on these questions, and Congress is not called on to lead, but to follow, a general and widespread movement in favor of a prompt, liberal, national policy in this regard. The board of trade believe that the adoption of the pending amendment, appropriating $800,000 for carrying the mails to foreign ports on American vessels, will lead to the establishment of new lines, and will quickly justify the wisdom of its enactment. They, therefore, earnestly urge the passage of this measure. The building and fitting out of a mercantile marine will be felt as a stimulus to the people of every section of the country, and the American laborer and producer should look with confidence to an American Congress to adopt such a policy as will give to our own people the advantage of this increased demand upon our supplies of raw material and our manufacturing facilities.

This utterence is the expression of mercantile and industrial interests that have examined this whole question not as it is examined in the discussion of two days in this House, but in all its practical relations and bearings.

And in that connection I desire simply to emphasize this one sentiment or sentence: the civilized nations of the world pay to-day, either as subsidy or bounty or gift, or whatever you may call it, for mail transportation upward of $11,000,000, either to aid the carriage of the mails or to promote commercial relations and secure foreign trade. Our contribution is $375,000, $36,000 of which only goes to American vessels.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After "$800,000," in line 105, add the following: "of which amount $200,000, of so much thereof as may be required, shall be expended for the establishment or a mail line from a Gulf port to a port or ports in South and Central America, and the remainder of said $800,000 shall be expended in payment of established lines as hereinafter provided."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, as a general proposition, I am opposed to the subsidizing, to any great amount, of the ships of any corporation in this or any other country. In the expenditure of the large amounts of money which have heretofore been spent by this Government it is a fact which can not be successfully controverted that the Southern States have not had a fair proportion of that expenditure. I am not here, sir, to play statesman upon this floor, but to the best of my ability to represent in part the interests of the people of the State of Florida. Pensacola, in the western portion of that State, is one of the largest timber ports in this country and ranks among the great timber ports of the world. The greater portion of the business of that port, or a large portion of it, I should have said, is transacted with the ports of Central and South America.

On the eastern side of the State of Florida, only twenty hours distant from Pensacola or New Orleans, are large mills shipping lumber to the ports of all the world, a great deal of it being shipped to the northern ports of this country. The shipment to the northern ports of the United States would not be affected in any way by this subsidy. But as the case now stands it takes at least fifty days for us to get a letter from the ports of Central and South America with which a great deal of this lumber business is transacted.

If a line were established from some Gulf port—probably New Orleans, as being the greatest port in that portion of our country—these men engaged in the lumber trade who are intimately connected with that port by steamboat and rail communication could get their letters within a reasonable time. Sir, it can not be expected that Representatives from the section of the country in which I live will agree to a vote by this House giving for such a purpose as this any great amount of money from the expenditure of which they are to receive no benefit. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ZACK. TAYLOR. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] by adding the proviso which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided also, That $100,000 of said $400,000 shall be applied by the Postmaster-General to the transportation of foreign mails by existing steamers or lines running from New Orleans to ports in Central and South America and to ports in the West India Islands; and $100,000 of said $800,000 shall be applied by the Postmaster-General to the establishment of new lines from the city of New Orleans to said ports in said islands and in Central and South America for the transportation of said mails.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, one good result that has grown out of the controversy between the Postmaster-General and the steamship companies—the only good result so far as I have been able to ascertain—is that it has brought to the knowledge of the officials of the Post-Office Department the fact that New Orleans is the best point for the distribution of our mails to Central and South America; and that idea having once gotten into their heads, I think it the duty of Congress to see that it should not get out again. [Laughter.]

New Orleans is nearer by many hundreds of miles and by many days' travel to all these ports (except those in Brazil or on the River Plate) than either New York or San Francisco. Chicago and Saint Louis are nearer by one-third than is New York. Besides, sir, the Mississippi River was created as an outlet for the States in the Mississippi Valley. It affords a perpetual guarantee of competition in transportation; and nearly all the articles purchased from this country by those portions of Central and South America are produced in the Mississippi Valley.

Almost everything that they buy from this country either crosses that river or is produced in the Mississippi Valley and goes out of this country by the seaboard cities, paying tribute to them and to the transcontinental lines of railway.

We need some provision of this kind in order to enable us to dispose of the surplus agricultural products grown in the Mississippi Valley. If you will look over the list of our exports to these countries you will see that 90 per cent. of them are grown or produced in the Mississippi Valley. Petroleum, the hardware of Ohio and Indiana, lumber, furniture, and breadstuffs all come from that valley; and the proper way to promote and encourage the commerce we now have is the establishment of lines from New Orleans to these Central and South American ports.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has one minute.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have two.

Mr. BURROWS. I will give my friend another minute.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, but little can be said in a minute. I wish I had more time. I have no objection as a matter of policy to give necessary aid for a first-class mail service to our people at home and abroad. Such a service as will assist in developing our country and establishing our commerce; but I want to know that the aid will accomplish the purpose for which it is given. I do not believe the aid given by this provision even if expended by this administration would accomplish the purpose for which it is given. The administration is unfriendly, as I understand it.

The provision "authorizes" the Postmaster-General to make contracts for the ocean mail service. We all know that such language is construed by him as giving a discretion, and that he has refused under similar authority to make contracts. Much has been said during this debate about the presence of a lobby promoting the passage of this bill. I do not believe it. If a lobby corruptly seeks to promote this provision it would not only be knavish but idiotic, for if the provision passes the Postmaster-General still has a discretion. In the event it does pass then a lobby might appear, but if it did it would hover about the Post-Office Department, seeking to control the discretion of the Postmaster-General. In any way you look at it I do not see that the enactment of the provision is wise.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan be adopted or not, I shall offer as a substitute for the entire Senate amendment the provision which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To secure greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of mails to Brazil, the republics of Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies, China and Japan, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be needed; and the Postmaster-General shall, as far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places respectively in American built and registered steamships, provided the same can be carried for a reasonable compensation, to be by him determined, but not exceeding the rate of 50 cents per nautical mile for the distance usually traveled in the most direct and feasible course between the terminal points hereinbefore specified.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, this is a plain, practical, business proposition, intended to meet an existing embarrassment in the carriage of the foreign mails.

In the last Congress we had to deal with a new state of the law. The compulsory obligation resting on American vessels to carry the American mail had been repealed. It was known that new arrangements would have to be made, and hence Congress placed at the disposal of the Postmaster-General the sum of $400,000. This money was intended to be used for such payments as might be required to keep up the foreign-mail service of the country.

The appropriation was permissive; it was not mandatory. It was intended to be left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. All denunciations therefore against him as a violator of the law are entirely unfounded and unjust. The House intended to put this money at his disposal, as he might see fit to use it. He has not seen fit to use it. Criticism, therefore, is proper enough as to the exercise of the discretion confided to him, but it is not proper as to his execution of the law. He has done what he supposed to have been his duty in the premises.

There was in this appropriation no element of subsidy whatever. It was not intended to be a subsidy. I voted for it, and my colleagues not now members of this House, Mr. Cox, Mr. Dorsheimer, and Mr. Potter, all of us pronounced opponents of all subsidy measures, voted for this appropriation. We felt that the public necessity required the provision of a fund upon which the Postmaster-General could draw in case of necessity in order to prevent the stoppage of such postal accommodations as the people of this country had had with foreign countries.

But all doubt as to whether it was a subsidy or not is settled by the Postmaster-General himself, who thus speaks of it in his report:

Much has been said about employing the postal appropriation to aid American commerce. When Congress shall desire to invest the Post-Office Department with care for that object, it can not be doubted it will easily choose language which will plainly convey the purpose and impose the duty. Until then that Department can not rightfully employ the moneys appropriated for the postal service to secure objects not intrusted to its care, however meritorious in themselves.

I am opposed to the Senate amendment because it is advocated here as a subsidy and was advocated there as a subsidy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HEWITT. I am much obliged to my colleague; and I will say to the House that if I trespass on its time it is because I was entirely unable to get recognition during the general debate, and it does seem to me the voice of the city of New York, which receives and sends out nearly the whole of these foreign mails, at least ought to be expressed on this floor. [Applause.]

Now I say the Senate amendment, and, I will add, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], are open to the objection of being essentially subsidies, to which in any shape or form I am opposed.

But there still remains the difficulty created by the repeal of the compulsory law. If gentlemen had wanted to remove this difficulty they ought to have brought a bill in for the restoration of the compulsory law, and pressed it to its legitimate end, if they think that is a remedy for these difficulties. But that has not been done. The communications between this country and foreign countries are not carried on to the satisfaction of the commercial interests.

I have heard it asserted here that the present mail service is satisfactory. That is not my information. My constituents by hundreds have been writing to me and asking me to secure some action by which the mails shall be carried with regularity and dispatch. They do not ask that new steamship lines shall be created by bounties, but they ask that the mails, such as they had before the repeal of the compulsory act, shall, by some process or other, be restored.

If gentlemen are inclined to dispute the fact this service is not satisfactory I will quote to them the language of the Postmaster-General himself, who says in his annual report:

Some delays and inconveniences have arisen between New York and Colon, San Francisco and Japan and China, and to the west coast of Mexico, by the refusal of the Pacific Mail Company, and some between New York and Venezuela by the late action of the Red D company. Except these, all the foreign mails are transported either in the same manner or a better than during the past year.

Early action by Congress is very desirable to provide such means as it shall deem appropriate to relieve the inconvenience sustained on the routes indicated. The Department recognizes its obligation to the business men of the country, who have forborne complaint, with but few exceptions, rather than manifest a willingness to see the Government compelled to a course which upon careful consideration had been decided inexpedient and unwise to be pursued. They are entitled to the earliest practicable relief which can be given.

Now it is agreed on all hands as to the routes specified by the Postmaster-General it is necessary for this House to take action. And hence I have proffered the amendment in order that the Postmaster-General may be able to apply the proper remedy. At a meeting held in the city of New York, at the Importers and Exporters' Exchange, a series of resolutions was adopted. I will not take time to read them, but in substance they state that the mail service with China and Japan and the East Indies is demoralized, that letters which formerly were carried in twenty-six days now require fifty-eight days. One of the great merchants in New York engaged in that business, who has written me a letter——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BRUMM. I suggest that it is not fair to others of us who desire to be heard.

Mr. HEWITT. Of course if any gentleman objects to my proceeding I do not wish to occupy the attention of the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection whatever to the gentleman proceeding; but the debate, by the order of the House, is to close at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BARRY. I am informed that my name is next on the list of speakers, and I will defer to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield his time to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BARRY. I do not yield my time, but simply defer to the gentleman from New York, if that will oblige him, so that he can continue his remarks consecutively.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not object, of course, to the gentleman yielding his time, but as there are gentlemen on this side of the House who still wish to be heard, I do not want their time to be taken from them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has already occupied the time that was yielded to him. Of course any gentleman who has the floor can yield his time if there be no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARRY. I understand that some gentleman is willing to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Any one who can get the floor can yield his time, and if I can be recognized I will yield.

Mr. BARRY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object in justice to this side of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not object. The gentleman from New York ought to have been recognized on this subject in the general debate. He represents the largest interest involved in this proposition in this country, and he ought to have time given to him as a matter of justice.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have stated that I had no objections to the gentleman proceeding, provided the time was yielded from the other side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the last word, if that is in order, and will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments now pending.

Mr. BARRY. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York, if that will oblige him.

Mr. HEWITT. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Mississippi, but I can not in two minutes by any possibility say to the House what I desire to say on the question. I supposed it was understood that I should have about twenty minutes, which would be charged against the time of the other side. If that is objected to, I think it is better to take permission to print the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Chair will recognize me I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York. That will give him seven minutes in all, if that will be of any service to him.

Mr. HEWITT. Then I will endeavor to condense what I have to say within that space of time.

The embarrassment to which I have referred with our East India mail service still exists, as I am informed by Mr. Frazar, of the Oriental house of Frazar & Co., who was here within a week.

With South America the United States mails are now carried to all the ports (to which the Red D line delivered them formerly) in twenty-eight days. The Red D line delivered them in nine and one-quarter days. That of course is not such a mail service as the merchants of this country require for the proper transaction of their business.

Now whose fault is this? Where does the blame lie? The Postmaster-General has become involved in a controversy with the steamship companies. On both sides I think there has been more temper than judgment. I think the steamship companies have behaved very badly, with the exception of the Brazil line. They have refused to carry the mails since last September, and the public have been put to great inconvenience in consequence of this mistaken course.

If they had fulfilled their pledge to the public made on the 12th of August last, in an appeal in which they made a declaration which I shall quote, there would have been no grievance; and if they had then asked Congress to indemnify them for the work performed an appropriation would have readily been voted to the companies in payment of services thus voluntarily rendered.

In this appeal they made the following declaration:

It has become a matter of principle with them. They have refused the proffer of the Government, and yet they continue to carry the mails, as the law permits them to do, without any compensation to themselves, conveying such letters as may be delivered them by the public inclosed in properly-stamped envelopes. The Government is at no loss; it will receive the whole of the sea and inland postage; the public is at no loss. It has now the advantage of deciding whether to send its mails by the various companies or whether to take advantage of the new facilities that the Government affords by carrying the mails in foreign ships—facilities by which the mail will reach Japan from San Francisco in sixty days instead of eighteen days as heretofore.

And yet within a month of that time these very people who make this statement and publish it turn around and refuse to carry the mails of the United States! They are entitled, Mr. Chairman, to no consideration at the hands of this Congress. On the other hand, the Postmaster-General should have secured the carriage of the mails by a concession that was entirely within the discretion confided to him by the act of Congress; but he preferred to plant himself upon the ground that the act meant either the $400,000 or the 50 cents a mile or nothing. He said that the amount appropriated was not sufficient to go around at the rate per mile limited in the law, and so he decided to make no allowance. What I think should have been done was to have called these steamship people together in conference and to have endeavored to arrange some terms by which the mails should be carried until Congress could meet. The sea and inland postage is not an adequate compensation in all cases. It is not a sufficient sum to pay some of the lines conveying small mails for the conditions imposed upon them for sailing upon fixed days, for the care of the mails, and the accommodations required, and more particularly for landing the mails at many foreign ports and waiting there for the return mails.

An intelligent merchant would have dealt with the question upon its merits, and a great public officer should have allowed no feeling to enter into the controversy. It ought to have been considered upon pure business principles. All feeling ought to have been eliminated. Now, the proposition which I make is based upon a common-sense view, and is simply this—that $400,000 shall be appropriated to enable the Postmaster-General to get speedy and frequent mail service at the points and places where it was formerly done to the satisfaction of the public. But it is at his discretion. If he can get it upon a reasonable basis of compensation he is to give the business to the American lines. But he is not restricted to the American lines. If the compensation which he offers to American lines is not acceptable, or rather if the proposition which he receives from them is unreasonable, he may seek elsewhere to have the business done. But preference should be given to American lines, because, whether gentlemen like it or not, the sentiment of this country is in favor, so far as possible, of the proposition that the mail shall be carried in American bottoms and under the American flag.

But let it be observed that by the terms of this amendment the Postmaster-General is to be master of the situation, as he ought to be, and the steamship companies are to take his terms or take nothing. The reliance is placed, as it ought to be, upon his discretion, his sense of justice, and his desire to gratify the people, whose servant he is.

And now as to the money expenditure involved in this provision. I have recently felt moved to make an earnest protest against the improvident expenditures of money involved in pension, fiscal, and other bills pending in this House. I do not take back one word of what I have said on this subject. I am against waste and extravagance, now and forever, lest the burdens of taxation are thus made too heavy to be borne.

But wise expenditures of money often lighten the load of taxation. The provision of adequate mail facilities increases the ability of the citizen to meet his obligations. In other words, they pay back more than they cost.

Again, there are some disbursements which are a matter of honor. The promises made to our soldiers are of this nature, but we are not called upon to exceed our promises. Trust funds are also sacred, and must be administered according to the spirit of the trust. All the money which we derive from our foreign-mail service is a trust fund, to be used for the payment, first, of the actual outlays, and, secondly, for the extension of foreign-mail facilities.

The Postal Union is the last triumph of civilization, if it is not its greatest achievement. It is the beginning of the era when the war drums shall cease to beat in the federation of the world. Before its formation the cost of postage among the nations was prohibitory to the most of mankind. The Collins line after its subsides ceased collected in one year in sea postage alone nearly $200,000.

The progress of civilized nations toward a common and cheap rate of international postage is the work of enlightened statesmen and good Christians. They knew that it could not be accomplished without sacrifices in money, and the nations were pledged to make them.

The wish has been accomplished at a great cost. The only nation which has not to pay out more money than it receives is the United States. We alone make money out of it. How much is now not of much consequence, but it is more than the $400,000 proposed to be paid by the amendment which I have offered. I say this deliberately, notwithstanding the disingenuous effort of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails to diminish the actual amount. This money does not belong to us. It belongs to the world, for whom we hold it in trust—in trust for what? For the extension of postal facilities whenever we can find occasion to transmit mails more speedily and more frequently.

This will be made clear beyond cavil if we consider what we should have done if the Postal Union had proceeded to accomplish its beneficent work by another method. Suppose the convention when it adopted the 5-cent rate had decided to assess the loss upon each nation in proportion to the number of letters sent and received by each, would or could we have declined such a manifestly fair proposal? And if we had agreed to it, is it not evident that we should have had to pay out a large sum annually to indemnify the other governments for what they pay out in compensation for the carriage of the ocean mails?

This obligation we have not only escaped, but we actually made a profit out of the operation in more ways than one. Owing to the vast amount of correspondence on the Atlantic lines, we get a considerable profit out of the mails carried for us in foreign ships. We even get a profit out of the carriage of the closed mails across the continent.

Without stopping now to estimate the net profits of this business, it is enough to say that it is a profit never intended to be given or taken, and that the part of honor and honesty is to use it for the general good by the extension of mail facilities, none the less profitable to us because open to all the world; for it is a fact known to every merchant and every student of political economy that business follows as well as precedes the steamship and the flag which floats over it.

Where duty, honor, and profit concur there ought to be no hesitation in placing at the disposition of the Postmaster-General ample means to enable him to discharge his obligations to the people and the other nations of the world. As matters now stand we are placed in the humiliating position of sponging upon the other nations of the world. If there is any doubt on this point let the following mortifying letter, addressed by the Superintendent of our Foreign Mail Service to the Mexican minister, bear witness. Comment is unnecessary when sixty millions of Americans are thus made debtors to ten millions of Mexicans struggling for existence. O, shame! where is thy blush?

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1886.

SIR: Under date of March 24 last, the post-office department of Mexico transmitted to this Department a copy of the new Mexican postal guide containing a distribution scheme for correspondence from the United States for Mexico. The letter which accompanies it states as follows, namely: "No distribution scheme is given in the guide for correspondence for the states of Campeche, Yucatan, Tabasco, and Chiapas, as this correspondence can be forwarded more advantageously by sea than by land." As the steamers of the New York, Havana, and Mexican Steamship Company are subsidized by the Government of Mexico, and therefore by Article III of the Postal Union Convention of Paris, 1878, are traveling post-offices of Mexico, and are not under the control of this Department, and by treaty of 1861, Articles VI and VII, this Government is privileged to send by said steamers the mails originating in this country destined for Mexican ports of call of the steamers of this line, I have the honor to request that you will indicate in what way this Department can utilize this service according to treaty stipulation. I have to suggest that if the agent of the Mexican Government would receive the mails destined for those ports at the New York post-office and accompany them to the steamer it would expedite the delivery of the mails to the agent of the Mexican Government. However, the question as to where and how this agent shall come into possession of these mails is a matter of detail to be decided by your government.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent Foreign Mails.

To His Excellency Señor Don M. ROMERO,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary,
Mexican Legation, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I have no ambition to air my opinions on this question, but as I was side-tracked yesterday in the general debate I deem it proper as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that I should voice on this floor my sentiment and the sentiment of the people I represent as positively and emphatically opposing any subsidy to any corporation or individual whatever. It is un-democratic. It does not respond, Mr. Chairman, to the spirit and genius of our Government and of our people.

Why, sir, we are told that thirty years ago our ocean commerce and carrying trade whitened the broad Atlantic, and that our Navy floated over its waters with invincible pride. The American then would not have "flattered Neptune for his trident." But now we turn with an averted eye from that boundless expanse of our expiring glory and look with an anxious and half despairing gaze to the small South and Central American States and Isles contiguous to our continent, whither about 7 per cent. of all our exports go. We are continually importuned to look upon Germany, upon England, upon France as our models in mail service, and whose examples in that regard we are asked to be to obsequious imitators.

When it comes to other economic questions, and especially those of revenue and tariff, in England, we are told to turn from them in derision. And so it is after listening to the speeches here, I know not whether to stroke admiringly the mane of the British lion or, as a distinguished gentleman from New York used to do, give his tail a derisive twist. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, if this bill should pass with the Senate subsidy amendment, in order to preserve its unity we should amend the title. It is entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887." Should this amendment prevail it would be proper to amend the title so as to make it read "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and to subsidize certain steamship lines."

Mr. CATCHINGS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BARRY.

Mr. BARRY. A great deal of stress has been laid on the fact that we pay for our domestic service vast sums of money. That was emphasized by my able friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

It is the purpose and policy of the Post-Office Department to pay for domestic mail service quantum meruit, according to service rendered. This is the policy under the present administration, though in some instances under the preceding administration excessive amounts were contracted for in the steamboat service, which are being reduced as fast as the law will permit.

Why, sir, our whole foreign-mail service is only 2,705,378 pounds per annum, for which we pay $331,903.24.

Upon the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Philadelphia 49,786,365 pounds of mail matter is transported during the year, and at a cost of $181,771.81.

In twenty days the Pennsylvania Railroad will carry between New York and Philadelphia more mails than the whole annual foreign-mail service.

In less than three days it will carry the amount in weight that is annually sent from the United States to all the countries south of us on this continent, the adjacent islands, and across the Pacific Ocean, for the carriage of which this branch of our foreign-mail service cost during the last fiscal year $60,994.52. This railway would during three days receive for transporting the mails less than $1,500.

It is true that the element of distance should enter into this computation, but with that in view the advantage will still be with the foreign-mail service. It should be remembered also that ships sail at their convenience and reach their ports when they please, without bonds, schedule, obligations, and the attendant fines, forfeitures, and penalties upon their infraction. The reverse is true with our inland service. And besides, the steamships are engaged in the ocean carrying business, and the mails they convey are merely incidental to their enterprise and cause but slight inconvenience.

Besides, American vessels carrying our mails to foreign ports enjoy advantages denied to others. Possessing a certificate of the Postmaster-General that they carry the United States mails, they are relieved in foreign ports from light-house dues, port charges, landing charges, and tonnage tax. They are permitted to land, discharge and receive their cargoes on any day or at any time, and can not be disturbed for any purpose, a privilege they could not otherwise claim—a benefit often as valuable to a vessel as the carrying of the mails is worth. For example, a steamer not possessing such a certificate upon landing at Havana is required to pay $1.35 per ton on all freight discharged and received. A United States mail steamship is exempt from this tonnage tax up to 6 tons, and only 62½ cents per ton in excess of that.

In my opinion the true solution of the problem is, what is right, what is a fair compensation; and this rule should obtain in every phase of governmental service. Common carriers on sea or land should form no exception.

As I understand it sea and inland postage is just, even liberal, and that outside this subsidy the appropriation in this bill covers that. I prefer American vessels to have it, and when compatible with the public interests to carry our mails. The sea and inland postage is 5 cents a letter, or $1.60 per pound for the same; on papers it 8 cents per pound. The sea postage is 44 cents per pound for letters and 4½ cents per pound for papers.

Upon referring to the report of the Postmaster-General for the last fiscal year we find that the total weight of transatlantic mails carried from New York during the last fiscal year was 2,194,066 pounds, which cost at sea-postage rates $270,157.63, the average being $609.36 a trip during the year. This was at rates thirty-four times greater than charged by ships for freight and four times the cost for parcels of dispatch matter of the same quantity. Of course the value attached to mail matter should make a difference, but it should also be remembered that only about one-fifth of our sea-borne mails are letters.

Notwithstanding the liberal offer of sea and inland postage made last year by the Postmaster-General, several American lines withdrew after the 1st August, because forsooth that officer, under the high and solemn obligations of his office, declined to distribute among them the $400,000 which they claimed under act March 3, 1885. Of the eight lines departing from New York and San Francisco all refused to transport our mails except the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company, plying between New York and Brazil, and the Oriental and Occidental line from San Francisco to China and Japan.

The other remaining lines would convey no other mails from our shores than such as were deliverable in those countries with which such ships were under contract compelling such service, which conduct scarcely betrays that zeal for "American commerce" and vaulting love of country which they and their friends evince in demanding the $400,000 subsidy and the granting of this one amounting to $800,000.

Whatever repugnance, emanating from patriotic pride, there may exist respecting the carrying of our mails to foreign countries in foreign ships, it is obviously of a recent growth, for we find an ancient legislative recognition of that policy on the part of Congress.

As far back as 1858 an act of Congress in express terms authorized the Postmaster-General to allow sea postage to foreign vessels, and that law continues in force at present. While to every American citizen it is more desirable to have our mails for other countries carried under the American flag, yet the policy is doubtless a wise one to send them at times in foreign ships to expedite their transmission.

Such has been the settled practice of this Government for years, without reference to the political parties that have administered it.

For the last fiscal year we had for inland transportation 12,371 star routes, aggregating 232,222 miles, which cost $5,414,804; 116 steamboat routes, aggregating 11,997 miles, which cost $563,002; 1,621 railroad routes, aggregating 121,032 miles, which cost $16,627,983, including $1,869,488 for railway post-office-car service.

The point is pressed that the compensation is liberal, even excessive, compared with that paid for the foreign service. This is untrue, and in many respects there is no likeness or similitude between the two, and the comparison becomes illogical.

The inland service is or should be paid a compensatory price, and is never subsidized to build up commerce or common carriers, individuals, or corporations. It is obligated to the Government by schedules. All but the railway service (with a few exceptions in steamboat lines) enter into contract with bond, after proposals are advertised for.

As it has been strenuously asserted that in the steamboat service there is no advertisement for bids, I invite attention to this communication and statement from Second Assistant Postmaster-General Knott:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry, I have the honor to inform you that the law authorizing the letting of steamboat service without advertising for proposals will be found in sections 3943, 3956, and 3970 R. S. as amended by the act of May 17, 1878 (sec. 5, 20th Stat., page 61), which is embraced in the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1879, in section 607, and reads as follows:

* * * When from any cause it may become necessary to make a new contract for carrying the mails upon any water route between ports of the United States upon which mail service has previously been performed, the Postmaster-General may contract with the owner or master of any steamship, steamboat, or other vessel plying upon the waters or between ports of the United States, for carrying the mail upon said route for any length of time not exceeding four years and without advertising for proposals therefor whenever the public interest and convenience will thereby be promoted, but the price paid for such service shall in no case be greater than the average price paid under the last preceding or existing regular contract upon the same route. And the Postmaster-General may contract with the owners or masters of steamships, steamboats, or other vessels plying upon the waters or between ports of the United States for carrying the mails upon such routes where no mail service has previously been performed without advertising for proposals therefor, but no contract for such new service shall be for a longer time than one year. No contract for carrying the mails between the United States and any foreign port shall be for a longer time than two years, unless otherwise directed by Congress.

Under the law it is competent for the Postmaster-General to contract with the owner or master of a steamboat for service on a new route for a period not exceeding one year, without advertising for proposals, and on a route that has been let under an advertisement for a period not exceeding four years at a rate of pay not exceeding that paid previously under the regular advertisement.

At the present time there are one hundred and twenty-three steamboat routes in operation in the United States, of which only fourteen were let otherwise than by formal advertisement for proposals, as shown by the accompanying statement.

From July 1, 1886, there will be several routes in operation that were let at less than the lowest bids under advertisements.

Very respectfully,

A. LEO KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. F. G. BARRY,
Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

As to railroads it is not deemed practicable or desirable to have express contracts with them as in former times, and the Post-Office Department adjusts their pay under proper regulations; but they are subject to fines and penalties. Indeed, the whole inland service rests under various obligations, such fines, forfeitures, and penalties incident thereto for their infraction as each case may require.

The foreign service is exempt from all this.

The star service, in a very large degree, is equipped and put into operation by the contractors for that sole purpose, and their net earnings are slight and in a great number of instances they lose. No steamer, American or otherwise, ever lost a farthing on account of carrying the foreign mails of our Government.

The appropriations for our inland service may appear large, but it should be borne in mind that the United States and Territories stretch across the continent and embrace an area of 3,000,000 square miles, not including Alaska, with fifty-four thousand offices, and the population of 60,000,000 is rapidly increasing.

Our inland service is an element of our national life, a plexus and network that intimately and sensitively affects and blends all parts of the Union and its Territories. The "head is not more native to the heart" than that system is to the commercial and social welfare of our people, and there is no department of the public service which they cherish so ardently. The system is one of the most admirable in the world, and is conducted by the most intelligent methods. I decline to look to England or Continental Europe as a paragon to emulate in our postal system. In every sense of the word our people can govern themselves without foreign examplars.

England with all her boasted liberality in expenditures for postal facilities only pays out about one-half of our annual expenditures for the same purpose. Her total postal service only costs $27,072,333.63 per annum. Her "packet" or ocean service is only $3,012,146.45 a year. Her insular position and her important and remote provinces in America, Africa, and Asia force her to maintain an enormous mail and commercial communication with them.

It is as essential to that government as our inland service is to us, the imperative demands on either government being as great, and both might with propriety be termed domestic mail service, as British soil and subjects may be found in every division of the globe. Look at her possessions—her Canadian dominion, Barbadoes, Jamaica, Trinidad, Bahama, Bermuda, Guiana, India, Burmah, Australia, New Zealand, and Ceylon; her Gold Coast and other possessions on the western shores of Africa; the Cape of Good Hope and Transvaal—with their millions of British subjects! Thus it will be seen how important is her ocean mail service.

France expends $26,000,000 for postal service. Her subsidies to steamship companies, according to the French postal report of 1884, was $5,152,388.98; but that is an avowed, outspoken subsidy or donation, a gift enterprise, which neither the interest nor inclination of the American people prompts them to make.

It may serve to silence the applausive clamor heard in behalf of the sums expended by England and France for postal service when it is remembered that our Government pays annually as much as both of them combined; and it is too great a stretch of patriotism to add the unnecessary sum of $800,000 a year to the bill for five possible consecutive years, as provided for in the sixth Senate amendment. It would scarcely please the toiling tax-payers of the land. It may sound well to talk about building up American shipping or American commerce, but we should think of building up the American tax-payer, or, by placing the least possible burden on his shoulders, let him build himself up, as every individual enterprise or industry should do, without a gift or subsidy from the treasury of the people, or the imposition of a protective tax upon them.

The Constitution says that taxation should be uniform, and it follows as a logical sequence that its benefits should flow to the people without discrimination in favor of any class or occupation.

The appropriations for internal transportation in this bill which the House passed and sent to the Senate are as follows:

Star service	$5,850,000
Steamboat service (which includes coastwise service)	575,000
Mail messengers	900,000
Railway mail service	15,595,432
Railway postal cars	1,808,000
Special facilities on trunk lines	291,000
Total	25,109,432

The receipts for postage for the last fiscal year was $40,056,226.69. From that deduct receipts from the foreign service, $2,287,169.13, and our domestic revenue from postage is $37,769,057.56.

Thus it will be seen that only 66 per cent. of our domestic postage revenue is devoted to domestic transportation, while American steamers for carrying foreign mails receive all the sea and inland postage, which, for letters, is 5 cents each of ½ ounce or under, or $1.60 per pound, and for papers 8 cents per pound, while our domestic postage is only 2 cents for a letter weighing 1 ounce or under, and 1 cent a pound for papers.

This subsidy amendment proposes to give $800,000 to American built and registered vessels for carrying the mails to Brazil, Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies; China and Japan, at a compensation of not over 50 cents per mile, going and returning.

For the last fiscal year there were fifty-eight American vessels engaged in this service which traveled in an aggregate 1,630,176 miles. At this estimate it would require $815,000 to pay them, thus leaving a deficit in that behalf of $15,000. It is idle to say that the Postmaster-General could contract with these lines for the service at a sum less than $800,000. They would insist upon having all, and thus monopolize the business, driving off competitors, or decline to carry the mails which, in either case, would not be very reassuring to our commercial intercourse with those countries and American ship-building.

Our commercial prosperity seems to be the innocent and patriotic purpose of such legislation. Then when that sum should be so absorbed what would become of the service contemplated in the last paragraph of the amendment, which is as follows:

The Postmaster-General, if in his judgment it be practicable, shall contract for a semi-monthly mail service between the ports of New York and New Orleans, alternately, and the port of Rio de Janeiro, under the provisions of this act.

Only 8.37 per cent. of the entire sea-borne mail for the last fiscal year was dispatched to the countries contemplated in the amendment, and to pay $800,000 for this service, amounting to only 45,021 pounds of letters and 424,447 pounds of paper, would be an unblushing subsidy. In the mean time all the balance of foreign-mail service, which comprises almost the entire amount of that service, is relegated to the House appropriation for foreign mails, namely, $375,000.

How the extravagant bounty of $800,000 a year for the transmission of 469,468 pounds of mail to the countries south of us and across the Pacific would cause their inhabitants to buy our manufactured products, when they can buy them elsewhere cheaper than we will sell them for, is a mystery that can not be explained.

Perhaps a sense of exalted admiration for the immense sums donated to a few vessels by this Government might cause them to make the sacrifice, but that can scarcely be considered human nature.

The following table will show how exports of merchandise from the United States to Brazil have scarcely increased for twenty years, and how our imports from Brazil have rapidly advanced, in face of our protective tariff.

[From report of Central and South American Commissioners.]

The following statement shows the value of merchandise imported from and exported to Brazil during the twenty years from 1865 to 1884, inclusive:

Total for twenty years	145,994,246	724,014,250	870,008,496

Excess of imports, $579,020,004.

It would require an Oriental imagination and the highest order of the poetic temperament to suppose a subsidy for mail service to the vessels on that line would have reversed the figures or affected the result.

When the sea carriage was ample to import so liberally, the same means were at hand to export as much or more. They would not buy our merchandise because they could purchase elsewhere at lower rates. They preferred going further and faring better. This a democratic administration! It has not recommended such a measure as this, and I do not think it could approve of it.

The postal system was created for the transmission of mails at a fair compensation. It is a perversion of it to make it a medium of distributing bounties for any purpose. In his annual report the present Postmaster-General says, speaking of the foreign service:

No exigency exists for the establishment of any new lines to carry the mails. Those now on the sea as common carriers are sufficient for the present needs of the foreign-mail service. They appear to have maintained themselves for years without Government bounty in profitable pursuit of their business.

Mr. Chairman, the people whom it is my honor to represent here are almost wholly agricultural, and for twenty years have struggled hard against the tyranny of adverse circumstances and have felt keenly the marked advantages that aggregated and corporate wealth has enjoyed at the expense of the farming classes and the burden of a high protective tariff system. Many of them have seen wealth walk out and poverty walk in. They saw the one depart almost without a murmur, and received the other without a sigh, and have bravely maintained the struggle for existence to this good hour. They are loyal to the Government, and none would more glory in its prowess and progress than they, but they would have its blessings descend on all alike. They favor no subsidies; they want simply an equal chance with all other pursuits; they ask no bounty or protective tariff for themselves, nor do they favor the same for the sake of others. They insist on the lowest possible amount of taxation, falling lightest on the necessaries of life, and a government justly and economically administered.

The war being over, they want peace, and not a fruitless war of words and bitter recriminations. They would banish all sectional animosity, so that throughout our great Republic—

> Good-will between us like the palm may flourish,
> And peace its wheaten garland wear.

To these convictions I give my cordial approbation.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the proposition sent to us by the Senate is a most extraordinary one in any aspect in which it may be viewed. It is simply a proposition on the part of the Senate that we shall make a donation out of the public Treasury of $740,000 per annum to certain ship-builders in this country, the chief of whom is Mr. John Roach. During the last fiscal year we had the mail carried on the line now proposed to be subsidized at a cost of $60,000. They were glad to get it at $60,000. They made money by carrying it at $60,000. They are glad to get the same amount of freight to carry under their special-dispatch charge, which is about 9½ cents a pound, and they would have made $52,000 by carrying the mail at that rate.

They carried 548,000 pounds of American mails on those lines for $60,000, and notwithstanding they carried it last year at that rate we now propose to pay them $800,000 for the same service. They are glad to get freight to carry at 80 cents per 100 pounds, eight-tenths of a cent per pound. On all the waters of the earth ships are now carrying freight, hunting for it, glad to get it, at that rate for like distances, and the owners are making profit by it. If they were not their ships would be lying up at the docks. At that rate we would pay less than $5,000 for the carriage of this 548,000 pounds of mail matter, but the Postmaster-General is willing to pay them the sea and inland postage, which is about $98,000, double what we pay the foreign lines for carrying our mails, for we only pay them sea postage, while the Department is willing to pay these lines both sea and inland postage. Now, why is it that we are asked to pay out this vast amount of money when we can get our mails carried faster and better and in greater security by paying $60,000?

Gentlemen say it is not a subsidy. I say it is a donation outright, without any compensation to the public Treasury, without any compensation to public commerce, without any compensation to the people of the United States in any respect whatever. But it is said that this is to be done in the interest of extending our foreign commerce. When did the gentlemen who are proposing this subsidy become so much in love with the extension of our foreign commerce? This proposition comes from those who have been breaking down our foreign commerce, who have always talked about finding home markets for our home produce, and who have denounced every proposition to extend our commerce to foreign countries as an emanation of the British brain, as a reflection of British sentiment, and the advocacy of British policy here. But whenever it is proposed to unlock the doors of the public Treasury to take a large sum of money that has been wrung by hard taxation from an oppressed and plundered people and throw it into the lap of John Roach, and Cramp & Sons, and some others of these ship-builders, then all at once these gentlemen became enamored of foreign commerce.

We heard a few days ago a lecture delivered by a gentleman on this floor upon the subject of economy. He told us that the people were calling a halt and were demanding that we should reduce taxation. That exhortation to economy was delivered upon a little bill proposing to expend a few thousand dollars; but when we have before us a proposition to spend $800,000, the same gentleman who then lectured this House in favor of stopping expenditures from the public Treasury and reducing taxation comes forward and lends the benefit of his counsel and his aid to this proposition to spend $800,000 for the foreign mail service.

Mr. HEWITT. Does the gentleman refer to me?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT. I object to a subsidy; I am against it.

Mr. MILLS. Then I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HEWITT. Certainly you did not.

Mr. MILLS. Is the gentleman opposed to the Senate amendment?

Mr. HEWITT. I oppose the Senate amendment, and shall vote against it.

Mr. MILLS. Is the gentleman opposed to paying any more for this service than the sea and inland postage?

Mr. HEWITT. I am opposed to paying any more than the value of the service. I propose to pay what it is worth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it is said that the measure now under consideration will benefit our foreign commerce. It is said that our fathers subsidized vessels from 1850 to 1860. It is said that England has subsidized steamship lines; and it is true. It is said that her commerce has been extending and strengthening ever since she began the subsidy system. But, sir, this growth of England's commerce has had no reference whatever to subsidy. The commerce of England, it is true, grew while she was giving large sums for her foreign-mail service; and so did ours while we were making similar payments. But why was it? There is a vast distinction, which must be drawn here in order to understand this question properly. The people of the United States between 1850 and 1860 were carrying out a policy looking to free commerce and trade with the world. They were breaking down the walls that had existed between themselves and the people of foreign countries. They were propagating their trade in every possible way.

England was pursuing the same policy. She was negotiating treaties with all the powers of the earth, even the petty princes of Africa, in order that she might extend her trade to all peoples, civilized, half-civilized, and savage; she sought to remove every obstruction to trade; she sent her consuls to every country to protect her trade; she negotiated treaties for the abolition of the old doctrine that in time of war goods carried under an enemy's flag are to be considered as the goods of the enemy, and through her influence neutral goods were secured under an enemy's flag. She has bent all her energies to banish privateering from the ocean, and to secure in every way she could the commerce of the world against all dangers and all hinderances as it moved toward its markets.

Having removed all the hindering causes, she then began to push her commerce everywhere. Her manufaturers said to Parliament, "There are some people in South America whose trade we want. Help us procure it." Parliament responded by sending a line of steamships to South America. Her manufacturers sent out agents on these lines, and said to them, "See what goods those people want—what sort of hats and pantaloons and vests they wear; study their tastes and report to us. We will manufacture goods to send to them, and in exchange, we will take their wool and their copper, bring them to our markets, manufacture them, and send them over the world." But here you are saying, "We will not have the wool and copper of Peru and Chili; we will not have the things that they wish to exchange for our productions." At the same time you propose to pour money from the Treasury into the pockets of John Roach, while you exclude from this country the goods which these South American nations would gladly exchange for ours. That is the proposition you make, and yet you talk about extending commerce!

In order to extend commerce the first thing you must do is to remove the barriers which exclude the commodities that other nations desire to exchange for ours. When you have leveled these obstructions it will then be time enough for you to devise means to push your commerce to foreign countries by ocean lines of steamers. I do not know but that it may be wise then to do it if the demands of commerce itself do not put vessels on the line. But first you must throw open the gateways to this country and let the commerce of other countries come in. Commerce is two-sided. It takes two men to make a trade, and it takes two countries to make a trade. You must be willing to accept what other nations send you as well as desirous to force them to take what you send.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me a question?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, my friend has spoken several times on this subject.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman maintain that in these days trade is barter, and that we can obtain trade only by giving away our markets? Do not the facts point the other way? Do we not now sell our goods to South America either directly or via Europe?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes; we do a little trade of all sorts with South America. But if we were willing to take the wool of South American countries, they would be more willing to take our manufactured goods. If New England would manufacture goods to suit the tastes of the people of South America—manufacture them as our consuls have told us repeatedly those people want them manufactured, and not manufacture goods for Venezuela according to the tastes of the people of Boston, and if we were willing to take what they have to give in exchange, then we should have trade, and trade without any subsidy.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I know how distasteful the word "subsidy" is to many of the American people. And I also know that there has not been for years a railroad constructed in America without the aid of either national or local subsidies, and often with the most beneficial results to the whole people.

Scarcely a furnace, forge, or factory of any kind or character has been erected for years in any part of the country without the aid of local subsidies.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been and is being paid annually by the Government for the encouragement of agriculture, and but few can be found who will deny the propriety, if not the necessity, of such Government aid to this great and important branch of national industry.

Subsidies are freely and intelligently voted in aid of educational interest by the nation, the States, counties, and cities.

Other countries, with the products of which ours come in contact and competition, have aided by subsidies their commercial appliances so far that if individual enterprise is left to cope unaided with these, they must be driven out in the unfair contest.

I can discern no reason why, as a people, we should aid by subsidies every creative or other industry down to tide water, and then become alarmed at the word subsidy, reverse our policy, and leave our mails and commerce to be driven from the seas.

The national thought has been directed to the subject of production too long to the exclusion of the equally important one of finding a market for these products.

I regret somewhat that this question should be attached to the Post-Office appropriation bill, as I should prefer to vote directly for the proposition, pure and simple, of stimulating American ship-building and American commerce by Government aid to the ends that new markets may be sought out for our surplus products and American lines of transportation to carry it there.

I hold to the opinion that our people can cope successfully with the people of any other country on earth in the battle of life when placed on an equal footing; but that they can not do so when their competitors are fostered and protected by government aid. Therefore I will give my vote for this amendment as a slight step toward the grounds that we should assume, that it is the first duty of the American Congress to take care of the interest of the American people, even though the people and interests of other nations should languish.

If I believed in the theories of free trade I would vote against this amendment, but as a protectionist of American producers and the American system I must support it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, the master of the French revolution, in reply to an opponent, once thundered from the tribune that "words were things." The discussion which this amendment has provoked is only another illustration of the profound truth contained in that reply. A simple proposition to pay an adequate sum for a service rendered is denounced as a subsidy, and men grow happy and rub their hands with glee, thanking God that they are not subsidists. I remember, after the little unpleasantness over the bill of my distinguished friend from Illinois, just two years ago, a dissatisfied constituent of mine said that he was done with me because I was a protectionist; and when a friend of mine asked him what a protectionist was he said he did not know. The word stood him instead of an idea; and if I had been denounced at the time, or stabbed with the same fatal epithet with which Daniel O'Connell drew the life-blood of the old fish-woman, as a parallelopipedon, it would have served just as well.

Now, sir, words do not appal me unless they have back of them ideas and principles at which conscience may justly take offense.

If the charge so freely bandied here that this is a subsidy means that we who advocate this amendment are about to vote away the people's money for an improper object or to waste it in a fruitless attempt to revive the languishing carrying trade of the country, then I propose to seriously examine the charge and discuss the foundation upon which it rests. If nothing more is meant by it than the vague insinuation of an ill-defined word, I shall not attempt to beat the empty air in search of an imaginary enemy.

What is this proposition?

First. That going and coming the steam carrier of the mail flying the American flag between this country and foreign ports may receive for a stated period a compensation not exceeding 50 cents per nautical mile traveled. This is to be arranged by contract.

Second. If such a contract can not be agreed upon, then the Postmaster-General may provide for an expeditious foreign ocean mail service by American steamers for such period and at such rates of compensation as may be just, not to exceed, however, the limit of 50 cents a mile. For this purpose the sum of $800,000 is appropriated by the Senate amendment, and this amendment is further restricted by the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to divide this sum by applying one-half to existing lines and reserving the other half for new companies that may come into existence. Here then is a proposition that up to the limit of 50 cents a mile the Postmaster-General may contract for this service. If he can get it done for half of the sum, there is nothing in the amendment which requires him to give the whole of it. The language of the amendment is not that these American steamship lines shall have in any event 50 cents a mile. That sum is fixed as the maximum limit beyond which the rate of compensation shall not pass.

But then it is said that it amounts to the same thing, because there are no competitions, and that the proposal therefore in each case will be to carry for not less than the maximum rate.

Well, then what follows? If the Postmaster-General is not willing to let a long contract, for three or five years, at 50 cents a mile or less, he may say to those companies. I want to pay you what is just. I recognize the fact that you are entitled to something more for this service than the mere weight of mail or number of letters or parcels would entitle you to. I think distance should be taken into consideration. I think the hazards of the sea, the magnitude of the capital required for the construction, equipment, and management of a large steamship, the item of marine insurances, and the unprofitableness of the journey, as contrasted with other routes, drawing tribute from a hundred way stations, ought all to be taken into the account. Nay, I will go a step further, and to be perfectly fair with you I will admit into this estimate another consideration, which some of our intensely practical friends, who can see no merit in anything except a pinching economy, would exclude. I will even say, in this bargain, that I would rather have an American ship carry the United States mail than a foreign bottom. I would rather pay a little more to an American vessel, if it was only for the sentiment of retaining the poor privileges of carrying the correspondence affecting our foreign commerce, which now unhappily sails the seas under other flags than our own. Taking all these things into the account, I will pay you 30, 40, or 50 cents a mile, as the case may be.

Is that an improper waste of money? Is there anything dishonorable or disgraceful in such an arrangement? Why, sir, it has been demonstrated over and over again that the outlay of some of those companies for delivering the mails is greater than the income they receive from sea and inland postage. Is it not dishonorable and disgraceful for a great Government like this to be a pensioner upon the bounty of these steamship lines? Why do they carry your mail at all? It certainly is not for the profit they make out of it.

The United States is in the attitude of a beggar. It says to these carriers: "As long as you are going on the voyage you might as well take my mail; it will not cost you much to do it; in some cases you may even make enough from the postage to pay your actual outlay in handling and delivering the bags. Do you not think it would be churlish in you, not to say unpatriotic, to sail without discharging a small neighborly act like this? You ought to remember, too, that prior to April 1, 1884, I would not permit you to clear unless you agreed to take the mail, and now that I have released you from that obligation and have thrown myself upon your generosity entirely, is it too much to claim some little consideration in return for such a friendly service? I am not asking you to go out of your way; of course if that was the case it would make a difference, but I am simply saying that as long as you have to go to Cuba, to Japan, to Brazil, to Venezuela, Mexico, Central and South America, and you have plenty of room in your vessel, you might as well take the mail. It is not very heavy; it will not take up much space; it will not incommode you very much, and really the compensation, though small, is quite enough for the service. I give you 5 cents for every letter, this being a bargain regulated by tare. The bag is excluded as gross; besides, wrappers, under our new tariff, do not count in the valuation. A thousand letters at 5 cents apiece is $50, all of which you earn for carrying a small leather or canvas bag that may be stuffed away in some corner of the ship and not be so much as seen, let alone felt. Now you charge nothing for carrying a passenger's trunks that will take up twice as much room, will weigh five times as much, and will be correspondingly difficult to place and to handle. Instead of being stingy with you, you see I am really munificent—absolutely profuse, ridiculously extravagant."

This argument was too strong for most of the lines, but it seems from the Postmaster-General's report that there was one recalcitrant company at San Francisco which was not so responsive to either patriotism or reason, and boldly refused to carry the mail for the princely sum of 5 cents a letter. The head of the Post-Office Department, who had first invented an ingenious method of getting rid of offensive partisans, the chief merit of which consisted in the secrecy by which the operation was to be conducted, bethought him of the striking analogy between the passenger's trunk and the United States mail, and with one of those sudden and lightning-like inspirations which only occur to true genius, hit upon an expedient to rid the country of its postal matter with the same secrecy and dispatch with which he has gotten rid of the fourth-class postmasters. According to his own account, he telegraphed to the agent of the Post-Office Department at San Francisco to buy a ticket to Panama for passage on the steamer then about to sail, and then to take the United States mail on board as his personal baggage. He argued, and fairly, that each passenger was entitled to so much baggage; that the mail in this instance did not exceed the prescribed weight, or if it did the difficulty could be overcome by paying a little more for extra baggage.

This the agent would have been compelled to do at any rate, because it is to be presumed that postal clerks, while they are knocked about a good deal and may possibly in this way become somewhat indifferent to comfort and appearance, would still find difficulty in supplying their personal wants out of the United States mail, even if it were permissible to open the pouch. In other words, it is to be presumed that the agent in this case would have a trunk or valise of his own in which he would carry a few articles of personal attire, and unless this trunk or valise was big enough to hold his clothes and the mail bag too, there would be extra baggage to pay for, and it would be difficult to claim that the contents of the United States mail constituted his personal effects. It is fair to presume that the extra charge would have to be paid upon the pouch rather than upon the trunk, always assuming of course that the mail bag was not in the trunks.

As the whole scheme was one of economy and secrecy, as in fact there is little or no merit in the invention unless the company was to be outwitted by a shrewd maneuver on the part of the Postmaster-General, I strongly incline to the belief, although his report is silent upon this part of the case, that the mail was to be concealed like a stowaway in the trunks and so passed as the baggage of the agent, reducing the actual cost of transportation to the price paid for his ticket. I do not know why the system has not been generally introduced, unless it is for the reason given by the Postmaster-General that the fares earned by the companies for the carriage of passengers with United States mails attached were not equal to sea and inland postage. But it would seem that there ought to be some honor connected with this mixed transportation of the individual and the sovereignty of the nation which should carry with it an increased fare and the charge for an ordinary passenger. A man traveling with the United States mail as a part of his personal effects would naturally receive more consideration than a common traveler and ought in justice to pay for the honor.

The Forty-eighth Congress, in my opinion, by what is known as the subsidy amendment, intended that the Postmaster-General should apply the money appropriated by that amendment for the purpose of paying our American steamships some adequate sum for the service rendered. The whole debate shows that the authority conferred upon him was not directory but mandatory. He has seen fit to put a different construction upon the act, and as a result of his conclusion has been forced into resorting to an expedient to escape the consequences of his folly which I do not care to characterize.

The United States mail is not baggage, nor is it freight, and any rate of compensation for its carriage either upon sea or land based upon this naked idea misconceives the nature of the service rendered.

I think that the old colored mail messenger in Virginia had a much truer and keener appreciation of the character and dignity of this service than the Postmaster-General. When a white man kicked him as he was carrying the mail down the platform toward his house, he turned around on his assailant and said: "Look here, boss, do you know when you is a kicking me that you're kicking the whole United States?" There is a decency and propriety in this case easy to perceive but difficult to analyze, which requires that the compensation to be paid should not be determined by the ordinary rules which govern the transportation of freights or mere merchandise.

Let a man consider but a moment the immense difference between a sack of flour and a sack of mail matter. One goes to the wharf in an open dray and is pitched by the stevedore into the hold of the vessel. The other comes to the wharf in a closed wagon with the symbols of the United States painted upon its sides. It contains matter which from the moment it has left the writer's hands has become sacred in the eye of the law, and from the drop-box to the point of delivery passes through such hands only as have been consecrated for the service. But when you go a step further and analyze the contents of the bags the difference is still more striking. The mail-bag is an epitome of human life. The social and business intercourse of nations is represented there as well as the sovereignty of the country.

It is simply ridiculous to say that supposing the flour-bag and mail-bag to be equal in weight and dimensions, and both to be carried the same distance, that therefore the same rate of compensation should be paid for each. And yet the proposition is not ridiculous if weight, space occupied, and distance traveled are the only considerations which are to determine what shall be paid for the carriage of the mail.

Apart from building up our merchant marine and establishing new commercial relations with the countries south of us I believe in paying a fair compensation for our foreign ocean steamship mail service, and I know that the rate now paid is not fair, and in some cases instead of being a benefit to the companies is an actual burden. The coastwise, the river, and star-route service are all compensated upon the basis of the considerations to which I have referred, and surely if a difference is to be recognized it ought to be made in favor of the solitary carrier of the sea who beats his tempestuous way along an untraveled road toward an uncertain port. [Applause.]

When Mr. FINDLAY had spoken five minutes the gavel fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCADOO. If the Chairman will recognize me I will yield my time to the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. But five minutes remain for that side. If no gentleman claims that time the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BRUMM. I claim it.

Mr. FINDLAY. I tried hard to get into the general debate, but had not an opportunity. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. LAWLER. I yield my time to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FINDLAY resumed and concluded the remarks printed above.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is intended to reduce the proposal of the Senate amendment one-half, from eight to four hundred thousand dollars. As interpreted by the gentleman himself the expenditure of this sum is left discretionary with the Postmaster-General. The exercise of such discretion ought not to be imposed on that officer; he does not want it, and to vest it in him after the controversy which has grown out of this question is to again subject him to the accusation that the discretion has been abused.

This is a responsibility which belongs to Congress; and, as I understand the proposition of the gentleman from New York, it requires the expenditure of the money at any rate not exceeding 50 cents per mile. The limitation that "the Postmaster-General shall as far as possible cause" the mails to be carried, will, in my opinion, leave the Postmaster-General without the supposed or intended discretion and make it his duty to spend the money.

The Postmaster-General, charged with the conduct of our United States mails on land and sea, at home and abroad, estimates the cost of carrying our mails going to and coming from foreign countries at $375,000 and asks for that sum for that branch of the mail service. This is $42,000 more than was expended last year or in any one year in the last eight for the same purpose.

The bill which the House sent to the Senate appropriating the $375,000 asked for this foreign mail service comes back to us with a Senate amendment adding $800,000 for the alleged purpose of securing more frequent and faster mails from this country to China and Japan, Australia, Mexico, Central and South America, in American ships.

This annual sum of $800,000 is to continue for five years, and at the end of five years will have cost us $4,000,000.

This part of the foreign mail service is now done for not more than $60,000 and has been done for much less than $60,000 a year in all of the last eight years, and the proposed increase will require us to pay in five years $4,000,000 for carrying mails which on the basis of existing law would be carried for $300,000.

The subsidy, bounty, or encouragement system in a modified or in some form is with us thirty-five or more years old. If calling it subsidy is objectionable to anybody I will say that this plan of giving more for carrying mails on sea than the service can be obtained for with the alleged purpose of building ships, opening up or creating foreign trade or foreign commerce, is more than thirty-five years old. And old as it is, it never built a ship, bettered trade, or made a market. It did lead to some corrupt practices which caused it to die several years ago. There was an attempt to resurrect it last Congress, and now here it is again.

The attempted revival by last Congress of this system or policy was defeated by the Postmaster-General in the judicious exercise of the discretion then left with him. This too without hinderance or detriment to the foreign mail service and with mindful regard to the preference and advantage which under the law he may give American ship-owners. To these he said, as disclosed in the correspondence: "Carry the foreign mails, and you shall receive sea and inland postage or nearly three times the amount for which foreign ship-owners are ready to render this service." This the owners of ships carrying our flag refused, and would not allow American mails to be carried on American ships except upon their own terms. These terms they failed to get, because of the official courage and integrity of Postmaster-General Vilas.

Now they are here flying the American flag and prescribing their own terms in this Senate amendment, which this time leaves the Postmaster-General without that official discretion which before enabled him to protect the public interest and the public Treasury. That duty is now ours.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am next on the list, and I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, the advocates of this Senate amendment, so far as appears from the discussion, insist on its adoption more for commercial reasons than for the purposes expressed in the amendment itself. They complain of our unwillingness to pay more than the sum needed to secure the service. They insist that it is unfair and unjust in us not to pay as much or equal rates for carrying mails to alien people in foreign countries as we pay for supplying our own people in our own country with mail facilities.

Among others the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] made this criticism of the opposition to this measure. Without intending it the gentleman furnished the answer to his own argument when he said that we carried the mails to our distant frontiers at a cost greatly disproportionate to the few people it found there.

This he correctly said was done to establish settlement, that cities and towns might be built and farms opened and cultivated. Sir, we do not send our mails at so great cost over the sea and to the frontier of other countries where we do not own or want to own a foot of land, nor would we plant colonies or settlements or build cities or make the homes of our people there. We are asked to emulate England, copy France, follow Germany, in the carrying and distribution of mails. This is what we have been doing for a century. We carry or pay for carrying the mails to our own people. Does England, France, Germany, or any European country do more except for hire?

When Great Britain subsidizes or hires a transatlantic ship she pays to send her mails to her territory in this hemisphere, North and South America, equal to our own, more than 3,600,000 square miles and 6,000,000 of her people—British subjects. When she pays a steamer to carry mails to Hong-Kong, China, and Japan, going by way of the Suez Canal, it carries her mails past and to more than a million of square miles of her territory and to over 200,000,000 of her subjects—five times as many people as she has at home.

When she sends them to Australia, if the ship goes down one side of Africa and back on the other it carries mail to two and one-half millions of her subjects, and passes nearly half a million square miles of her territory there (in Africa), and when the ship reaches Australia and Australasia she finds an empire thirty times larger than that we call Great Britain, and nearly four million of subjects, and those too largely her own children and their descendants. Gentlemen know, but forget for the purpose of this debate, that Great Britain, her territories, colonies, and dependencies cover one-seventh of the land surface of the earth.

When France carries mails across the Atlantic it is to her colonies in the West Indies and South America, where she has 40,000 square miles of territory and three hundred and seventy-five thousand people. When she pays to send her mails to Cochin China and neighbors, she finds 60,000 square miles of her territory and nearly eleven million subjects.

When she starts out to Australasia she carries her mails past and to 200,000 square miles of her colonies and over a million of subjects in Africa, and in Oceanica has dozens of islands and nearly ninety thousand subjects. In all her colonies and protected countries, France outside of France is nearly half a million square miles of land and twenty-one and one-half millions of people.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I will give the gentleman from Illinois part of my time.

Mr. MORRISON. I will try to take but little of it.

Germany, too, Mr. Chairman, grants large subsidies, having fallen upon this policy only in the last year, and why? Because she, too, has now embarked in the policy or scheme of colonization. Her people were leaving fatherland and coming to ours—she tried protection without avail; wages refused to rise with protection. Her people would not stay in Germany; she determined to plant them in German colonies; she has territory on the west coast of Africa and on the east.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] held up Germany as a new convert to the subsidy faith and as an example for us. She, he said, paid or was going to pay $1,000,000 a year for carrying her mails to Australia. The gentleman from New Jersey hardly forgets that Germany has acquired part of New Guinea and the Bismarck Archipelago, and now has territory alongside Australia ten times as large as his State of New Jersey and with 300,000 population. The United States pays more than $1,000,000 for carrying mails to a like area or equal extent of territory.

No, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the example or policy of Germany, or of any other country of Europe, which justifies us in entering upon this questionable scheme. Everything in the history and practices of our own country forbids it.

[After Mr. MORRISON had spoken five minutes the hammer fell. Before he resumed the following proceedings took place:

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am next on the list, and I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. When the chairman has taken the names of members who desire to speak under the five-minute rule on the affirmative or on the negative side of the question before the House and a member places himself, we will say for instance on the affirmative side——

Mr. SPRINGER. We will give you leave to print your question in the RECORD. [Laughter.] I yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. My question is this: When a gentleman places himself on the affirmative side of the issue and speaks some fifteen minutes ostensibly on that side, and it then turns out that he is really on the negative side, he having, whether unintentionally or by trick or fraud, succeeded in occupying fifteen minutes of time in that way, I desire to know whether it is proper that that time should still be charged to the affirmative side, or should it be charged to the negative side of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not remember the whole of the gentleman's question. The time on that side of the House is exhausted. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is recognized.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not interrupt the gentleman from Illinois who is now on the floor.

Mr. BRUMM. I insist upon a decision on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. BRUMM. The chairman is mistaken. I wish to correct the chairman in this, that I do not——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can appeal if he likes.

Mr. BRUMM. No; I will not appeal. I simply wish to correct the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. BRUMM. You will not permit me to make a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. No. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON resumed and finished his remarks as above.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise only to direct attention to the curious spectacle presented in this House in reference to a proposition involving a possible expenditure of $4,000,000. This proposition is urged upon us without a word of administrative suggestion or approval. Is there anything in the message of the President of the United States directing attention to the necessity of expending this money? Do we find in the report of the Postmaster-General any suggestion in favor of this scheme? Not only does the Postmaster-General fail to recommend it, but every word he has uttered in relation to this subject has been a protest against such an appropriation. The proposition comes to us out of the usual course. No estimate for it has been submitted; no reference to the subject comes to us through the usual channel of communication, the Speaker of this House. This provision has emanated from the other branch of Congress—a body which for years has been contending against the right of this House to put upon a general appropriation bill any provision legislative in its character.

This expenditure, so far as justified at all, is supported only on the broad ground that it is going to revive American commerce. But, sir, our experience for thirty years and more has shown that every effort of this character to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States for any such purpose has been a failure. No, gentlemen, the revival of American shipping is not to be promoted by subsidy, by any appropriations of money in the manner now proposed. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] who has urged this argument as to the revival of American commerce will himself admit that this appropriation, if it does not accomplish any such result, is a waste of the public money. Judging from the past, I do not believe it will accomplish anything in that direction. Hence I think it a waste of the public money, and I believe we are utterly without justification in making any such appropriation.

Before taking my seat I wish to give expression to the hope that upon this proposition each of us may range himself on that side of the question where he expects to stay to the end. [Applause.] I remember very well when an appropriation of this kind, almost identical with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to-day, was voted into the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HEWITT rose.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I think they look to about the same result.

Mr. HEWITT. "The gentleman from New York" differs with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. We often differ, and I am glad of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. That is encouraging.

Mr. RANDALL. The proposition to which I refer was put into the Post-Office appropriation bill at 3 o'clock in the morning in the closing hours of the last session, and that result was finally accomplished by no change perhaps of the votes which members had cast upon the subject, there being but few, if any, such changes. That result would not have been reached except by reason of the absenteeism of members. And in concluding I wish to invoke every man here to so record himself on this proposition that he will not find it necessary to absent himself thereafter. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from New York, as I understand his explanation of it, is substantially the same as the proposition of the bill for the current year.

Mr. HEWITT rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield.

Mr. HEWITT. I want to correct the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I insist the gentleman has no right to interrupt me without my consent.

Mr. HEWITT. Then do not misrepresent me.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not misrepresented you. I am in the debate giving my own construction, and the gentleman has no right to interrupt me.

Mr. HEWITT. The gentleman has misrepresented me. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I am here construing this amendment as I apprehend it.

Mr. HEWITT. Ah, that is another thing.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman must know that is what I am doing.

Mr. HEWITT. But you said I construed it so. [Laughter].

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I take the gentleman on that line. The proposition in the bill of this year is one of discretion, but the gentleman in referring to this amendment has claimed it is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. How much better off is he now?

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at this proposition. The bill of this year is certainly one of discretion. It has been so held by the Department. It provided there should not be exceeding 50 cents a mile. This bill has that, but it does not stop there. That of the present year uses the language "is hereby authorized;" and what I am saying is my judgment and not the gentleman's as to the true construction.

And the Postmaster-General shall as far as possible—

Language directory—

cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places respectively in American built and registered steamships, provided—provided the same can be carried for a reasonable compensation to be by him determined.

The Postmaster-General has already regarded sea and inland postage as reasonable compensation, but the gentleman indicates from the disposition of this House and of Congress, if his amendment be adopted, it may be as high as 50 cents a mile. Therefore all the moral power of this House which that language can convey is that it is not to compel the Postmaster-General against his avowed opinion as to reasonable compensation to use a sum of money which he declares he does not need. [Applause.]

There can be no mistake about this matter. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] voted for the $400,000 proposition last winter. The gentleman from New York in my judgment is advocating a worse proposition to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. The situation is singular. Last winter at the dead hour of night, under the stress of the statement we should have an extra session, under the declaration the Senate would not consent to the passage of the Post-Office appropriation bill unless this was done, the amendment was placed on the bill. Time passed along, the Democratic administration came into power and put the ban of condemnation on it. That is all done to-day. The policy of the administration on this subject can not be mistaken; but the Senate of the United States, in violation of the principle of not putting legislation on appropriation bills, for which they have time and again arraigned this House, seek to force on that administration a Republican policy. There is an audacity, a boldness about it, that needs to be met by the courage of the men in power. [Great applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask who is legislating for the country, the Postmaster-General or——

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield. The gentleman knows I do not wish to be disturbed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Very well; I will not disturb you.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as this question is concerned no gentleman who does not want to be deceived can be deceived. The issue is clean and square. For one, as a Democrat, I am ready to stand responsible for it here and all over the land in the coming elections. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted, and the question recurs on the amendment to the amendment by the gentleman from Tennessee Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to Mr. BURROWS's amendment the following:

"Provided also, That $100,000 of said $400,000 shall be applied by the Postmaster-General to the transportation of foreign mails by existing steamers or lines running from New Orleans to ports in Central and South America, and to ports in the West India Islands, and $100,000 of said $800,000 shall be applied by the Postmaster-General to the establishment of new lines from the city of New Orleans to said ports in said islands and in Central and South America for the transportation of said mails."

Mr. BURROWS. I suggest the gentleman's amendment comes in later, and not as an amendment to mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be voted on as read.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on Mr. BURROWS's amendment; which was read, as follows:

After line 113 add:

"Provided, That not exceeding $400,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended in payment of existing American steamship lines for the transportation of foreign mails according to the schedules heretofore in force; and that so much of the balance as may be required shall be expended in increasing the frequency of the postal service of such steamship lines and in the establishment of postal service by American built and registered steamships between the United States and such ports of the foreign countries herein named, not now connected with the United States by American steamship lines, as the Postmaster-General may select, including Buenos Ayres and Montevideo."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 142. [Applause.]

So the amendment was rejected.

After $800,000, line 105, insert:

"Of which amount $200,000, or so much thereof as may be required, shall be expended for the establishment of a mail line from a Gulf port to a port or ports in South and Central America; and the remainder of said $800,000 shall be expended in payment of established lines as hereinafter provided."

Strike out lines 120, 121, 122, and 123.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute for the Senate amendment moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

The Clerk read as follows:

To secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of mails to Brazil; the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies, China and Japan, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be needed; and the Postmaster-General shall, as far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places respectively in American built and registered steamships, provided the same can be carried for a reasonable compensation, to be by him determined, but not exceeding the rate of 50 cents per nautical mile for the distance usually traveled in the most direct and feasible course between the terminal points hereinbefore specified.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I move the following amendment to the Senate amendment:

After the word steamships, on line 107, insert the following:

"Except the Pacific Mail Steamship Company."

The CHAIRMAN. That will be first voted on.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurrred on Mr. HEWITT'S substitute.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 139. [Applause.]

So the substitute was not adopted.

Mr. HEWITT. Is it in order to ask for a vote by yeas and nays in the House?

Mr. RANDALL. It does not go to the House, and there will be no opportunity to vote on it.

The Senate amendment was then non-concurred in.

The committee informally rose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan at Alpena, Mich.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 290) for the relief of Davidson Dickson and others;

A bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after three months service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and the dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein;

A bill (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations; and

A bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882.

The committee resumed its session.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT moved that the committee rise and report the bill and Senate amendments to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason the Chair did not make longer colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Brumm] as to time was because, the time being limited, it would be taken out of the time of gentlemen to whom it had been promised. And in point of fact the complaint made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the time yielded to the gentleman from New York was unjust. He had but seventeen minutes in all. Five of that be obtained from the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hiscock]. That would leave twelve to be divided. The time consumed by the Democrats was sixty minutes, and the time by the Republicans sixty-seven minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT'S motion was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hammond reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union having had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry recommendations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question on the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the recommendations of the committee be concurred in in gross except as regards the sixth amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that there is more than one amendment on which there is an adverse recommendation.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then let them be acted upon separately.

On the first and second amendments the Committee of the Whole recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the third amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in was agreed to.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the fourth amendment be non-concurred in was agreed to.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the fifth amendment of the Senate be concurred in with an amendment adding the words, "to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General," was agreed to.

The sixth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil: the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies; China and Japan, $800,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with the owners of such American steamships, for a term of not less than three years nor more than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points, in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth. And if he shall be unable to make such contracts for any of such respective services, he shall, so far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places, respectively, in the best and most expeditious manner practicable, in American vessels, and for a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the rate aforementioned.

The Postmaster-General, if in his judgment it be practicable, shall contract for a semi-monthly mail service between the ports of New York and New Orleans, alternately, and the port of Rio de Janeiro, under the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole is to non-concur.

Mr. BLOUNT. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. It has been suggested to me that the question on which we are to vote is not fully understood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it. The report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is to non-concur. Those who desire to non-concur will vote "yea;" those who desire to concur will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 80, not voting 64; as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 21, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOAR. I think that motion should be made when the Senate is full and a quorum is present. There is no objection to it so far as I know, but the habit of doing this just after the Journal is read, when but few Senators know what is done, I think is a bad one. I shall insist on a quorum being present when the motion is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MILLER. A call of the yeas and nays on the motion would secure a quorum.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I make no further opposition to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. A number of Senators have since come in.

Mr. HALE. I renew the motion I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

VISITOR TO WEST POINT.

Mr. HAMPTON. During my absence the other day I was appointed as a Visitor to the West Point Military Academy. While I should take very great pleasure in discharging that honorable duty, owing to the illness of a member of my family I am most reluctantly compelled to ask to be excused and that another be appointed in my place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks to be excused from service as a Visitor to the West Point Academy. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator is excused. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] in his place.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of Utica and Whitestown, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the bill providing for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEWELL presented petitions of Patrons of Husbandry of Moorestown and Medford, in the State of New Jersey, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of Patrons of Husbandry of Course's Landing, New Jersey, and a memorial of Patrons of Husbandry of New Jersey, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented memorials of Granges No. 334, No. 734, and No. 60, Patrons of Husbandry of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Granges No. 60 and No. 334, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of dairymen and butter-makers of Lathrop and Hopbottom, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and taxing them 10 cents per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of general service clerks and messengers employed at San Antonio, Tex., praying for the passage of House bill No. 7191, to provide for the enlistment and pay and to define the duties of general service clerks and messengers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHACE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to report an original bill and to accompany the bill with a report, and to ask that the report and the testimony which the committee append as a part of their report may be printed.

The bill (S. 2496) to amend title 60, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Rhode Island who reported this bill asked that the bill as reported, together with the report, might be printed in connection with the testimony which has already been taken by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed as a matter of course.

Mr. PLATT. We desire to have it printed with the testimony (there is a little testimony, not a great deal, which has been taken by the committee), so that it may all appear in one document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the testimony will be printed with the report.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1178) to amend title 60, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I will say to the Senate that I shall endeavor to procure action upon the bill on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia, has directed me to report the same back favorably and to ask for its present consideration.

A few days since the Senate passed a Senate bill substantially, though not precisely, the same. I ask for the present consideration of this bill, and if it is passed I shall then ask that the House be requested to return the Senate bill, so as to move its indefinite postponement.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee, who reported the bill, whether it provides sufficiently for the interests of legatees in a case where there may have been a change in the circumstances of the executor between the time of the making of the will and the death of the testator?

The bill provides, as I heard it read at the desk—I may not have comprehended fully its provisions—that there shall be, whenever a testator has so ordered, a bond only sufficient to secure the payment of the debts, unless after the appointment of the executor it appears that he is wasting or is likely to waste the estate, in which case he may be removed. Suppose a man makes such a will and dies twenty years after, and in the mean time the person whom he appoints executor has failed in business or become untrustworthy, so that the interest of legatees, or distributees if the whole estate is not left in legacies, is imperiled by intrusting such a person with the execution of the will with this small bond.

Ought there not to be a provision in this last section that whenever it shall appear to the court that the interests of the persons to whom the estate is to be distributed so require an additional bond shall be required? In many States the present regulation on this subject is that in a case where the testator has so ordered the bond is given in an amount sufficient to secure payment of debts and legacies.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator will find by carefully looking at the bill that it does give the court power to demand an additional bond whenever it is made to appear to the court that either legatees or creditors or any other persons interested are liable to suffer by reason of the misconduct, or misappropriation, or want of qualifications of the executor.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that this does not quite cover that case. In the first place, the bill provides that the bond, when the testator so requires, shall be in such penalty as is sufficient to secure the payment of the debts. Now, there may be no debts whatever, so that of course a mere nominal bond would be all that would be required in that case.

Then it further says that whenever any creditor or distributee or legatee "shall make it appear to the court that any executor who has given such bond only as is herein provided for is wasting the assets of the estate, or that the assets in the hands of such executor"—that is, the executor who has already given the bond and, of course, got his letters testamentary—"are in danger of being lost, wasted, or misappropriated, then, and in such case, the court shall have power to remove" him or require him to give an additional bond within a time named.

It seems to me that the case is unprovided for where the character or trustworthiness of the executor has changed between the time of making the will and the time of the death, which may very often happen, especially in the case of aged persons who do not observe what is going on, so that they do not change their wills. It seems to me there should be such a proviso as this:

Provided further, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the court that the circumstances of the estate or the executor have changed since the making of the will, so that the interests of any party require a further or additional bond, the court shall have power to order it.

Mr. HARRIS. After hearing the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts I am inclined to ask that the bill go upon the Calendar. I think the Senate bill a little more carefully guarded the point suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts than the House bill does. I will ask that it go upon the Calendar for the present, and I shall carefully look to the question suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, and may move the Senate bill as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say a word before the bill goes on the Calendar.

I wish that I may have an opportunity when this bill comes up again

(and I hope it will be agreeable to the Committee on the District of Columbia and to everybody else) to move an additional section which shall provide that any person may dispose of real estate in this District by will, which shall operate upon real estate acquired after the will is made, if the testator in his will says so. That is, if the testator says that he wishes to give to a certain person, a devisee, all the estate or any particular estate of which he may die seized in this District, the will shall operate to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a bill on the Calendar now from the committee covering that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that bill has got another and a disputable thing in it, I understand, while nobody would dispute this. One would hardly believe that by the law of this District every time a person changes his or her real estate—sells one piece and buys another—a previously existing will becomes entirely inoperative, and that a new will must be made in order to dispose of the newly acquired estate according to the wishes of the testator, although in the existing will he says in terms that he means to devise to his wife, or whoever it may be, all that he shall die seized or possessed of.

Mr. HOAR. You do not mean that the will becomes inoperative on what the testator owns at the time of making it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it becomes inoperative of course on that if he sold it and changed the estate; but if property is acquired after the making of the will, it is out of his power to provide for the disposition of it by a will made in advance.

Mr. HOAR. The first statement was that when a man acquired new real estate (it was an accidental misstatement) his will became entirely inoperative. I suppose the Senator meant that it was inoperative only as to the new property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Precisely.

Mr. HARRIS. It is operative as to previously acquired property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But not as to property subsequently acquired, although the will declares that the testator intends to give and does give all which he possesses and owns at the time of his death. I should not have thought it possible that that could be the law in this District or anywhere else, if a judge of the Supreme Court had not told me the other day incidentally that he carried a blank will in his pocket all the time. He said he bought a piece of real estate now and then and as he wished to make a particular disposition of it, as often as he got a piece of real estate he made out a new will. Of course such a state of the law is perfectly absurd, and I want to correct it on this bill so that we shall get through with this nuisance. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3257) for the relief of S. E. Scarborough; and

A bill (H. R. 7809) for the relief of Edwin Stevens.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich., and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks that the Committee on Pensions may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2449) for the relief of Thomas C. McElroy, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, it having been referred to the Committee on Pensions by inadvertence. If there be no objection, that order will be regarded as made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2497) to increase the pension of James Johnston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 2498) for the relief of Thomas Chambers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2499) for the relief of Benjamin Atwood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2500) to amend section 3622 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2501) granting a pension to Daniel Schock; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2502) granting a pension to Louise Paul; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 2503) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands and to reimburse and idemnify certain States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COKE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 66) granting the use of tents at encampment to be held in the State of Texas in the year 1886; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN KOUNS.

Mr. DOLPH. On the 14th of April I reported from the Committee on Claims adversely the bill (S. 897) for the relief of John Kouns, and it was indefinitely postponed. There were some voluminous papers on file and the claimant desires to withdraw them. He can not do so without leaving copies, unless the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill be reconsidered for that purpose. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the motion by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered for the purpose of withdrawing the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill named by him be reconsidered. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. DOLPH. The order being made, I now ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of John Kouns be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. DOLPH. I now ask that the question be put on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill had better remain on the Calendar. The Chair will inform the Senator that if the bill is now indefinitely postponed the claimant can not withdraw the papers under the rule, but if the bill is left on the Calendar he can do so before the matter is disposed of.

Mr. DOLPH. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. If in order, I move that the bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, and for other purposes, be made a special order for Monday next, the 24th instant. The bill is Order of Business 998, and it is to take the place of Order of Business 118 on the third page of the Calendar. The bill is a substitute for the bill on that subject reported at an early day and passed over to the Calendar under the ninth rule. It is a very important bill. The matter has been before Congress for many years, and bills have passed both branches of Congress.

Mr. SAWYER. Does the Senator propose that the consideration of the bill he has named shall interfere with the morning hour?

Mr. DOLPH. No; I simply ask to make it the special order for that day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill he has stated be made a special order. Is there objection?

Mr. SEWELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made at this time, it can not be done by motion until the Calendar is in order.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state that I gave notice a month ago that in a reasonable time, suiting the convenience of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], I should ask the Senate to take up what is known as the Fitz-John Porter bill. I shall object to any further special orders being made without taking a vote of the Senate on the question until I can have a time fixed for the consideration of that bill, and I give notice now that I shall ask the Senate to take it up immediately after the consideration of the pending special order, the bankruptcy bill.

PURCHASE OF BIERSTADT'S PAINTINGS.

Mr. HOAR and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is not yet in order. Are there further "concurrent or other resolutions?"

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the propriety and expediency of purchasing the paintings of "The Yellowstone Falls," "The Yellowstone Park," "The Giant Geyser," and "The Yosemite in Winter," by Bierstadt, now temporarily at the Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

HENRY C. MATTHEWS.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That all papers in the possession of the Committee on the District of Columbia, or of any member of that committee as such, relating to or concerning the nomination of Henry C. Matthews, of Albany, N. Y., to be recorder of deeds of the said District of Columbia, be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. That will go over.

Mr. HOAR. That is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order in open session.

Mr. MILLER. I shall object to the reception of that resolution.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe the proposition of the chairman of the committee was that the resolution should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

Mr. MILLER. I object to the reception of the resolution. It can not be received in open session.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It relates entirely to executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it is clear that the resolution is not in order now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It goes over until to-morrow, I take it.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 1405) to provide for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and of their effects upon the human system, in connection with the several divisions of the subject of physiology and hygiene, by the pupils in the public schools of the Territories and of the District of Columbia, and in the Military and Naval Academies, and Indian and colored schools in the Territories of the United States.

THE GENEVA AWARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. HOAR. I move, in pursuance of notice, to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6661) to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 5. That the amount which shall be paid out and distributed in payment and satisfaction of the judgments of the first and second class which are now existing as rendered by the said court against the Geneva award fund, and in payment of the expenses, salaries, and other outlays contemplated and provided for in this act, and in the act re-establishing the said court, approved June 5, 1882, shall be ascertained in the following manner: To the sum of $9,703,904.89, this being the amount of the said Geneva award fund remaining in the Treasury, as disclosed by the Treasury report of June 30, 1877, and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives dated April 22, 1884, shall be added the premium realized from the sale of certain bonds in which the said fund was invested, namely, the sum of $385,100.07, making $10,089,004.96, and to this sum shall further be added the estimated value of the said furniture and property, as provided for in section 4 of this act; and from the aggregate sum so ascertained shall be subtracted the estimated cost of the services and expenses provided for being estimated in section 4 of this act, and also the amount provided for in section 1 of this act, together with all the other expenses of the court; and from the amount so ascertained shall be further deducted the aggregate of the judgments of the first class which have already been paid, and the balance shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment of the judgments of the first class yet remaining unpaid, as provided in said act approved June 5, 1882, and the residue shall be paid out and distributed pro rata upon the judgments in favor of claimants of the second class, as provided in said last-named act. And the amounts so ascertained as aforesaid are, for the purpose of making the payment aforesaid, hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That in order to ascertain the total sum paid and to be paid from the Treasury in respect of the judgments of said court, the sum of $15,500,000 shall be taken as the original basis, and there shall be added to that sum interest thereon from September 9, 1873, to January 1, 1877, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, with quarterly rests, and adding the accrued interest to the principal at each rest. From the aggregate sum so found shall be deducted the amount of all judgments of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims created under the act of January 23, 1874, entitled "An act for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain," together with all sums paid or allowed for the costs and expenses of said court and otherwise arising under said act or any extension thereof. To the balance thus remaining there shall be added interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from said 1st of January, 1877, to the 31st of March, 1877; and there shall be also added thereto the sum of $123,305.89. From the total sum thus produced there shall be deducted all the costs and expenses of and in relation to the court created by the act of June 5, 1882, entitled "An act re-establishing the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award," as heretofore incurred or paid out, and as allowed and provided for under this act; and there shall also be deducted from said sum the further sum of $14,000, for the further expenses of winding up the business of said court. The balance so ascertained shall be applied, so far as already paid, and paid out to the parties entitled thereto by force of the provisions of said act of June 5, 1882, and as therein provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read the report, submitted by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, April 16, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred House bill 6661, entitled "An act to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes," respectfully reports:

That it recommends the passage of the bill amended by striking out section 5 of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words printed in Italics in the reported bill.

The act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. L., p. 601), passed before the payment by Great Britain of the Geneva award, provided that immediately on the payment of the money awarded the same shall be paid into the Treasury and used to redeem the public debt, and that an amount equal to the debt so redeemed should be invested in United States 5 per cent. registered bonds, to be held subject to the future disposition of Congress.

Pursuant to that act the $15,500,000 received was put into the form of a United States bond of that amount, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent., payable quarterly.

In the year 1874 Congress passed the act entitled "An act for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain" (18 Stat. L., p. 245), under which judgments were rendered, and in the fiscal year 1876 paid to the amount of $5,641,287.26, and in the fiscal year 1877 there were paid of judgments under said act $2,674,465.93, making a total payment of judgments under the act of 1874 of $9,315,753.19.

The expenses of the court under said act as paid were, in the fiscal year 1875, $84,374.70; in the year 1876, $112,915.03; in the year 1877, $55,435.99, and in the year 1878, $505.40; total, $253,231.12. The result was that the total payments for judgments and expenses under the act of 1874 were $9,568,984.31, leaving a balance of the principal sum of $15,500,000 of $5,931,015.69.

By the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat. L., p. 245), it was provided that the moneys remaining of the Geneva award, after paying judgments and expenses, should be turned into the Treasury and held subject to the future action of Congress.

By the act of June 5, 1882 (22 Stat. L., p. 98), provision was made for the payment, out of the balance of this fund, first, for direct losses sustained by the destruction of vessels, &c., by confederate cruisers, not within the judgment of the Geneva tribunal; and, second, for the persons who had paid war premiums on ships, cargoes, &c. This act provided in section 9 (22 Stat. L., p. 99)—

"That the whole amount paid out shall not exceed the amount remaining of the Geneva award and interest as it was when actually covered into the Treasury."

In the tribunal of Geneva the claims for war premiums and in respect of exculpated cruisers were not allowed, and therefore whatever may have been the legal or equitable effect of the Geneva award as made, as it respects ship-owners or insurance, there could have been no trust, legal or equitable or moral, in favor of the persons who had paid war premiums. The act of 1882 must as a consequence be considered to have been a mere act of benevolence to other sufferers than those whose cases the Geneva tribunal thought to be fit subjects for relief as against Great Britain and in respect of which the money was paid.

The committee is of opinion that all premiums obtained by the United States from the difference in value between coin and currency at the time of the Geneva award or afterward, or obtained from the sale of bonds of the United States sold to raise money to pay the former awards, belong to the Treasury and should not form any part of the sum out of which the judgments of the late court of commissioners should be paid. As the fifth section of the House bill covers all these premiums, the committee recommends that that section be stricken out and the words reported as an amendment thereto be inserted in lieu thereof.

The amendment provides for increasing the principal sum of the Geneva award by the amount of all interest received thereon by the United States, although that interest was received from bonds of the United States. This, the committee thinks, is as far as Congress ought to go, and is in accordance with the tenor and effect of the act of 1882, under which these last judgments were rendered.

Bills have been referred to the committee proposing to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts due in certain cases to parties other than those determined by the judgments of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims. There are cases in which said court by its judgments has directed payment to assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, or assignees under agreements for the benefit of creditors. In such cases it has been proposed to direct payment to the original claimants instead of to such assignees. The committee does not regard these propositions as within the legislative province of Congress, and therefore has not given to them its approval. Whatever questions may have been or may be raised relative to the interests here involved are judicial in character and resolvable by the courts and not by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts call for the reading of the views of the minority also?

Mr. HOAR. I will answer the question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the Senator from Massachusetts will give way for a moment I wish to say that there is one amendment which should be made to the amendment, and then the Senator can go on. In line 12 of the pending amendment there is an error; the word "January" should be stricken out and "June" inserted.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter of reference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is descriptive of the act referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be so modified, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I think I can save the time of the Senate, if it be proper, by stating in a few words the substance of the minority report without requiring the Senate to listen to its reading in full. If that be agreeable to everybody, I will do it. I think it will save considerable time, as I can do it in two or three minutes.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] and myself do not concur in the report of the majority of the committee, and I have the right to say in behalf of one gentleman, a member of the majority of the Judiciary Committee when this report was agreed upon, that upon a careful reconsideration of the matter he entirely changed his mind. I think that will turn out to be the case before this debate is over of several other members of the majority; but I have no right to say anything for anybody except myself and my associate, the Senator from New York.

But the point here is exactly this: The United States received from Great Britain the sum of $15,500,000 in gold by the Geneva award. There was a great difference of opinion as to the persons to whom that money ought to be paid by the United States. Some people thought it ought to go to the persons whose vessels were destroyed by rebel cruisers, and those alone. Others thought that insurance companies who had paid for such losses ought to be subrogated to the claims of those whom they insured. Congress finally determined that the persons upon whom the losses had actually and practically fallen should have the compensation; that the insurance companies had got their pay in premiums for all their insurances, and they, therefore, were not entitled to anything; and hence the money should be paid over first to persons whose vessels had been destroyed and who had not been paid by insurance; second, to the men who had paid the war premiums and had kept the American flag at their risk at sea and who had conducted the business of importing merchandise in competition with England and Germany, who had brought over the same kind of merchandise and sold it side by side with them in our markets without having to pay this extra insurance premium on account of the risk of importation.

Now, whether that was right or wrong, that was the decision of Congress after full debate, going through three or four Congresses, and by very large majorities in both Houses. Congress then ordered that this $15,500,000 in gold should be put in the Treasury and kept as a fund, and all through these statutes which I have cited in the minority report phrases are used showing that purpose. They say the first class of people shall be paid, and then the rest of the money shall be kept as a fund, and that "with its proceeds," or "the amount accruing therefrom," or various other similar phrases, shall be distributed to the other claimants; and the Treasury Department kept its account of it in that way.

The first class of claimants have been paid in full. They were the persons who suffered direct loss from the cruisers for whom England was held to blame. Then came the first class under the second bill, those who had lost ships or cargoes by the exculpated cruisers, and they have been paid in full, and there is enough to pay from 40 to 54 per cent. only of the third class, the war premium men. The court has got through and is ready to pay it; but now comes this proposed amendment of the Judiciary Committee and says that we shall state the account of the fund in this way: The $15,500,000 was received in gold. The claims of the first class were estimated in currency, as the decisions of the court, which I have seen, show. So then every man who if his claim had been estimated on a gold basis would have got $100 had it estimated at $115 or $120, which was the difference between gold and currency at that time. Then under the act of Congress gold enough was sold to pay this first class of claims, and we sold of our fifteen and a half millions of gold six millions-odd in gold and paid off seven millions-odd to those claimants who had their claims estimated in currency, and they were paid in full.

Now the majority of the committee come in here and say, "let us charge this fund with seven millions-odd, to wit, the amount of currency for which this gold sold, the nominal amount of these claims, and put the balance in the United States Treasury." That is the performance which the Senate is asked to ratify.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to ask, if that was a trust fund received by the United States Government in trust for the use and benefit of claimants, why should not the United States have paid it out in kind? Why should the Government not have paid out the gold in kind to the claimant if it was a trust fund?

Mr. HOAR. It made no difference to claimant number one. He has a claim of $100 in gold and he says "you pay me $100 in gold." The court says, "no, we will estimate it in currency and call it $115; then we will sell $100 in gold and get $115 for it and pay you." The first claimant therefore is paid by the trustee in full, everything he ought to have. But what they propose to do is to say "this $100 of gold we will not charge to the trust fund as $100, which is all we took out of our fund in gold, but we will charge it to the trust fund as $115."

Mr. MAXEY. That is the point I am reaching.

Mr. HOAR. That would make a difference of $1,300,000.

Mr. MAXEY. If a guardian takes the funds of his ward and speculates upon them and makes a profit, does not the ward get it and not the guardian?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Government took this money and bought $115 for $100, does not the $15 go to the cestui que trust?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, that is what I claim. It belongs to the fund, not to the United States. If any trustee undertook to do this thing he would be removed from his trust; and if he had accomplished it he would be indicted and convicted for embezzling the fund. Now the United States had a right to do with this fund what they pleased in the time of it, but they did declare that it should be a fund, and that it should belong to these people. If you want to come in now and go behind the old determination of the Alabama award case, that is one thing. Of course you can repeal that law as you can repeal the charter of any bank or railroad or any other public corporation you have created, so that you do not interfere with vested rights. But if you are going to do it, do it. Do not come in and pretend to observe the law and then pocket the $1,300,000 by a juggle in book-keeping.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the claims involved in this controversy have been long considered in Congress, and it may be well to recall the attention of the Senate to the arrangement between Great Britain and the United States under which the Geneva award was had.

In the treaty between the two governments under which the Geneva arbitration was organized it was provided that:

> Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama Claims;" and
> Whereas Her Britannic Majesty has authorized her high commissioners and plenipotentiaries to express, in a friendly spirit, the regret felt by Her Majesty's Government for the escape, under whatever circumstances, of the Alabama and other vessels from British ports, and for the depredations committed by those vessels:
> Now, in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims which are not admitted by Her Britannic Majesty's Government, the high contracting parties agree that all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generically known as the "Alabama Claims," shall be referred to a tribunal of arbitration to be composed of five arbitrators," &c.

When the arbitrators met, instead of considering in detail the claims of individuals, it was thought wisest and best on their part to make an award in gross to the United States for and on account of injuries done to the United States through those inflicted on her citizens by the confederate cruisers. The terms of the treaty relate specifically to the injuries done by the cruisers directly, and in no manner whatever relate to the incidental damages that arose out of the payment of war premiums. Consequently the legislation by Congress, when it came to provide for the distribution of the award so made, placed first in order for adjustment and payment the claims that came within the definition of that treaty, and if the claims proved up by the claimants within that description had absorbed all of the $15,500,000, nobody could have made complaint. In other words, the persons whose judgments are now involved in this bill and for the payment of which this bill provides were in no sense within the principles upon which the Geneva arbitrators based their award. But after the payment of the claims of the first and second class it was found that there was still a remainder in the Treasury of the United States. Consequently the claimants who had paid the so-called war premiums presented their claims and asked for a distribution of the remainder.

Now, Mr. President, so far as the principle upon which the Geneva award was based is concerned, the persons who paid war premiums have no more claim on that than thousands of other citizens of the United States who suffered in consequence of the incidents of war. But this bill does not propose to deny that claim nor to interfere with the distribution of the remainder of this fund. There is a difference between the House bill and the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee in this: The House bill proposed, in the section which we suggest to strike out, that the fund shall be made up of the $15,500,000 received from Great Britain, of the premiums that may have been received on the sale of the United States bonds, and of interest on the money for the time that it remained in the Treasury of the United States. The proposition on the part of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is to take the $15,500,000 received by the United States from Great Britain as the principal of the fund, estimate interest on that with quarterly rests down to the time indicated in the amendment, deduct therefrom the payments that have been made and the expenses of the court, and distribute the balance on the judgments which have been rendered by the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims.

Now we are confronted by two factors in this case: First, does the Government of the United States occupy the position of an ordinary trustee, or does it merely occupy the position of a custodian of money for the use of which for a time it will pay interest? In no sense I apprehend can the Government be said to be acting as a trustee in the ordinary sense of that term. The Government has not assumed that character in any respect with regard to these cases or any others, but has always denied that, inasmuch as this was a transaction between two governments and not between citizens of one government and the authorities of the other. Therefore it seemed to the Committee on the Judiciary that if we extended the remedial agencies of this Government to the extent of allowing interest on the money for the time it has been in the possession of this Government we are going quite as far as Congress should go; for we all know that it has been the position of the Government from the beginning that, no matter what character of claim a citizen might have against the Government, it would not allow interest on the amount determined in satisfaction of the claim.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] asks me why the concession of the allowance of interest does not commit us to the other proposition, the payment of the premium. Simply because the allowance of the interest is a grace of the Government, just as the payment of these claims in the first place was a matter of grace on the part of the Government, for, as I have said, in no sense and in no respect whatever are these claimants on account of war premiums paid within the principles on which the Geneva award was based. Therefore we are simply asking, inasmuch as the Government has had the use of this money and there is a remainder left over after paying the awards within the Geneva arbitration, that it shall be paid out allowing interest for the time it has been in possession of the Government, and that goes to the benefit of the claimants also. Otherwise, you are to establish a precedent in this case that the Government can be and will be in all such instances placed in the attitude of the ordinary trustee and bound to exercise that due diligence in taking care of the funds that an individual would be required to practice. No such principle applies to governments. No such principle has been recognized by our Government. And we simply ask, therefore, to eliminate from the House bill that feature which gives the premium as well as the interest, allowing the remainder of the principal with interest to go in distribution for the payment of these judgments.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask a question. Waiving for the time being the original question as to whether the Government was trustee or not, has not the legislation of Congress on this subject made the Government a trustee in this particular case?

Mr. HOAR. The Government said it would be trustee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think the Government is committed to that in any of the legislation. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], the war-premium men resisted that doctrine and insisted that there should be some of this money left over for them; and had it not been for that, those having claims within the principles upon which the Geneva award was based would have consumed the whole of it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me for a moment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Including, I mean, the insurance companies.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, that is different. The Government said when it received the money from Great Britain that it would not take it under circumstances which made it a trustee for any one class of claimants rather than another, but that Congress should determine. When Congress got it and did determine, Congress said that the claims of the war-premium men were paramount to the persons who had suffered direct losses, and it said this should be a fund, that the fund with its proceeds, with the moneys accruing therefrom—this fund received in gold should be given to these men. Then when you come to look and see what are its proceeds and what has accumulated therefrom, you find that it took gold and sold that gold and got over a million dollars premium in currency for it. The question is whether on that sum by this subsequent legislation of Congress the Government has made itself like a trustee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Why, Mr. President, if the Senator desires an answer that shall go back to the original transaction I will give him this, that the mistake made was in allowing the premiums at all to any class of the claimants.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will pardon me for saying that that is exactly the point. The gentlemen who were beaten three to one on that question now want to try it over again under the guise of this hocus-pocus in book-keeping.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know what these gentlemen may have been inducing the Government to do or not to do. I have no doubt that the acceptance of the $15,500,000 and the payment of that out to claimants under the Geneva award without either interest or premium would have been a fulfillment of the Government's obligation, and that when we are going beyond that it is just extending that much of grace to the claimants who are here to-day.

And, Mr. President, what is the basis of this? Oh, it is that these people who have suffered, indirectly it may be, through the payment of war premiums should be made whole, that they are not to be allowed to suffer any of the consequences of the incidents of war, notwithstanding they may have made back all of their premiums in the pursuit of the business, which is usually the course practiced by persons in trade. Are we to say that persons who received damages shall be made whole regardless of the principles upon which the Geneva award was based? If so, how much further may we have to go? Is the man who paid war premiums and may have received them back in the course of his business to be any better treated because of his efforts to maintain the flag on the sea than the men who went into the Army and maintained the flag on land? You have claims now coming to Congress, you have heard them coming up, gathering in volume, asking that the men who went into your Army at $13 a month may have the difference made up between the currency value of their pay and the gold. Is there not as great equity in that on the part of the men who carried your arms and fought your battles on land as there is on the part of the men who paid war premiums and now come here and ask you to make them whole even by the establishment of that principle which shall say that the Government of the United States must be put in the attitude of the ordinary trustee and held to due diligence in the use of a trust fund? No, sir; it is not fair toward the Government, it is not fair toward the great body of its citizens who also suffered from the incidents of war. It is a dangerous principle to inaugurate in the affairs of government in this or any other country.

We take the $15,500,000 by this amendment, allow interest on it with quarterly rests, deduct from that the payments which have been made and the expenses of the court, and then say the balance thus remaining shall be distributed in the payment of the judgments that have been rendered by the Court of Alabama Claims. That is going further, as I have already said, than it has been customary for the Government to go with reference to claims against its Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator inform us why he allows interest, why he allows quarterly rests, and why he does not go further?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am content to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, so far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to strike out the allowance of interest, but I am quite content, in representing the Judiciary Committee, to let the amendment of the Senate stand against the House section, because it comes nearer right than the House section does.

Mr. HOAR. I do not like to disturb the Senator if it is disagreeable to him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that my learned friend yields the whole point. The question is not what you would pay an ordinary creditor. The question is whether the legislation of Congress when it received this fund and since has determined in the past that this should be held as a separate fund. If it has not, then there should be no interest paid on it, especially there should be no quarterly rests; but the Senator comes in and says, "Oh, yes, we will pay interest; we will allow quarterly rests." If he does that, he can only justify himself by agreeing with me in saying that this is a special fund, as the statutes which I have quoted declare, which declare that it shall be and remain a fund, and that the $15,500,000 gold and the moneys accruing therefrom shall be paid out so and so. Now, can the Senator tell me on what earthly principle he can say that the United States shall pay interest unless it is a principle which requires that if it took the gold out of this separate bag and sold it, the currency which it got for the gold should belong to the fund also, and you should not credit it to the fund as so much currency that you paid out to the first set of claimants as if you had paid it out in gold?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Why, Mr. President, I suppose that if the United States had placed the $15,500,000 in gold in the Treasury and allowed it to rest there——

Mr. HOAR. It did not. It sold it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And in the discharge of judgments of the Court of Alabama Claims it had taken the $15,500,000 and paid it out in kind, it would have discharged its entire obligation. But the Government in this matter, as in many other matters, has been very liberal toward these claimants beyond any just liability resting upon the Government; and now shall it be said because it has pursued that course that it must keep on and aggravate the matter?

Mr. HOAR. But when the Government paid this first class of claims did it pay out of this fund more than six million dollars odd? It took six million dollars odd in gold and paid it out, and that is all it paid out of the fund. If that be true, why do you want to come in and keep your accounts so as to say we paid out seven million dollars odd because you turned that again into currency before you paid the claimants?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do that for the reason that these claims in the first place are not, as I say, within the principle of the award at all.

Mr. HOAR. That has been settled.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Settled? I should like to know whether these claimants regard it as settled? What is this bill doing here at all if that is settled? Why were not these claimants content with asking Congress to extend the time for closing up the business of the Court of Alabama Claims? Why do they come and ask this additional legislation? Why do they come and request Congress to add to all the various amounts provided for in former legislation another sum arising from the premium on the sale of bonds, namely, the sum of $385,100.07, which they are asking in addition to the sum that was treated of in the act of 1882? They were not content with the legislation they obtained. They are asking for additional legislation. They were not content to make provision by which this whole business can be wound up by a reasonable extension of time to that end, but they say, "You must give us further provision of law and add over three hundred, nearly four hundred, thousand dollars more to the sum provided for in the act of 1882."

No, Mr. President, when we shall have paid this principal, adding thereto the interest, which, as I say, they were not under the practice of the Government entitled to—but that has been provided—when we have done that we have done all that these claimants for the war premiums paid have any right to ask of the Government, and even then they get what was not embraced within the principles of the Geneva award.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). Mr. President, this subject is new to me, but I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether under the House bill this fund bears interest after it was covered into the Treasury?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir, it does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under either proposition?

Mr. HOAR. It does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that the rule adopted by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary is far too liberal; and even if the United States was a trustee, under the most rigid application of the law of trusts this rule would not be applied to any private trustee under any doctrine that can be found laid down in any book on equity. It seems to me that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary have in their proposition gone far beyond what is just and right between the United States and these persons claimants under the Geneva award.

The United States received fifteen and a half millions of money which the United States won from Great Britain, which was to be distributed according to the will of the United States among such persons as it believed to be most justly entitled to the money. The United States then fortunately had the opportunity to invest the money in bonds of the United States in a particular character of loan. It was not a special deposit, not a special contract, but the money was put in bonds defined by law, the 5 per cent. bonds, which were then offered to all the world at par. It invested that fifteen and a half million dollars in those bonds. A bond for this amount was issued in the same form precisely as any other 5 per cent. bond of the United States. I have seen it because I canceled it. It is simply a bond purchased as any citizen at that time might have purchased it with gold.

The Government of the United States did more than that. It collected promptly the interest accruing on that bond, for there was but one bond. It was issued in the form of one bond to the Secretary of State, who collected the quarterly interest, 1¼ per cent., each three months, and invested that in the same kind of bond. As a matter of course the Government could not invest the interest in the same kind of bonds at par, because the bonds advanced in price, and therefore the quarterly interest could not be invested in bonds to an amount equal to the amount of interest accruing, for these bonds advanced from the date of their issue until they rose far up before they were redeemed to 15 per cent. above par.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was equally true of the first one.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A private trustee would have had to pay the whole premium on gold and the premium on the bonds.

Mr. SHERMAN. The interest, taking it at 4 per cent., would have been over $150,000 every quarter. They could not buy these same bonds three months, or six months, or nine months afterward, except at a premium. The exact operation shows that the result at a certain period of time was that this fund of $15,500,000 had been increased to the extent of $2,304,000; but it must be remembered that a portion of this interest was invested in the premium on the bonds in which the interest was invested.

The rule prescribed even by the Senate Judiciary Committee is a rule so unjust that it would destroy and ruin any trustee who was charged with this trust, because the Government is charged not only with quarterly interest as it accrued but the interest on that interest compounded at the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. That is the committee's proposition. That is not mine.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say even the committee's proposition errs in favor of these persons.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Although it saves several millions as against the House proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. As against the House proposition it is undoubtedly better; but it seems to me that in this particular the statements which the Senator from Vermont has been kind enough to hand me from the Secretary of the Treasury, show that the Government could not always invest this money judiciously; that is they could not invest it in bonds at the same rate at which they invested the principal, and they therefore lost. They had to pay a premium and sometimes they could not invest it at the moment the money was collected, but had to wait awhile, and therefore they lost by delay.

Suppose an individual was trustee of this fund and he quarterly received the interest. He could not invest it on the next day, or perhaps the next, or the next, or the next. He would rather wait for a favorable turn of the money market; and if he invested it judiciously two, or three, or four, or five months after it was received by him under the circumstances, if the circumstances would justify it, it would be a proper investment; but he could not in any event invest it in the bonds at par. He must pay a premium; and that diminishes the principal of the bonds so bought. It seems to me therefore that the Senate committee have gone to the utmost extent in a rule which operates injuriously to the Government, and I have no doubt that when this rule is applied to the actual fund it will increase the amount of this fund probably from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars, that depending entirely, however, on the good luck of the Government in the purchase of bonds at the time when the interest accrued.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to call his attention to what I understand to be the point in that respect?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator that the committee's proposition does to a certain extent do injustice to the Government on their theory, but because they do an injustice of $100,000 to the Government in doing one particular thing, allowing compound interest when they would not be bound to do so, it does not follow that they ought to be permitted to do another and a larger injustice to the claimants in another respect.

The point between me and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is not in what the Government ought to charge itself with; it is in what it has a right to credit itself with; and I beg the Senate not to lose sight of that one point. The United States got this money in gold, and there were three classes of claims. One of them was going to get about 50 per cent., and the class number one they were ready to pay. The class number one had their judgments estimated in currency. Every man who lost $100 in gold had a judgment for $115, that being the currency value when compared with gold. Then the United States took out of this gold fund, which it had declared over and again should be a fund for these claimants, or some of them, $6,000,000 and odd in gold and sold it for $7,000,000 and odd in currency, and it paid the claimants number one seven millions and odd in currency. Now, the Senator from Iowa turns round and says, you charge to this gold fund in your bookkeeping not the six millions which you took out of it to sell to pay off these fellows, but the seven millions of their judgments in currency, and pocket the $1,500,000 yourself. That is what it is.

Now, the fact that the committee say we should make up a little of that by allowing compound interest that you are not entitled to, does not seem to me to cover it.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator that when claimants of class number one had their judgments paid by the court they were allowed the current premium on gold in addition to their judgments?

Mr. HOAR. They were, but not in that form. The court expressly say we make up these judgments upon currency values; that is, if a man lost a cargo how much currency to-day will pay that man for that cargo? That cargo we will say is worth $115,000; that will pay him for his loss as of to-day, paid to him in currency. The United States takes $100,000 in gold out of its bag which it is keeping for these war-premium men, sells it and gets $115,000 in currency, pays the man, who if he had had his judgment in gold would have had only $100,000, and turns around and credits itself in keeping its account of the gold with $115,000 instead of $100,000. Now, just let any man with a brain in his head and a sense of justice in his bosom think of what he would say to a trustee who would come into his office and ask him to help carry through such a performance.

Mr. GEORGE. Allow me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. My understanding is that the money was not kept by the Government as a gold deposit.

Mr. HOAR. It was like that.

Mr. GEORGE. The Government borrowed the money and paid interest on it. Now, your proposition would be very clear if the Government had just laid aside the fifteen and a half million dollars in a vault by itself as a special deposit belonging to these parties, and then when this judgment was awarded in currency by which they could pay it in currency, and had taken from that fund so much money and bought the currency.

Mr. HOAR. That is what it did in substance.

Mr. GEORGE. But here is the point: My understanding now is that before that time the Government had ceased to keep these fifteen and a half millions as a special fund, but had borrowed the money and put it in the general Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. I will tell you exactly what it did. It received this $15,500,000 in gold.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. It invested it or made out a big bond for $15,500,000 to represent it. That bond was the bond which Mr. Secretary Sherman canceled; I suppose a gold bond, payable principal and interest in gold. Then in 1876, when the first class of claimants were to be paid the United States sold gold-bearing bonds of the Treasury for $6,000,000 and canceled this big bond and credited the fund with the balance, and the Secretary of the Treasury kept the account just as I say it should be kept.

This amendment undertakes to overturn all the judgments of the Treasury from that day to this. It is just the same as if it was kept in a bag. It was represented by a specific bond. The simple point, as I say again to my honorable friend from Mississippi, is this: What ought the United States to have said on their books in that transaction? If they had paid out of this $15,500,000, should they have said they paid out gold which they took from the fund and sold for the purposes specified in the act of Congress, or should they have said they had paid out the amount of the currency value which they bought and in which these judgments were paid? That is the whole point between us. The statute of 1882 is:

> That the judgments rendered by said court under this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the sum of money paid to the United States pursuant to article 7 of the treaty of Washington and accruing therefrom.

Then the tenth section of the same statute says, after providing for the first claimants:

> If there shall remain any part of the said money—

Treating it as an existing thing by itself—

> the same shall be and remain a fund—

And be disposed of by Congress hereafter. Then came the next statute, and said this fund shall be paid out first to the men who suffered by the exculpated cruisers and the balance to the war premiums.

So the point is not whether the United States is to be charged with a particular amount of diligence as trustee. The point is how that particular transaction of selling $6,000,000 in gold and paying off $7,500,000 in claims should be credited upon the books. The Treasurer of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and everybody reported it to Congress year after year in that way until Congress passed this last act on the basis of that report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Ohio indulge me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather finish what I have to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Well, go on.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have complained somewhat of the proposition made by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, upon the ground that it made the Government of the United States pay compound interest on this large sum of money at a time when it was investing the money in the best possible way for the interest of these parties; and as to the extent of any difference between the result of their investment and the result of this compound ratio, I think the proposition of the committee is unjust, but in respect to the other part of it it seems to me clearly right as against the proposition of the House bill. The House committee treats this fund as a continuing fund up to a certain date, compounding it at a certain rate, and including in that computation the sum of $385,100 which was realized to the fund from the sales of bonds.

It seems to me that this is capable of a very simple solution. The original bond was $15,500,000. That bond was surrendered in January, 1876, if I remember aright, and a balance was then stated, and another bond was issued of the same loan on the 22d of January, 1877, leaving the amount then to the credit of this fund $7,150,000 and no more. In the course of the next year or two, I think it was in the following year, perhaps the beginning of 1878, that bond was paid off in the ordinary call of the 5 per cent. bonds, all of which were extinguished by actual payment by the United States in gold, and about the same time the premium or difference between gold and paper money disappeared, and the premium on the bonds disappeared, because, being payable at call, they were payable at par and the premium on them disappeared.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It did not disappear with that bond, because it was one of the fives of 1881. They could not be called in before 1881.

Mr. SHERMAN. That only makes the date 1881 instead of 1878. When they were called in in 1881 they were paid off and all premium on those bonds disappeared, and Congress itself passed a law covering into the Treasury the balance of this fund. From that time, it seems to me, there ought to be no interest allowed. That I believe is not claimed.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody proposes it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know upon what ground it is claimed that this $385,000 shall be allowed. It seems to me that even the Senate committee's proposition is entirely too liberal to this fund; and with that amendment I think the Senate proposition would be fair and reasonable. I do not understand the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I can not get it through my head on what ground the Government of the United States is to pay back this $385,000. If I understood it better I might vote for it, but I do not now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, if this were a case of private trust and you had been the trustee in the year 1873 when this fifteen and a half million dollars in coin would have been paid to you and you had invested that money as a private trustee in the same way that it has been invested—if you call it an investment—by the United States, and had paid out of it what the United States has, the sum of money that you would now be accountable for to your beneficiaries would be less than the Senate's Judiciary Committee proposes. We were liberal, too liberal, hewing it down to a fine point, but we thought we would bring it as near as we could to the principles of the act of 1882, which said that the balance with accrued interest should be paid. We would not undertake to go back of the act of 1882. Now, try it at the start with the private-trust doctrine of my friend from Massachusetts. Gold at that time was at a premium, as the little red book he has shows, of about 15 per cent., being quoted at 115.

Mr. HOAR. Bonds and gold were at exactly the same premium.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps they were; but what was the premium on gold?

Mr. HOAR. At what date?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the 1st of August, 1873, which was about the time the money came to us. The act was passed in March, 1873, and the money was received from England some time in the summer of that year, I think; I have forgotten the exact date. We passed an act in advance.

Mr. HOAR. One hundred and fifteen and some fraction was the rate of gold then. My eyes can not catch the fraction in this print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is near enough. I said 115. Now turn to the New York newspapers for that same month of the year 1873, and how do you find this 5 per cent. loan of 1881, which the law of the 3d of March, 1873, said this fund should be invested in? How did they stand? The President of the Senate being the trustee, you are to invest the fund in those bonds. How much have you to pay? The fives of 1881 were at a premium of 20, selling at 120. So take your fifteen and one-half million dollars in gold and see how large a bond at that price of 120 you can buy with it.

At this time in 1873 these bonds had nine years to run and they were gold-bearing bonds. They were not payable in currency; they were payable in coin, and the interest was payable in coin, and they stood at this high premium, which was 5 per cent. higher than the premium on gold. So, turning it into a new transaction, the actual premium on the bonds bought with the gold would be just 5 per cent., which would be one-twentieth of the total sum in gold. I think that must be plain to the commonest apprehension.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has got the wrong date. It was the year before. The fifteen and one-half millions was received in gold before that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it, indeed?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; that is the trouble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have stated what the act of Congress says; the act of Congress may have proceeded on a mistake; but the act of March 3, 1873, says:

> That immediately upon the payment of the sum of money awarded to the United States by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva to be paid by the Government of Great Britain, the same shall be paid into the Treasury, and used to redeem, so far as it may, the public debt of the United States.

There is another observation I might make on a private trust, because in undertaking to redeem the public debt of the United States at that time when our credit was good and while currency was at a discount, in order to redeem that public debt unless you made a call of something that was then due—and whether there was anything then due or not I do not know—you would have had to pay a high premium to get it in. But I do not put any point on that now.

> And the amount equal to the debt so redeemed shall be invested in the 5 per cent. registered bonds of the United States to be held subject to the future disposition of Congress.

Now, with great respect to the Senator from Massachusetts, I think that when that act of Congress of 1873 was passed the money had not been paid to the United States. It was late in 1872 when the tribunal made its award. The treaty was not made until 1871. That provided for the tribunal of Geneva, and that sat, I think, during part of 1871 and in 1872; and then within a certain period, I think it was a year and a half—we can tell by looking at the treaty—the money was to be paid; and about the last day of the time, naturally enough as a matter of business, when it was about to be due, Great Britain paid the fifteen and a half millions in coin, and that brought it (this act of Congress having been passed in anticipation of the payment which was to come on pretty soon) to the summer of 1873. Before adjourning in 1873 Congress passed this act, that as soon as the Secretary of State received the money he should invest it in the registered 5 percents of 1881, and the gold premium on those 5 percents as against the gold purchaser was 5 per cent., as the quotations in the newspapers show, for gold was at 115 and these bonds were at 120. That makes a difference of 5 per cent. in gold, so that if a man went to a banker with his gold to buy these fifteen and a half million in bonds he would have had to pay 5 per cent. premium. So then your private trustee would have had to pay out of his fifteen and a half millions a premium of $775,000 and he would have got an amount of bonds equal only to $14,725,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Vermont will allow me to suggest that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury states that the money was paid into the Treasury on September 8, 1873.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. The gold had fallen and bonds had risen meantime, I suppose. I can turn over to that very day, and I will. While we are about it let us be exact. I was merely guessing, and I got the date as in August, 1873. It seems it was the 8th of September.

Mr. ALLISON. Where does my colleague find that?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on page 5 of the pamphlet before me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is a New York paper of the 8th of September, 1873. Let me find the stock sales of that day. [Examining.] I do not find any quotations on that day of that precise registered gold bond, and therefore I can not tell, but it must have been somewhere along there. I will treat it as that, and as if you got only exactly what Mr. Fish did get; he got a bond of the Treasury signed by the proper officers—one single bond for $15,500,000. I have shown that in the month of August the premium on the bonds was 5 per cent. more than the premium on gold. It was a mere guess of mine as to the precise date. I do not find any quotations on the day of the actual receipt of the money. Perhaps the bonds had risen, perhaps they had fallen a little; they varied. He would only have got a bond for $14,725,000. He did get a bond, treating him as a private trustee, of so large an amount that he would have had to pay money out of his own pocket to get it if he got a bond for the full amount that had been paid into his hands, the fifteen and a half million dollars. Now I undertake to say, if I am right as to the state of the premium on gold and the premium on the bonds he was directed to invest in, there was nothing left in the hands of this private trustee which was due to his beneficiary. The beneficiary had got the investment for every dollar that belonged to him, and more too.

Starting there, we have fifteen and a half million dollars that the private trustee, calling him that, is bound to account for, and no more. He is bound to account for it in the way he has invested it at 5 per cent. payable quarterly, because the interest on these bonds was payable quarterly, and the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary does exactly that thing.

If we put it at 5 per cent., whether we did or not—if we put it at 6 we made a mistake—but putting it at 5 per cent. the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary accounts for this fund on the principle of a private trust, running it down to the time when out of it and its accumulations thus as a private trust there was paid a certain number of millions of dollars. No matter how the trustee got that money, if he was a private trustee and held in his hands bonds of the United States that he sold, he would have been bound to account for the premium. If he had bought them he would have had to pay a premium equal to that which he got, and one hand would have washed the other; and the principal sum and the interest upon it therefore would have been exactly the sum to which the beneficiary was entitled, and no more.

Very well. The report of the committee, therefore, provides that this original sum should bear interest in favor of whomever it was to be paid to at the rate provided with quarterly rests. Then it takes out of it down to the time when Congress covered it into the Treasury in 1877 the sums that have been paid out of it on the former award and the expenses, compounded quarterly, just as if it were a private trust. The balance thus produced will be all that in any point of view any person who claims that it stands on the doctrine of a private trust could demand. And therefore, I repeat, as I believe—I have not made the figures to be exact about it—that if it had been treated, and were to be, as a private trust, of which, Mr. President, you were the trustee and you had charged your constituent with everything you had paid out and credited him with everything you got in, you would not be bound to pay him as much money as this report of the Committee on the Judiciary recommends shall be paid.

That is all I want to say now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary as modified by changing the word "January," in line 12, to "June."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of this bill I shall call up the urgent deficiency bill, and if that can not be passed to-day it will be necessary to have a session to-morrow. I do not wish to interfere with this bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if no further debate is desired by any Senator I will move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to state one thing before that is done.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I am told by a very high authority that the bonds of 1881 were quoted on the day of the investment of the $15,500,000 at 112⅝. I have just received this communication from a person in whom I have the most absolute confidence, and that was the result of my inquiries previously. So that even this little 5 per cent. difference the Senator from Vermont is mistaken about in supposing the trustee would have had to pay out anything. The whole Treasury account shows that.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that this is really a relic of the old contest (which many Senators here remember), which occupied the time of the Senate and the House in a former Congress, in which every presentation that could be made of the merits of the respective claimants was brought out. The Senator from Iowa has shown the animus of this amendment. It will take away more than a million dollars from the war-premium men. After they have been invited by Congress to present their claims upon the basis of the Government holding this as a fund for them, with all accretions, at this late day, by what the Senator from Massachusetts calls a transparent juggle of book-keeping, an attempt is made to reduce that fund. I do not believe that the Senate is prepared for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Maine will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I hope unanimous consent will be given to have the Senator from Maine proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senator from Maine may proceed with his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to take up more time. I was only going to say that so confident am I that the Senate is not prepared to do that, that I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not do that. Let us take a square vote.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that we shall probably get a vote on the Senator's motion, and I ask that the bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill now before it. Is there objection? The Chairs hears none. The Senator from Maine moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not take a straight vote?

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to say a word.

Mr. HALE. I stated that I made the motion on the ground that Senators did not desire further debate. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a few words on this amendment. I will not undertake to go into the intricacies of book-keeping; but the persons to whom this money was to be paid have been selected, the classes have been determined upon by deliberate successive acts of the Congress of the United States, and the manner of treating the fund has been settled upon. The upshot of the amendment of the committee is to close the account and turn $1,300,000 of profit of some kind or other, somehow or other obtained, into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; you are mistaken there.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am so informed, and by a member of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That member is greatly mistaken.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I am in search of information. I wish to know if the account be closed to-day in accordance with this amendment how will it stand on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will stand on the books of the Treasury that we have paid out more money then we got.

Mr. HOAR. One million three hundred thousand dollars, which, according to the Treasurer's report made every year, year after year stands to the credit of this fund, will be transferred to the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. It was covered into the Treasury in 1877, but of that sum which was covered into the Treasury belonging to this fund $1,300,000 more goes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. I say the Senator from Vermont is mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say you are mistaken.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a radical disagreement as to $1,300,000 between two members of the committee that reports this amendment. I will leave that for them to settle as may seem best to them.

I wish to know whether it be true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that we took $6,000,000 of gold, sold it for $7,000,000, and then charged it to the fund as $7,000,000?

Mr. HOAR. That is what they want to do now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Charged it to the gold fund. I have no language which I desire to use on this occasion to characterize that transaction. If the Government in the administration of what it has substantially treated as a trust fund is in any way to make a million out of the depreciation of its own currency, out of the price of gold in the market, I take no part in the transaction whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Neither do I. There is not any such thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Vermont denies that any such thing is proposed. I certainly am not ready for a vote with these differences of opinion among the committee.

The Government of the United States said that certain of its citizens had just claims against a foreign government for great losses inflicted. Those citizens of course were without any remedy unless their Government undertook to collect their claim. Their Government did undertake to collect it, did collect it, received fifteen and a half million in gold, and now proposes to close the account in such a manner as to take advantage of a million dollars received from its own depreciated currency. I can arrive at no other possible conclusion. I am satisfied with the keeping of these books, which shall show that it was administered honestly and faithfully, that the money was kept not idle but decently and fairly invested in proper securities, and that whatever the avails of them they were paid over to the people who we said were entitled to them. If the Senator from Vermont can prove that that disposition is to be made of this money, then I am satisfied with the bill. What I want is an honest keeping and a fair investment of the money and a paying of it out to the people who we said ought to have it, and I understand that if this course be taken there will not be enough to pay all of the last class.

Mr. HALE. Only about 50 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. Even if that course be taken there will not be enough to pay more than about 50 per cent. of the class of claimants who were last acknowledged to have just claims. Here comes that contradiction as to this plain and simple proposition of what I consider ordinary honesty in the administration of a trust. So I do not know how to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Massachusetts have both said that the previous laws had fixed the amount in substance that was to be paid out. So they have. Here is the last word in the last law of 1882 on that subject. Section 9 of the act of June 5, 1882, volume 22, page 99, declares:

And provided further, That the whole amount paid out shall not exceed the amount remaining of the Geneva award and interest, as it was when actually covered into the Treasury. And so much money as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

That was the act under which brought in the war-premium men, who helped to defeat the insurance men on the ground that there was no trust about it at all, but only an appeal to the consideration of the Government as to the way in which it would be best for the general purposes of moral justice and reimbursement for losses that the money should be paid.

I have here two letters from the Treasury Department which will show just how much has been received, how much interest has accrued, and how much has been paid out, that I supposed, until I looked at the report this morning, had been attached to the report and printed. I should like to have them read now, first the letter of March 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 23, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 22d instant, and of your telegram of to-day, requesting that the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be furnished with a statement of the investment of the Geneva award fund from the beginning, and of the expenditure therefrom, for consideration in connection with House bill No. 6661, "to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes."

In reply thereto I have to state that the $15,500,000 awarded by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva were invested in 5 per cent. bonds of the funded loan of 1881, bearing interest from September 9, 1873.

Bonds of the fund were sold from time to time to meet the judgments rendered by the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims to the extent of $8,350,000, on which there was realized in currency the sum of $992,522.19 as premium on the sale of an equal amount of coin.

Under the provisions of section 15 of the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat. p. 249), the balance of the original investment, namely, $7,150,000, together with $2,403,800, accumulated interest on the whole fund, was covered into the Treasury March 31, 1877; and in the quarter ending June 30, 1877, the further sum of $123,305.89, accumulated interest, was also covered into the Treasury.

The premium received in coin from the sale of the bonds referred to amounted to $344,393.88 and $40,706.19, respectively, making a total of $385,100.07, which was covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I should like to have the additional letter of the 31st of March read in further explanation.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 31, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your telegrams upon the subject of aggregate receipts and disbursements of the Geneva award fund, and particularly in the matter of interest paid by the Government upon the 5 per cent. bonds in which the $15,500,000 award was invested, I have to call your attention to the statement furnished to you in Department's letter of the 23d instant, setting forth the condition of the fund in question.

In further explanation of the receipts into the fund accrued from the investment of the award in 5 per cent. bonds the following statement is submitted:

After the award of $15,500,000 had been invested in bonds the accrued interest thereon was invested from time to time in bonds of the same character, so that in the end a sum of interest equal to $2,562,036,98½ had been for the most part so invested. See table of the changing principal of the fund and interest accruing thereon below:

Interest from—	Amount of interest.	Principal.
September 9, 1873 to November 1, 1873	$111,616 85	$15,500,000
November 1, 1873, to February 1, 1874	193,750 00	15,500,000
December 3, 1873, to February 1, 1874	920 54	112,000
February 1, 1874, to May 1, 1874	195,150 00	15,612,000
February 5, 1874, to May 1, 1874	2,266 47	194,650
May 1, 1874, to August 1, 1874	200,051 25	16,004,100
August 1, 1874, to November 1, 1874	200,051 25	16,004,100
November 1, 1874, to February 1, 1875	205,015 00	16,401,200
February 1, 1875, to May 1, 1875	207,552 50	16,604,200
May 1, 1875, to August 1, 1875	210,134 37½	16,810,750
August 1, 1875, to November 1, 1875	210,134 37½	16,810,750
November 1, 1875, to February 1, 1876	215,365 62½	17,229,250
February 1, 1876, to May 1, 1876	217,955 62½	17,436,450
Total at time of first sale of bonds	2,169,963 86
May 1, 1876, to August 1, 1876	147,028 75	11,762,300
August 1, 1876, to November 1, 1876	121,784 37½	9,742,750
November 1, 1876, to February 1, 1877	123,260 00	9,860,800
Total interest accrued to the fund	2,562,036 98½
Less amount covered into the Treasury	123,305 89
Available for investment in 5 percents	2,438,731 09

This sum was used to buy $2,403,800 of bonds shown in the statement already furnished to you.

As the bonds were bought at the best obtainable rates, the difference between the sum so bought and the interest available therefor, namely, $34,931.09, was absorbed in paying premium.

When bonds were sold to pay judgments, namely, on April 24, 1876, $5,883,000; August 12, 1876, $2,160,000; and January 22, 1877, $307,000, they were sold with interest to the buyer running from the nearest interest period; therefore, in the sales referred to the fund received the benefit of the interest—in the first sale to May 1, 1876, in the second to August 1, 1876, and in the third to February 1, 1877.

Bonds of the fund to the amount of $7,150,000 and the $2,403,800 purchased with accumulated interest were canceled on the 31st of March, 1877, and ceased to bear interest from that date.

With these explanations and a reference to the table furnished by the Department on the 23d instant, the receipts and expenditures of the fund, adding $800 error in statement of bonds purchased with accrued interest, are shown as follows:

Receipts:
Principal	$15,500,000 00
Interest	2,562,036 98½
Premium in currency on coin face of bonds sold	992,552 19
Coin premium on sale of bonds plus currency realized on sale thereof	385,100 07
Total receipts	19,439,689 24
Less interest used in payment of premium on bonds purchased	34,931 09
Total net receipts	19,404,758 15
Total expenditures	13,390,677 26

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. That does not quite harmonize with the statement previously read; I do not know the reason why.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You will find it does harmonize when you study it a little. There is no discrepancy.

Now, Mr. President, the upshot of this business is, as it seems to me, that the act of 1882 said exactly that beyond which we should not go, and the amendment of the committee does all of that and, as the Senator from Ohio thinks, a little more. I thought the committee were unanimous in supposing that the $385,000 mentioned there was totally inadmissible; but the House bill according to these reports from the Treasury treated this as a private trust, unless I am greatly mistaken as to what was the quantum of the premium on the gold fives of 1881 when this was invested, which does not come in there at all, because it does not charge anything for it. They took it themselves and got their par, whereas if the August quotation should answer for the September one that I can not find, the gold quotation on that kind of bonds, there would be $775,000 to come out against the fund. The committee amendment puts it upon the act of 1882; only it is a little better than that act alone would have done, I think.

If in that view of the case the Senate wishes to reject this amendment, our duty is done.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say just one word. The Senator quotes one phrase of the act of 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the last one.

Mr. HOAR. And the last one, and says the amount to be paid out shall be the money received from the Geneva award as it was on a certain day. I do not think that supports the Senator's view at all, and I do not agree that his bill supports it. The same act says that if there shall remain any part of the said money it shall be and remain a fund, and it shall be the amount of the Geneva award as it was when covered into the Treasury. The Treasury book-keeping kept it just as we claim. Section 7 of the act of 1882 provides:

That the judgments rendered by said court under this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the sum of money paid to the United States pursuant to article 7 of the treaty of Washington, and accruing therefrom.

The Senator from Vermont omits all those passages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have got everything in.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to say just one word about this matter? I was utterly opposed to the distribution of this fund as Congress finally concluded to distribute it. In other words, I was utterly opposed, and I am now, to paying one dollar of this amount to what are known as the war-premium claimants. But I was overruled in that matter and Congress came to the conclusion, as I understand, that they should be paid, and, so far as our legislation is concerned, that they should be put with the claimants of the first class.

It makes no sort of difference, if that principle is established, whether the surplus money is in the Treasury after paying the claimants of the first or even of the second class; the question is, how do you propose to pay these people of the third class and to pay these war-premium claimants? Do you propose to make a distinction between the payment to the claimants of the first class and those of the third class? Unquestionably the claimants of the first class have been paid by converting the amount of gold into currency, allowing them the interest upon it and paying off the judgments rendered in their favor. Now it is proposed, as I understand, to change that rule, and to say that they shall receive the amount of currency, a dollar in currency to a dollar in gold, with interest at 5 per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Currency now being worth the same as gold.

Mr. VEST. That makes no sort of difference, it seems to me. I am not prepared to change a rule already established as to the payment of the first class. I must agree that the Senator from Massachusetts is logical, to say the least of it, in his proposition, and that the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee is entirely illogical. At the same time, stating it as a logical proposition, I would unquestionably vote not to give one dollar to those people who are called the war-premium claimants.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the amendment be laid on the table, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. COKE's name was called). The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. The Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. HALE (when Mr. FRYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I had forgotten my pair, and told the Senator from Maine when he went away to have his colleague remind me, if I should forget it. I withdraw my vote. I should vote "nay," and the Senator from Maine I suppose would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I shall withhold my vote. If he were present, I think I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. BERRY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and 45 Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll-call develops the presence of 45 Senators—more than a quorum. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay on the table the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, upon which the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I announce again that I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore refrain from voting.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but I am informed that the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" upon this proposition. I will ask the Senator from Maine if that is correct.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt that he would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. HALE. I do not get it from him directly, but I have no doubt about it. I can say that, and the Senator from Maryland may use his discretion about it. I have no doubt whatever that he would vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN. I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	George,	McPherson,	Sewell,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The act of 1882, after providing for the payment of claims thereunder, has the following proviso:

That the whole amount paid out shall not exceed the amount remaining of the Geneva award and interest, as it was when actually covered into the Treasury.

The fifth section of the bill proposes to enlarge that sum by increasing it to the extent of $385,100.07. I now propose an amendment to that section, in order that the adjustment of these claims shall rest upon the act of 1882 and the amount be determined thereby. Therefore I move to amend the bill, in section 5, by striking out after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-four," in line 16, down to and including the word "cents," in line 21, in the following words:

Shall be added the premium realized from the sale of certain bonds in which the said fund was invested, namely, the sum of $385,100.07, making $10,089,004.96.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFCER. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to say that that sum never has been carried into the Treasury as part of the Geneva award.

Mr. DAWES. Do I understand that the Senator does not propose to have either the premium on the gold or the premium on the bonds a part of this sum?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I simply move to strike out that item, which is not embraced in the act of 1882.

Mr. DAWES. That being stricken out and the premium on gold not being added, then the United States would have the benefit of its operation, both what it made on the gold and what it made on the bonds, would it not?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see how else.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I am under the impression that as to this particular amendment I was not paired, because I thought that we agreed in opinion about it; but for fear that I am mistaken I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this subject I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 15; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and 40 Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll-call shows the presence of forty Senators—more than a quorum. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to lay the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on the table, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] on this question.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]; but as it seems important that there should be more votes cast I shall transfer the pair to my colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK] and vote on this question. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises Senators, who are at liberty so to do, to vote, as there is not yet a quorum voting.

Mr. BECK. I suppose the vote ought to be announced without delay. I beg pardon, but I opposed the motion, and I should like to have the vote disposed of.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Eustis,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Evarts,	Logan,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In order that the distribution of this fund may rest wholly upon the act of 1882, I move to strike out the fifth section. Inasmuch as preceding legislation has been quoted in opposition to the effort which has been made in support of the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, I think it but fair to quote it now, as against the other side, and let this whole subject rest where Congress put it by the act of 1882. I move to strike out the fifth section.

Mr. HALE. That will leave all the clerks unpaid. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It does not affect the clerks at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 5. That the amount which shall be paid out and distributed in payment and satisfaction of the judgments of the first and second class which are now existing as rendered by the said court against the Geneva award fund, and in payment of the expenses, salaries, and other outlays contemplated and provided for in this act, and in the act re-establishing the said court, approved June 5, 1882, shall be ascertained in the following manner: To the sum of $9,703,904.89, this being the amount of the said Geneva award fund remaining in the Treasury, as disclosed by the Treasury report of June 30, 1877, and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives dated April 22, 1884, shall be added the premium realized from the sale of certain bonds in which the said fund was invested, namely, the sum of $385,100.07, making $10,089,004.96; and to this sum shall further be added the estimated value of the said furniture and property, as provided for in section 4 of this act; and from the aggregate sum so ascertained shall be subtracted the estimated cost of the services and expenses provided for being estimated in section 4 of this act, and also the amount provided for in section 1 of this act, together with all the other expenses of the court; and from the amount so ascertained shall be further deducted the aggregate of the judgments of the first class which have already been paid, and the balance shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment of the judgments of the first class yet remaining unpaid, as provided in said act approved June 5, 1882, and the residue shall be paid out and distributed pro rata upon the judgments in favor of claimants of the second class, as provided in said last-named act. And the amounts so ascertained as aforesaid are, for the purpose of making the payment aforesaid, hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the Senator submits that motion I wish to make a remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw the motion?

Mr. HALE. I withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to state that the Senator from Maine is mistaken when he says that to strike out this section will dispose of all provision for the payment of clerks as provided for in the act of 1882. It has been claimed all the time by persons representing these claimants since this matter has been pending——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me; the Comptroller of the Treasury has held that the act of 1882 does not warrant any payment for those clerks or for the other machinery of the court, the counsel who represented the United States, and has disallowed all those claims. The court was wound up for some time, and then continued by the claimants (as it was to be paid out of the fund in the end), paying these expenses out of their own pockets. This is not to refund to those claimants, but it is to pay the clerks for the last four months.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But recently we passed an act through Congress, and it is now the law, providing for winding up and extending the time.

Mr. HOAR. If my learned friend will pardon me, it shows how a little study would help him in this matter, as I have always thought. The act we passed the other day provides for extending this thing two months beyond the time fixed by law in order that the papers may be assorted and properly reported, and for paying the clerks for those two months, but the clerks for the last four months have not received one cent and will not without legislation, under the ruling of the Comptroller.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am glad to have the Senator suggest that by a little study of this question I would properly understand it, but I understand it quite enough to know that this fifth section is not necessary.

Mr. HOAR. If my learned friend studied it correctly, I am sure he would know that the section does provide for the clerks.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. In order to make a quorum I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to my colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK], and I vote "yea."

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Fair,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Blair,	George,	Mahone,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Stanford,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. BECK and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I understand that the bill as it now stands provides for the payment on these claims of the amount of money received by the United States from Great Britain exactly, giving up or making good to the claimants the premium which the United States made by a sale of gold for greenbacks, in which a part of the former claimants were paid. I understand it provides for that, and for the payment of all the interest which the United States agreed to pay from the time of the reception of the money in 1873 to 1877, when it was covered into the Treasury, and that since that time no interest is charged against the United States.

Understanding the bill to mean that, it receives the approbation of my judgment fully, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

Mr. BECK. I may not have understood the Senator from Iowa in the statement that he made. I should like to know whether we are paying to these people a premium upon payments made in the legal-tender notes of the country.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We are paying the premium realized by the Government on the sale of the coin and the bonds. We are paying in addition thereto interest. In other words, this bill proposes to place the United States in the attitude of an ordinary trustee, responsible for all the additions from those sources which may have been made to the fund, and on behalf of claimants who are not, as I stated before, within the principles upon which the Geneva award was made, who said they were satisfied with the legislation of 1882, who now ask and have obtained an addition of $385,000 to the provision of the act of 1882.

Mr. BECK. Which no other claimant on the United States ever did receive, so far as I am aware. In other words, it is a bonus given to a few people who by skill obtained this award and $385,000 in addition.

Mr. HOAR. The United States gains nothing and losses nothing by this transaction. It pays out the money that it got from Great Britain which it invested in certain securities and that it subsequently sold. It pays the bonus on those securities, and that is all.

Mr. BECK. And nobody else ever got it.

Mr. HOAR. It simply does not make a speculation of it.

Mr. BECK. The Government has held the money of people for twenty years without paying a dollar, and it is the first time this has ever been done. We have had claims for property of all sorts taken and held for twenty years, and when men have shown that it was held wrongfully for twenty years not one penny of interest was ever paid before.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the interest we pay now is in pursuance of an engagement made by the Congress of the United States in an act passed before the reception of the money. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HOAR. You are.

Mr. GEORGE. Then to repudiate the interest would be repudiating the solemn engagement of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were here, I think he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SHERMAN (when his named was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I am advised by his colleague [Mr. CHACE] that he would vote "yea," and therefore I vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. My colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. My pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has been transferred to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 13; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts in charge of the bill pending before the Senate to allow me to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations, and to have the bill considered this afternoon.

Mr. HOAR. It is now Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. I do not think the Senate would like to have the bankruptcy bill taken up and read (it is a long bill) at this late hour in the week, and I should like unanimous consent that it may stand as the unfinished business for Monday, as it now stands; and the Senator from Iowa can then proceed with his appropriation bill, if that will be agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. At what time on Monday?

Mr. HOAR. At 2 o'clock on Monday. It would be so without consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bankruptcy bill be considered as the unfinished business of the day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SPECIAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, to report it with amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 14, after the word "State," to strike out "and;" in line 15, after the word "Department," to insert "Court of Claims and Library of Congress; and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "thirty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Department of State, the Treasury Department, Court of Claims, and Library of Congress, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $233,000; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding may be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 25, to insert:

For the Court of Claims, $2,500, and for the Library of Congress, $1,500.

So as to read:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $200,000; for the State Department, $5,000; for the Treasury Department, $24,000; for the Court of Claims, $2,500; and for the Library of Congress, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "pay of the Army," to strike out from line 37 to line 43, inclusive, as follows:

That so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, as may be required, not to exceed $200,000, is hereby reappropriated and made available to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For pay of the Army, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask consent of the Senate at this time to take up the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, which has passed the House, to establish additional life-saving stations. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 14, after the word "Virginia," to insert "one at Lynnhaven Inlet, Virginia;" and in line 20, after the word "Mackinaw," to insert "one at or near Duluth, Lake Superior;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish additional life-saving stations upon the sea and lake coasts of the United States as follows: One at or near Point Allerton, Massachusetts; one at such point between the Parmet River life-saving station and the south end of Nansett Beach, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one at or near Cape Poge, Massachusetts; one at or near Cuttyhunk, Massachusetts; one on the northwest side of Block Island, Rhode Island; one on the coast between Point Judith and Watch Hill, Rhode Island; one on Fisher's Island, Long Island Sound; one at or near Fisherman's Island, Virginia; one at Lynnhaven Inlet, Virginia; one at or near Oak Island, North Carolina; one at or near Old Topsail Inlet, North Carolina; one at or near Plum Island, Lake Michigan; one at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; one at South Chicago, Ill.; one at or near Bois Blanc Island, Straits of Mackinaw; one at or near Duluth, Lake Superior; one at or near Point Adams, Oregon; one at such point between Point Reyes and Point Diable, California, as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one at such point between Point San José and Point Lobos, California, as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one on Lake Ontario, New York, at or near the mouth of the Niagara River, as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on the amendments to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CONGER, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of special pension bills favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will give way to me for a local measure of importance.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it likely to lead to debate?

Mr. DOLPH. I think not.

Mr. BLAIR. I yield for a moment.

FORFEITURE OF OREGON WAGON-ROAD GRANTS.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2437, which has received the favorable report of the Committee on Public Lands. It relates to lands entirely within the State of Oregon. The delegation from Oregon have agreed upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a very important bill.

Mr. DOLPH. It is a matter that received the investigation of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not object if it does not lead to debate.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2437) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report?

Mr. DOLPH. There is.

Mr. PLATT. Is it long?

Mr. DOLPH. It is somewhat long.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator make a statement?

Mr. DOLPH. I will if it is desired. The Senator from Connecticut asks me to make a statement in regard to this bill.

In 1864 an act was passed by Congress making a grant of land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a wagon-road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State. In 1866 a similar act was passed making a grant to aid in the construction of a wagon-road from Albany to the eastern boundary of the State. In 1867 an act was passed making a grant of lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a wagon-road from Dalles City to Fort Boisé, on the Snake River. By the terms of the acts the certificate of the governor of the State as to the completion of the road was to be the evidence on which the Interior Department was to act in the selection of the granted lands.

These certificates were duly made showing the construction of the roads within the time provided and in the manner prescribed in the acts of Congress, and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior proceeded to certify the lands to the State as they were surveyed and for considerable portions to issue patents under an act which was subsequently passed authorizing patents in such cases, although it was not necessary as the grants were grants in præsenti.

It is now alleged by the State of Oregon and by numerous citizens of the State that the roads were not in fact constructed as required by the acts of Congress and that the certificates of the several governors of the State, Governors Gibbs, Woods, and Grover, were fraudulent and fraudulently obtained, and the State of Oregon has by a memorial of its Legislature requested Congress to take some action looking to the forfeiture of these grants and the restoration of the lands granted to the public domain.

The case is one in which Congress can not settle the title. It is not like the case of an act making a grant of lands upon condition where there is no claim that the condition has been performed. A suit is required to set aside the certificate of the governors, to try the question whether the roads have been completed in accordance with law, and to set aside the patents issued for portions of the lands. The committee came to the conclusion that that is all that can be done, that the questions involved are judicial questions, and they propose therefore, by this bill, to refer the whole matter to the courts, to direct the Attorney-General to bring a suit as to each one of these three wagon-road grants mentioned in the bill, which amount in the aggregate to over 2,000,000 acres, to determine the question in each case as to whether the roads were constructed within the time prescribed by the granting act and in accordance with the terms of the granting act; as to the effect of the certificate of the governor as to the timely and proper construction of the roads, and to set aside patents which have been issued, and, in short, to settle the title to all this land.

It is a matter of sound public policy that that should be done. The existence of such large tracts of land with unsettled titles must necessarily be detrimental to the prosperity of the State. The claim now made by the State is a cloud on the titles of the present holders of the grants; and nothing seems to be practical (the questions involved being judicial and not legislative) except to refer the case to the courts and to provide for a speedy determination of the title.

The bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Public Lands. The Senators from the State are agreed as to the form of the bill. The lands all lie within the State of Oregon. The action of the committee has been taken at the request of the Legislature of the State of Oregon.

Mr. PLATT. I see this bill provides that the Attorney-General shall bring suit "against all persons, firms, and corporations claiming to own or to have an interest in the lands," and I suppose in any of them. Further along it provides for saving and preserving the rights of all bona fide purchasers "for a valuable consideration, if any such there be." Is it intended to bring suit against bona fide purchasers?

Mr. DOLPH. The question of who are bona fide purchasers must be determined by the courts. Congress can not determine it. The intention is to direct the Attorney-General to bring suit against persons who hold more than a section of the land. The committee thought the small holders who have acquired title from the grantees of the State and are occupying the land for homes ought not to be subjected to the trouble and expense of a suit; and, therefore, have excepted from the operation of the bill those persons who are in actual possession and are cultivating these lands. The title to the great bulk of the lands will be determined in the suit or suits to be brought under the provisions of this bill, and it will be for the court to determine whether there are or can be any bona fide purchasers. Congress can not do that. To undertake to forfeit the granted lands without giving the owners of the grants an opportunity to show that they are bona fide purchasers the committee thought would be very unjust, as well as beyond the power of Congress. The protection of their rights is provided for; but they must establish them in accordance with law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JAMES E. WALTER.

Mr. COLQUITT. With the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire, I ask to take up Order of Business 323, being the bill (S. 1064) for the relief of James E. Walter.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1064) for the relief of James E. Walter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to pay to James E. Walter, late contractor for dredging the harbor of Brunswick, Ga., 23 cents per cubic yard for 12,000 cubic yards of hard excavation in the harbor of Brunswick, less 13⅞ cents per cubic yard already paid him on account of the excavation, amounting after the deduction to $1,095; the additional payment having been recommended by the Secretary of War as a fair and just compensation for the work.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 891) granting a pension to Geriah Collins.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 21, 1886.

GERIAH COLLINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following request from the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 21, 1886.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives Senate bill No. 891, granting a pension to Geriah Collins.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the request of the House of Representatives will be agreed to.

PORT OF ENTRY AT CAPE CHARLES CITY.

Mr. MAHONE. With the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire I ask leave to take up Order of Business 982, being the bill (H. R. 5789) to amend section 2552 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It will lead to no discussion, or I would not ask indulgence at the hands of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PLATT. Let that be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to amend paragraph 1 of section 2552 of the Revised Statutes by striking out "Cherrystone," in the sixth line, and inserting "Cape Charles City;" so that it will read "Cape Charles City shall be the port of entry."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagree to the amendment of the House to the fifth amendment of the Senate to said bill, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first pension bill on the Calendar will now be proceeded with.

Mr. BLAIR. The first pension bill in order is Order of Business 874.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before proceeding, as these pension bills are acted on rapidly, being very brief, the Chair calls the attention of Senators to the titles of the bills as read, so that there may be no question.

Mr. BLAIR. There are no bills to be called up unless those that are favorably reported.

LUCY ANN DREW.

The bill (H. R. 6502) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Drew was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucy Ann Drew, widow of Samuel Drew, late a private in the First Regiment New York Engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN SHEA.

The bill (S. 924) granting a pension to Ellen Shea, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, after the word "pension-roll," in line 4, to strike out "on the evidence now on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Shea, mother of Michael Shea, late of Company A, Thirteenth Illinois Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. None of us know anything about these bills. There ought to be some explanation of the merits of the bills.

Mr. BLAIR. There are printed reports in every case which have been on the files of the Senate ever since the cases have been on the Calendar, which is more than a month.

AARON C. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 4905) granting a pension to Aaron C. Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Aaron C. Johnson, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteers, and now a resident of Linden, Dallas County, Iowa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. CARLL.

The bill (H. R. 1106) granting a pension to Mary B. Carll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary B. Carll, widow of Erastus B. Carll, late a lieutenant of Company F, Second Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN SMARZO.

The bill (H. R. 4903) granting a pension to Christian Smarzo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Christian Smarzo, employé at Quartermaster's Department, United States Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read in that case of Smarzo.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL April 27, 1886.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting a pension to Christian Smarzo, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The committee have examined the papers in this case thoroughly, and find the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, though brief, yet complete in its statement of the facts. They therefore adopt said report, which is as follows:

"That Christian Smarzo was an employé in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, during the war of the rebellion, and that while so employed as a fireman on a locomotive engine, near Big Shanty, Ga., on the 25th of September, 1864, the train was attacked and captured by the enemy; claimant was wounded by a gunshot wound in left side, taken prisoner, held as such for three months, paroled, furloughed for three months, and then returned to same duty.

"His application for pension was rejected on the ground that 'he was not in the military service of the United States at the date of receipt of wound.' It is true claimant was not enlisted and mustered into the service, but he was performing a most perilous yet meritorious service, one that required a very high order of courage and soldierly valor. He was wounded and taken prisoner while at his post of duty, and as richly deserves reward as does he who fought with gun or sword."

This committee concur in the foregoing opinion, and unite with the House committee in recommending the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLLY HALL.

The bill (H. R. 3141) granting a pension to Polly Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Polly Hall, dependent mother of Amos L. Hall, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. BLAIR. That bill, if I recollect, was one where there was a probability of favorable action by the Commissioner of Pensions, which would give the claimant arrears. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a memorandum on the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the memorandum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is indorsed "indefinitely postpone."

Mr. BLAIR. Then the application must have been allowed at the Pension Office. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

AMANDA HOUSELL.

The bill (H. R. 3546) granting a pension to Amanda Housell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Amanda Housell (together with her minor children), widow of John M. Housell, late a private in Company K, First Regiment Maryland Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3546) granting a pension to Amanda Housell, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The committee, upon due consideration of this case, find the facts distinctly set forth in the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, as follows:

"It appears from the testimony in this case that John M. Housell, the husband of claimant, enlisted August 13, 1861, in Company C, Fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and was discharged October 29, 1862, upon a surgeon's certificate of disability because of 'chronic diarrhea, which resists all treatment; sick six months.' He re-enlisted June 20, 1864, in Company E, Eighth Regiment Maryland Volunteers, and was transferred to Company K, First Regiment Maryland Volunteers, and was mustered out August 1, 1865, at Washington, D. C., upon individual muster-out roll, as from general hospital, Alexandria, Va. The records of Lickle Hospital, Virginia, show that he was discharged from the service August 4, 1865, and was paid in full on same date at Washington, D. C., since which date his whereabouts have been unknown.

"The claimant, believing her husband to be dead, filed a claim for pension as widow April 9, 1881, and the claim was rejected on the ground 'that there is no record at the War Department of the date and cause of death of the soldier, and the claimant has declared her inability to prove the same.'"

The case was appealed to the honorable Secretary of the Interior. In transmitting the papers, the Commissioner of Pensions says:

"Whether his death was actually caused by the disease contracted in the service, or by events not due to his service, is a question that can not be determined by the facts before us.

"The Commissioner has no authority under the law to presume a result; he must decide questions on the facts presented, and in this instance it is clear that the soldier's death can not be definitely charged to the service. The case seems to be worthy of consideration by Congress with a view to special legislation to give title."

The Secretary of the Interior sustained the action of the Commissioner of Pensions in rejecting the claim, and in his opinion uses the following language:

"The presumption that the soldier is dead is very great, and the presumption that he died from chronic diarrhea and shortly after discharge is also great. The Department concurs in the opinion expressed in your report, quoted above, that you have no authority under the law to grant a pension in this case; and further, the Department concurs with you in the opinion that the case seems worthy of special legislation."

All the evidence goes to prove the good health and physical soundness of the soldier prior to enlistment, and further, bears out the expressed opinion of the Secretary of the Interior that his death occurred soon after his discharge.

This committee concur in the recommendation made by the said House committee that the bill do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the words "together with her minor children." It seems this man must have died about 1865; so that I do not think there are many minor children now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I rise to inquire if the report or the bill discloses who introduces it and when it was introduced?

Mr. BLAIR. This is a House bill, and I do not know who introduced it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does not either the bill or the report show?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was introduced in the House of Representatives. It is a House bill, and the papers do not show who introduced it in the House. The report was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Reported from the Committee on Pensions by the Senator from New Jersey; but neither the bill nor the report shows by whom it was introduced in the House. Is that what I understand?

Mr. BLAIR. That is the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate to show who introduced the bill in the House.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I simply want it understood that these measures are something that, as one of the younger members, I do not understand. I have no information about them, and I do not think my colleague has any. They are coming down from ancient times.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed

JOHN D. JAMES.

The bill (H. R. 3753) granting a pension to John D. James was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John D. James, late a private in Company H, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Artillery Volunteers.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL on the 27th of April, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3753) granting a pension to John D. James, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The committee find the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions to be full and accurate as to the evidence and facts in this case, and therefore present and adopt the same as their report. It is as follows:

"John D. James, late private Company H, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Artillery, filed his application for pension March 29, 1882, alleging disability from spinal wound received at Baltimore pike, Maryland, June 30, 1863, caused by his horse falling and by such fall the hammer of his revolver penetrated his spine and caused injury. The application was rejected May 23, 1885, on the ground that there was no record of alleged injury. The claimant proved that prior to the time of enlistment he was in good sound health and was free from injury to spine.

"The reports from Surgeon-General show that he entered Sutterlie general hospital, West Philadelphia, Pa., July 5, 1863, with rheumatism, the case-book showing debility, headache, and considerable pains in side and limbs, and after being transferred from one hospital to another was returned to duty December 7, 1863, being discharged from Convalescent Camp, Virginia, January 16, 1864, upon certificate of disability. The reports from Adjutant-General show that claimant enlisted in said company October 31, 1862, and the rolls for July and August report him absent, sick in United States general hospital at Chester, Pa., to December 31, 1863, January and February, 1864, and discharged for disability at Washington, D. C., January 16, 1864, the nature of illness not stated, and the regimental hospital records not on file.

"Dr. F. J. Bancroft, the surgeon of the regiment, testifies that claimant was a sound man prior to his enlistment; that he knew him before his enlistment into the service, and examined him at the time of his enlistment, and found no weakness of the spine existed at that time. He further says that he believes he treated him for injury to spine during term of service. Claimant expressed his inability to furnish the testimony of the officers or comrades of his company, because he has never been able to ascertain their whereabouts; that the captain, he has been informed, is dead, and his comrades so scattered about that it is impossible to find them; that one is in Germany, but though having written him repeatedly has never heard from him. It is shown that since his discharge claimant has been a constant sufferer from spinal derangement and unable to perform anything but light labor, and laid up with illness resulting from derangement of the spine a considerable part of the time, and in the enjoyment of very poor health, and incapacitated for even light labor fully one-half the time. The medical evidence filed shows frequent treatment since discharge for spinal derangement, and the examining surgeon, in reporting claimant two-thirds incapacitated for manual labor, says:

"'I find there has been an injury at about the eleventh dorsal vertebra, and quite tender for about 6 inches, and remember him being in county hospital for several months in 1878, with trouble in his back. He says he is not able to lift a pail of water without causing pain in the back.'

"Your committee believe this to be a deserving case, and though claimant has been unable to prove it, from the evidence presented and hospital records are of the opinion that the injury to spine was contracted, as alleged, in the service and line of duty, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

In this belief and recommendation this committee concur.

Mr. PLATT. I simply want to say that I think it is exceedingly doubtful whether this injury was received in the way claimed or not.

Mr. CAMERON. The surgeon who examined the man does not seem to think it was doubtful.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALONZO MAYNARD.

The bill (H. R. 3478) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Maynard, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alonzo Maynard, late a private in Company I, Eleventh Connecticut Volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET CALLANAN.

The bill (H. R. 4134) for the relief of Margaret Callanan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Callanan, of Orange, N. J., widow of Eugene Callanan, late a private in Company F, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSE A. M'MANUS.

The bill (H. R. 4884) granting a pension to Rose A. McManus was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rose A. McManus, widow of Isaac McManus, who was captain of Company G, One hundred and second Regiment of Illinois Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN HILDABRANT.

The bill (H. R. 4586) for the relief of Nathan Hildabrant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nathan Hildabrant, late of Company A, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM PAUGH.

MRS. ELLEN M. BOGGS.

The bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 8, after the word "month, to strike out:

To commence at the time of the death of her said husband, to wit, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1875, and to continue during her lifetime: Provided, That all payments heretofore made to the said Ellen M. Boggs by way of pension shall be deducted.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

In lieu of the amount now received by law.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen M. Boggs, widow of William Bienton Boggs, deceased, late a pay-director in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, having examined the same, do report as follows:

William Brenton Boggs, deceased, was a pay director in the Navy for many years, his entire period of service covering a quarter of a century. His record as an officer was without a flaw, while his gallantry was conspicuous.

The committee present, and make a part of their report, the following communication from Admiral Porter relating to this case:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL, Washington, D. C., December 13, 1880.

MY DEAR MADAM: I regret to hear that the letter I wrote you in regard to your late husband's services has been lost, either in the Naval Committee rooms or in the Pension Office. It will, however, make little difference, as I can tell you pretty much what I embodied in my former communication.

During the period I commanded the Mississippi squadron we had a large "wharf-boat," some 600 feet long, as a store-house for the squadron. This was set on fire one night in the year 1864 by means of a torpedo, and the flames spread so rapidly that it was with the utmost difficulty those on board escaped to the shore. The different pay officers of the station had all their accounts and the public money on board this vessel.

At the time of the fire your late husband, William B. Boggs, occupied the position of fleet paymaster of the Mississippi squadron, and slept on board the vessel to guard the public papers and money. He was the only one during the conflagration who did not leave his post, but forcing his way through the flames he succeeded in securing his books and papers, and then worked his way to the roof of the wharf, whence he jumped overboard and succeeded in saving his most valuable papers.

This was not done until his clothing was burned off and he was nearly scorched to a cinder. I saw him an hour after the accident, and a more dreadful burning I never witnessed.

For many months his life was despaired of, and when he was able to move about he was so marked that his most intimate friends would scarcely know him.

No doubt his death was greatly hastened by the terrible shock his constitution underwent at that time. I am satisfied that the stern bravery shown by Paymaster Boggs on the occasion entitles his widow to a pension as much as if the action had been performed in battle.

It was not the excitement of battle that sustained him, but a heroic effort to preserve the Government accounts, the loss of which would have compelled the payment of large sums of money by the Department to persons who had no real claim for compensation. I look upon this action of Mr. Boggs as one of the most heroic which came under my observation during the war. It was a case where a man battled with the flames with almost a certainty of losing his life. With all due respect for our legislators I am of the opinion that the widow of Paymaster Boggs is as much entitled to a pension as the widow of any other officer who was disabled during the war.

I remain very respectfully and truly yours,

DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.

Mrs. WILLIAM B. BOGGS,
Georgetown, D. C.

I omitted to state in the body of this communication what I said in my former one, that I think that Congress should give you an incredse of pension to the amount of $50 a month. Thirty dollars per month is what any officer's widow can obtain whose husband has performed ordinary service. That you can claim without going to Congress, and $50 per month should be given for heroic conduct. I think if Congress can be made to understand all the bearings of this matter they will not fail to do justice in the premises.

DAVID D. PORTER.

The death of Pay Director Boggs left the claimant, his widow, in very straitened circumstances, and the committee, believing her condition to be such as to warrant the proposed increase, recommended the passage of the bill as amended, to wit:

"Strike out on line 8, after the word "month," the rest of the section, with the proviso, and insert the following: 'in lieu of the amount now received by law.'"

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment is proper; but I desire to say that I am opposed to all bills increasing pensions to these large amounts, and this is one of them, but I shall not take the time of the Senate in discussing it.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5937) granting a pension to Sarah Gregg, have examined the same, and adopt the House report and recommend the passage of the bill.

From well-authenticated papers filed with the committee, it appears that Sarah Gregg now resides in the city of Ottawa, State of Illinois, and has resided there for many years; that on or about the 1st of January, 1863, she volunteered and entered the hospital service of the United States, and from thenceforward until about the 20th day of June, 1865, she gave her entire time and service to the care of the sick and wounded soldiers of the Union Army; that she was located as follows: From January 1, 1863, to February 5 of the same year, at Mound City, Ill.; from the 10th of February to the 25th of May, 1863, at Camp Stebbins, near Ottawa, Ill.; from the 1st of June to the 23d of that month, on board the City of Alton, in an expedition down the Mississippi River to bring sick and wounded soldiers from Vicksburg; from the 29th of January, 1864, to the 20th of June, 1865, as matron of the general hospital at Camp Butler, near Springfield, Ill.

Your committee further state that the facts above set forth are fully corroborated by the statements of William M. Daily, hospital chaplain, United States Army, on duty in general hospital, Camp Butler, Illinois; by H. B. Buck, assistant surgeon of hospitals and also superintendent of hospitals; by A. B. Campbell, surgeon United States volunteers, in charge of general hospital; and the certificate and warm commendation of nearly one hundred sick and wounded soldiers who testify to the tender and faithful service rendered them by Mrs. Gregg.

This worthy hospital nurse and matron is now seventy-six years of age and reduced to poverty, and on this account only now asks that her patriotic and valuable service to the Union Army may be rewarded by a pension.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I hear that is to pension the sister of a soldier. I ask that the bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BECK. Once in a while, in one case out of about ten perhaps, the report had better be read, so that the President or somebody who seeks to revise these bills may see what they are. Just to have a bill read and say "it is read the third time and passed" gives very little information, unless the committee will say they believe it is right and that they have examined it. We have had two or three vetoes and several suggestions that nobody knew anything about what was being done. Surely I do not know, and I do not think any member of the Senate does.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not like to hear such an impeachment of the faithfulness of the Senate in discharging its duty. The committee certainly, in the discharge of its duty, furnishes a careful report on each one of these cases, which is printed and on the files of each Senator. All he has to do is to attend to business and look the reports over before the bills are called up. They are like other cases, but of course I have no objection to all the reports being read. It is not my province to object to that. The reports are made on purpose to be read, and if Senators think they ought to be read in each case as we go along, there is no objection. It will only take more time; that is all.

Mr. BECK. A report ought to be read once in a while to show that some one has looked at it. This woman may have married but a week or two ago. I do not know. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. ALLISON. These are all reports of the Committee on Pensions, who have examined the cases.

Mr. BECK. But the Committee on Pensions, I understand from the President's veto, sent him some two hundred and odd bills that he had no information about, and he found several that he did not understand, and a very large number he allowed to become laws without his approval, because he did not know whether they were right or not. If the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee will condescend to advise us that there are reports, I think it would be well enough if in an occasional case one should be read.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection to the reading of the report.

Mr. BECK. I desire to know without the report whether this is a proper case or not?

Mr. BLAIR. I did not examine this case; it was reported by another Senator, and it is not at all likely that any member of the committee can remember all of these names in connection with the report itself unless he is referred to the report. The fact that a report is made necessarily implies an examination of the facts; otherwise they can not be detailed in the report. You have there, if it is a benefit, the benefit of the opinion of the committee.

The reference to the action of the President is contrary to the rules. If it is not contrary to the rules, it certainly ought to be contrary to the rules. It is no matter of mine what the President has done in reference to the discharge of his duty. If he sees fit to admonish the Senate with messages, that is all very well; but he has not undertaken to say that the committee of the Senate or the Senate itself has been derelict in its duty, or that it has acted favorably upon cases where the facts did not justify it. If he saw fit to administer his censure, it is quite questionable whether the Senate might not return the same in kind.

The President has vetoed two pension bills, one upon the ground that there was a mistake in the given name; the other upon a ground which was a mistake of his own in a matter of law, that Congress having passed a special act some two months after it had previously passed and the President had signed a general act which gave a widow $12 a month, the special act passed two months later would deprive her of the benefits of the increase during those two months. The fact is that this woman would take her increase under the general law up to the time when the special act was passed, and if the special act was of any consequence at that time she would commence to draw under the special act $12 a month under the general law.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Allow me to ask——

Mr. BLAIR. Not now. I decline to yield until I complete my sentence.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I shall decline to yield when you propose to take up your pension bills hereafter. I understand that this is a bill to pension a sister. I never heard of sisters being in an army.

Mr. BLAIR. I was speaking of the allusion to the action of the President in reference to these cases. I specified the two cases in which he has vetoed bills sent to him, and I have said all I care to say in regard to that. But I do submit that if it is improper in the Senate to refer to the action of the other House to influence the action of the Senate, it is equally improper to refer to the action of the President for the purpose of affecting the judgment and action of members of the committee or of the Senate itself.

These pension cases, so far as I know from long experience upon this committee, are examined with as much care as they have ever been. I think generally an examination of the reports will show that to be the case; perhaps it is universally so. It is true that the Senate, after having neglected or having failed to take up pension cases, have frequently, as they have in former sessions, after some four or five months had elapsed, found their files overloaded with pension bills, and they have taken them up and passed a great many in a single day; and now for a long time not having acting upon pension cases, there is another very large accumulation.

That these cases are disposed of with rapidity when they are called up is almost a matter of necessity; but that in any case there is a pension bill upon the Calendar without a report is not true; and Senators have the same opportunity to examine these cases before they are called up for action in the Senate that they have in any other matters which are the subject of legislation. So I do not know any reason why, for the purpose of finding out whether the committee has done its duty or not, the reading of the reports should be called for in every tenth case. I do not think that would be a rule which would be a very good test of the work of the committee.

I have said all I wish to say upon that matter. The reading of the report is called for, I believe. I hope it will be read.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New Hampshire must be aware that we have a regular Calendar and that a Senator is presumed to look at the reports as cases are reached on the Calendar; but when a motion is made to proceed to consider pension cases, the bill is read and a suggestion is made by the President of the Senate "the bill will be considered read the third time and passed," and another is called and another and so on, and no opportunity for explanation is given, so far as I know, unless objection is made, and no member of the committee rises and says he has examined this case and believes it to be right. I was not aware that there was any such sanctity in regard to the action of the Committee on Pensions as to their absolute carefulness, as to make it an offense to rise and ask whether a case is right or not.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand the Senator at all.

Mr. BECK. When I saw by the veto message of the President that in one case one man had been pensioned where another man was intended, that in the case of a widow her pension was cut down when it was not intended to be, and when two hundred and odd bills were sent to him in one day, a large majority of which did not seem to have been considered, I thought I had a right to ask the members of the committee if a bill of this character had been looked at and who had charge of it. In the particular case I happened to mention the chairman himself admits that he knows nothing about it and no member of the committee rises and says he knows anything about it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator advise me who knows anything about it?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator who has reported the bill.

Mr. BECK. By what Senator was the bill reported?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. I reported the bill. I think it is a just bill. I could not give details without calling for the reading of the report.

Mr. BECK. I am entirely content to take any statement the Senator from Wisconsin will make.

Mr. SAWYER. I have not reported a single case to the Senate that I do not believe is a just case.

Mr. BECK. There is no man in the Senate whose word I would sooner take.

Mr. SAWYER. I have examined personally every one I have reported.

Mr. BECK. This is the first moment I ever heard that the Senator from Wisconsin knew anything about it. The chairman of the committee knew nothing of it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is quite mistaken.

Mr. BECK. I do not call for the reading of the report when the Senator from Wisconsin advises me that he has examined the case and it is all right.

Mr. BLAIR. Have I the floor? The Senator yielded the floor before I began.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kentucky is quite at fault if he thinks anybody objects to the calling for the reading of these reports, and I do not undertand that there is anything unusual claimed by the Committee on Pensions. They simply submit their reports. These cases go upon the Calendar. They are liable to be taken up and considered at length, every one of them. It is the privilege of members of the Senate to not only call for the reading of the reports, but to discuss the reports and reject the cases if they see fit.

The Senator is quite mistaken in supposing that the President has vetoed a bill because one man was pensioned when another was intended. That is not so. The same bill by the personal description given shows with certainty who was intended, and nothing is the matter with that bill except that there was a mistake in a man's given name, and a very natural mistake for the eye to make, as any one will see who examines the true name and compares it with the one which appeared upon the Calendar. There is no special difficulty about any of these matters that I am aware of.

Mr. BECK. If you pensioned Robert Smith when you intended John Smith, it would be very difficult for the Pension Bureau to pay the pension.

Mr. BLAIR. If John Smith, a private in Company A, Twenty-first Kentucky Volunteers, were pensioned while the act itself said "Samuel Smith, Company A, Twenty-first Kentucky Volunteers," it would be a certain description by comparison with the roll; but of course it is proper that the bill should be reintroduced, as it has been, in the House where it originated, and it will presently reach us, if it has not already, by the true name, I have no doubt.

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator think John would have got the pension?

Mr. BLAIR. It is the same person in one case as in the other. That is certain which may be rendered certain. The result would have been in that case, without further legislation, undoubtedly that nobody would have got the pension, but the wrong man never would have got it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say one word on this subject, though I am very sorry to detain the Senate, because I think there is danger that the public will get an idea that the members of this body act with undue and improper haste in this matter.

We have to legislate for the national affairs of sixty million people; we have to deal with very vast public questions touching railroads, commerce, tariffs, Army, and Navy, and all the mechanism of this complicated Government, to say nothing about legislating for the capital District, with a population of 200,000 inhabitants, as their Legislature. It is maniestly impossible that this body should deal with two or three thousand pension cases every year and have the facts in each case explained to the Senate. It is not possible to do it within the twelve months, and if we did great public interests would be neglected.

We give to the Pension Office the ordinary administration of the pension laws. It is a service which is performed by one man, and, without the slightest disrespect to that officer or the slightest vanity on our own part, I suppose it is not improper to say that he is an officer who would rank in the scale of public service below a Senator of the United States as a rule, and here are seventy-six Senators. Now what do we do in regard to this pension matter? We commit these special bills to a committee who have policies and rules, which are just as well fixed and settled as the rules provided in the statutes for the government of the Commissioner of Pensions.

There are certain cases where the facts can not be proved by the ordinary rules of evidence administered in the Pension Office, yet where they are shown to be true to the absolute satisfaction of everybody by other and different classes of evidence, but they require special legislation. There are cases of peculiar hardship in the application of our general rules which can not very well be defined in statutes. Now, if that committee of nine persons had presented to it any case of doubtful policy or not coming within the principles on which the Senate acts there would be a division of opinion and a minority report, and we should debate it and understand it.

So it seems to me that when we have the report of that committee that a pension case comes within their rules, if there was anything wrong or questionable about it some one member of that committee would remonstrate, and we are justified in saving the public time, instead of leaving five times as much business which the people want to have done untouched when we adjourn, by taking on the faith of the report of nine Senators what in the ordinary administration of law is done on the faith of the report of a Commissioner of Pensions alone.

At the same time it is not at all strange that in two or three thousand cases an incident like that which the President has discovered and to which the Senator from Kentucky has alluded should have happened. I do not think it indicates any want of care on the part of the committee.

I think I ought to say that the members of this body owe a debt of gratitude, and the soldiers and people of this country owe a debt of gratitude, to the gentlemen who are willing to serve upon the Committee on Pensions, which is not understood by the public. It is a great sacrifice for a Senator like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], or the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], to give half the hours of his week outside of the Senate Chamber to investigating the details of case after case where there can by no possibility be any compensation to him either in public credit, or fame, or any other way. It is, as far as the Senator does it, a mere drudgery, and a drudgery performed from the highest motive. I am sure that if my honorable friend from Kentucky were put upon the Committee on Pensions by the Senate he would not accept that service. He would consider that he was entitled to be exempted. At the same time the committee ought not to be subject to serious criticism.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that when I vote against pensions I vote against bills that I think do not mean to pension soldiers. I vote to pension soldiers; but I do think it is my right to ask even the Senator from New Hampshire who presents these pension bills whether they are to pension soldiers or not.

Mr. HOAR. I did not criticise my honorable friend from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know that.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say what I said as an answer to any particular Senator, but because I think there is a public misapprehension on this subject.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There may be now and then a pension case which would justify the delays of debate, but this does not seem to be a case of that kind. The report is as follows:

The petitioner in this case is Elizabeth Forgey, widow of James A. Forgey, late Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to whom was granted an invalid's pension by special act of Congress, approved March 3, 1875.

So that Congress passed upon the soldier's case and granted the pension. The committee continued by saying:

There is satisfactory proof that the soldier died of the disease for which he was pensioned.

It seems to me there ought to be no difficulty about passing this bill without any further discussion.

Mr. BECK. The suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] amount simply to this, that when we have bills reported from the Pension Committee without a minority report we might as well lump them all together and pass them without saying a word. That, perhaps, would be good legislation; perhaps not.

I suppose that no committee is infallible. The Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the Geneva award to-day did not seem to be infallible, and its amendments were all overruled after a very earnest presentation of the matter, in opposition to the report by the Senator from Massachusetts; and I suppose that the Committee on Pensions, who, I presume, very seldom see what is done, except what is reported by one member, might sometimes make a mistake. At last it comes down to this, that we are either without question to pass everything that nobody objects to in the committee, or we are to be told that we are objecting to the pensioning of soldiers.

Perhaps the laws had better be amended so as to give more extensive jurisdiction to the Commissioner of Pensions. Perhaps this is the best way to do it. I was a little unfortunate, I suppose, after what has been said, in asking anybody to state whether he knew that this case was right. That seems to be an offense, and the pension must go through unless there is an objection to it by other members of the committee, no one of whom perhaps ever saw the case except the member who presented it. We are told that that is legislation and that it is to relieve against hardships which a general law can not reach. That is not the way I want to have it done.

I suppose the best way to keep from being censured for impertinent interference is to let every pension case go, and let it be done as it has been done for the last two hours by reading the bill and saying, "the bill will be read the third time and passed." From this time on I think I shall adopt that course, and let it go.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator makes that motion I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. CAMERON. I do for a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator from Kentucky mean to intimate that any member of the Pension Committee has accused him of impertinence or of improper intermeddling with the course of legislation upon these pension bills?

Mr. BECK. I do not care to answer that question.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator could not answer it and tell the truth if he answered it in the affirmative.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to answer the Senator from New Hampshire upon any suggestion as to telling the truth. I think I am as truthful as he will venture to be.

Mr. BLAIR. For that very reason I said he could not answer it in the affirmative. He well knows that nobody has found any fault whatever with his interference, and it is not necessary that in the last of his remarks he should undertake to give the impression that the committee arrogates anything to itself, any claim of infallibility, or makes any complaint of any description at the fullest investigation of its work.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to withold the motion for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let us finish this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I will give way to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HAMPTON. The chairman of the Pension Committee was kind enough to say that when this case was disposed of he would give me an opportunity to ask to call up the bill (S. 98) for the relief of William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the Senator does that, I ask that the pending pension bill may be disposed of.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am perfectly willing to allow that to be done. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask him to withdraw it temporarily.

Mr. CAMERON. I will withhold the motion for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending pension bill will be reported to the Senate and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask that the bill be read and that the report of the committee be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1825) granting a pension to Elizabeth Forgey, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner in this case is Elizabeth Forgey, widow of James A. Forgey, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to whom was granted an invalid's pension by special act of Congress, approved March 3, 1875. There is satisfactory proof that the soldier died of the disease for which he was pensioned.

The bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if it were earlier in the day I would say more. I must say a few words, though this is not precisely the proper occasion. If the vetoed pension bill were before us I should be disposed to speak somewhat at length.

The President makes the point in that veto that a large number of the cases represented by private bills have been examined and rejected by the Pension Bureau. That is true; and yet when you reflect that there are perhaps 30,000 pensions granted and many thousand others rejected by the Commisioner of Pensions every single year, and reflect that he is obliged to govern himself according to positive law, which law cannot reach all equitable circumstances, you must see that he is obliged to reject in many instances in which he and everybody about him, and every impartial person, must see that the soldier or the widow is really and honestly entitled to a pension.

It is simply the truth, taught by Blackstone, which every young man who has been admitted to the bar ought to know, that there should be somewhere a court of equity; that equity "supplies that wherein the law by reason of its universality is deficient." Now suppose that they consider fifty thousand cases a year in the bureau, is it anything unreasonable to expect a docket of a thousand or twelve hundred cases here before this reviewing court of equity?

The President suggests that if the present law be not sufficient to meet all the necessities and equities of the business, we should amend the law. Every lawyer can tell you that the more you amend, the more you extend the law, the more likely you are to have these exceptional and equitable cases that are rejected under some one or other of the elaborated requirements.

It may therefore be accepted as the ordinary natural outcome that there should be a very considerable number of equitable cases that must go to a court of equity for any measure of relief. It is impossible to reach them by law. It would not be surprising if a careful mathematical calculation should show that two thousand petitions for pensions ought to be expected by Congress every year, petitions the majority of which would be shown to be equitable.

I give as an example House bill 3546, which we have just passed. The report is before me, but I can not delay to give it in full. A soldier was wounded; he was sent to hospital; after a time he was paid and discharged, and then he disappeared forever. The Commissioner of Pensions could not give the widow a pension because the fact of the death was not established. For some reason or other he did not apply the ordinary rules which are laid down in State courts in the settlement of estates after many years of disappearance unaccounted for. The soldier had been lost for twenty years, but the death could not be proved and therefore the widow was not granted a pension, and she came to Congress for the relief which I think we have just properly granted.

I am not troubled that there were two hundred and forty cases supposed to be similarly just passed in a day or two. They were the accumulation of a winter's work. I have thought we were perhaps a little hasty. But that is a small number in comparison with the several hundred thousand claims which have been made, and it is a small number in comparison with the million or million and a quarter of soldiers who are now surviving and the hundreds of thousands who have died and left widows.

There are other points in the message which might be answered. These are sufficient, I submit, if generally stated by the press of the country, to correct some of the misapprehensions to which the veto message has given rise. Congress has made no answer to it. The bill was a House bill. The veto message has gone there. I hope and have reason to believe that something in the nature of a formal explanation will come from the House of Representatives and will also come from this body if a vetoed bill should come here, but in the mean time the newspaper press have got the impression that we are legislating in a reckless way and that all these things might be settled in the Pension Bureau if we chose to have it so.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Let us dispose of this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well; if it can be done without further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is that the same bill which was just read that has been ordered to a third reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the same bill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish simply to say before the bill is disposed of, and in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], that I am not opposed to pensioning soldiers, but I am opposed to pensioning those who are not soldiers. If I speak from one standpoint and he from another the Senator will excuse me, for he would not even answer my question this evening. I will go back and antedate even his proposition by saying that when you pay a pension to one you have got to draw the money from another. Therefore it is that whenever the committee come in here and ask us to pay pensions to people I want to know whether they deserve the pension, and on being shown that they do deserve it I shall always vote for granting the pension.

I do not believe that a committee of nine constitute a Senate of seventy-six, and I do believe that a committee of nine sent out to make an inquiry are only to come back into this body to be inquired of, and unless that committee shall understand their proper functions in that respect it is the duty of this body to make another committee of nine that shall not assume to be the United States Senate.

Now, sir, if I go too far I ask pardon. I say that I am ready to vote for pensions, but I do not think that it is a proper thing to come here and say, forsooth, "I am a member of a committee, and therefore you shall vote just exactly as I report." I shall not do it. Sir, it has gotten to the point now that we must just take up so many pension bills or so many of another class of bills that are reported from certain committees and that a day must be set apart for them. Each bill appropriates money, and the Senator from New Hampshire swaps seats around the Chamber to get the attention of the presiding officer to show that he is the custodian of all the patriotism of the people of the United States, and refuses from that selected seat to give information because he belongs to that committee.

Mr. BLAIR. The President of the Senate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to correct a misapprehension of the Senator from Virginia, and he can refer to the RECORD to satisfy himself whether he has misapprehended what has passed during the last half hour. I have refused to answer no question of the Senator from Virginia. I have declined to give no information that he has requested from me or from the committee.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator from New Hampshire has made his statement and I have made mine, and the Senate has possibly heard both. I did ask him a question as to whether he was not proposing here through a bill presented by himself to pension the sister of a soldier, and if so, to give me a reason for it, because every time you vote a dollar out of the Treasury you vote a dollar out of the pockets of the people.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me again?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Why, certainly, sir; I am determined to outdo the Senator from New Hampshire in courtesy.

Mr. BLAIR. That is utterly impossible, I assure the Senator, when it comes to a matter of amiability and politeness, so far as the intent is concerned. I doubt not his courtesy so far as outward appearance is concerned is greater than mine; but I assure him that so far as the emotions of the soul go I shall not yield to him the palm without a little contest, and after taking evidence, if necessary, by a committee of the Senate.

The Senator did not ask me the question which he thinks he asked me. The Senator made a sidelong observation without rising from his seat or propounding the question interrogatively to any one, if the pension was not a pension to a sister, or some question of that kind. Whatever he said I did not understand it to be propounded to me. Besides that, the Senator will find by observing the bill upon which this discussion has arisen that it is not a bill to pension a sister. It is to pension a widow. It was reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. I have no special knowledge in regard to it excepting what is in the report which I have not myself referred to, but I have all confidence in the findings of fact by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator might very easily have explained by answering the simple interrogatory at the outset as to whether the word "sister" was not used. In the reading of the report and of the bill I so understood it, and I do understand now that we are passing bills here ad libitum. Nobody stops to inquire into the merits. I mean to say more than that, that I am opposed to that mode of operations here, I care not how patriotic it may appear to gentlemen on the other side, I care not how patriotic it may appear to gentlemen on this side. You have got a generation now to take care of, and you have got everything from your mother-in-law down to your youngest sister in your pension bills. We are living for the present, and not for the past. We are living, I think, to take care of this country from 1884 to 1888, and let 1888 even take care of itself.

These are not idle words, but after a while, possibly when disappointment comes, even Senators will stop to consider as to whether there is not some widow or some sister or some child of a man who was not killed in the war struggling to-day for subsistence, pleading at his door for help. Let only soldiers ask for Government help, and we can always give it to them. Let only soldiers come here pleading for pensions, and the Government is able and willing to pension them. But when you bring everything in here that is in need of help and build a roof over this Government and call it an almshouse, for one, feeling as kindly as I do for everybody, I must enter an earnest protest and an honest one against it.

These pension bills mean that. They mean nothing else than that. They mean to take the mother, the grandmother, if you please, or the great grandmother of the soldier and coming here plead to a man who feels kindly toward them, and ask this Government to give them bread and raiment. The soldier himself does not want it; his family do not want it.

I say, therefore, that I oppose these measures and that I shall oppose them, and I am not afraid of the soldier sentiment of this country on both sides.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAMPTON. It was understood that the bill which I desire to call up should be considered.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not aware of that. I withdraw the motion.

WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 98) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the consideration of that bill, if it is in order to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2136) for the relief of Edward Fenlon.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF LABOR COMMISSIONER.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 30,000 additional copies of the first annual report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor be printed; 8,000 for the use of the Senate, 16,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,000 for the use of the Commissioner of said bureau.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

POSTMASTERS.

In the Senate, May 21, 1886.

The injunction of secrecy having been removed from the following five reports on nominations (the notices of the confirmation of which having been heretofore published) they were ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

That an examination of this case shows that Frank G. Atherton was suspended from the office of postmaster at Osage, Iowa, for and on account of political considerations. The committee have found nothing in the case reflecting on his character as a man in any degree hurtful to him, nor as tending to discredit his faithfulness as an officer.

The committee find that Sumner B. Chase, the person nominated to the Senate to be postmaster at said city of Osage is a man of good character, and is competent to efficiently discharge the duties of the office to which he has been nominated, and recommend that he be confirmed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

That on December 16, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate A. L. Downard to be postmaster at Marengo, Iowa, vice Hamilton R. Crenshaw, suspended; that no charges appear in the files sent to the committee, at its request, by the Postmaster-General, tending to injuriously affect the character of the suspended officer, either as a man or as an officer; the office was wanted for a Democrat; one has been nominated. The papers on file show him to be well indorsed by the members of the community in which the office is located, and that he is competent to discharge the duties involved in the administration of the position to which he is nominated.

The committee therefore report the nomination of A. L. Downard to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

On the —— day of December, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate Harry C. Evans to be postmaster at Bloomfield, Iowa, vice A. H. Fortune, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons, and the committee have found nothing in the case affecting the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office.

The committee, therefore, report the nomination of the said Harry C. Evans to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred, the nomination of E. D. Fenn, to be postmaster at Nevada, Story County, Iowa, vice T. J. Ross, suspended, reports:

That there seems to have been no cause for the suspension of Mr. Ross other than that he was a consistent and active member of the Republican party; and that his suspension was desired on that account in order that a member of the Democratic party might be appointed in his stead. The committee find nothing in the case tending to reflect discredit on Mr. Ross either as a man, a citizen, or public officer. The nominee is a worthy man, was a soldier in the Union Army, and seems to be giving satisfaction to the community immediately interested as a public officer.

The committee therefore report the nomination of E. D. Fenn to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

That the files of the Post-Office Department in respect of both the suspended officer, George Phillips, and William T. Sharp, nominated to succeed him, were placed in the possession of the committee by the Postmaster-General, in compliance with its request; that the files disclose no charges against the suspended officer other than of a political character; that it is alleged that he was an active and efficient member of the Republican party; that nothing appears in the said files tending to question the good character or integrity of the suspended official, either as a man or as an officer; that his suspension is wholly based on political reasons, so far as the committee can determine; that he was a Republican in office, and his place was wanted for a Democrat; that the Democrat nominated appears from the papers in the case to be a man of good character, and seems to be giving satisfaction to the patrons of the office in his administration of it.

The committee therefore report the nomination of William T. Sharp to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 21, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DRAUGHTSMEN, BUREAU STEAM-ENGINEERING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate from the Secretary of the Navy for the pay of draughtsmen in the Bureau of Steam-Engineering for the next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 1886) for the relief of the soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after three months' service who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 290) for the relief of Davidson Dickson and others—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas, with amendments by the Senate—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HIESTAND, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for four days on account of important business.

MRS. SARAH L. LARIMER.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6051, and that the bill be now considered by the House. It is a bill to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyo., and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer the sum of $15,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for property taken by the Indians at the time of her captivity, in the year 1864, as well as for valuable services rendered the Government in the year 1864 by giving important information to Captain Shuman, in command of the United States troops, and others, of the evil designs of hostile Indians, while she was held in captivity by them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, is there a report accompanying that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes so.

Mr. LANHAM. There is a report. The bill comes from the Committee on Claims. The committee, however, recommend an amendment, reducing the amount from fifteen thousand to five thousand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "five," in line 5.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the request in regard to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman in charge of the bill will make an explanation of it.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, this lady, who is an estimable lady of fine character, was captured by the Indians and kept in confinement several days, when she made her escape and gave very valuable information to our officers. Another lady who was captured at the same time, Miss Fannie Kelly, received $15,000 from the Government for her information, which was not so great as that given by Mrs. Larimer, and she lost less property than Mrs. Larimer. I was in hopes that the committee would allow this lady $10,000, but the vote will be, I suppose, upon the report of the committee.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, if there is a report I ask to have it read.

The report (by Mr. LANHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6051) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in the year 1864, at Deer Creek Station, in Wyoming Territory, and for loss of property taken by the Sioux Indians, report as follows:

It appears from the evidence that in July of the year 1864 Lieutenant Larimer and his wife, the claimant, Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, and their child, Frank E. Larimer, left their home in Kansas to cross the plains for the restoration of said Lieutenant Larimer's health, he having been a commissioned officer in the Union Army and honorably discharged because of his health having given out through hard service in the war; that they took with them horses, and wagons, and goods, and some money; and that when they were in Wyoming Territory, and in company with several other traveling persons, they were surprised by a band of Sioux Indians, who murdered three of the party, wounded two, and captured claimant, Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, and her child, and one other lady and child.

Claimant, Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, and her child, Frank E. Larimer, were carried far into the mountainous hills, a distance of 75 miles or more. That she finally escaped from her savage captors in the darkness of night, carrying her child in her arms, and with great hardship and much suffering, being unaided and alone, they traveled on foot over the wild and dangerous hills, arriving at the emigrant road in almost a nude condition, their clothing having been torn from their persons. At this emigrant road, and at a place called Deer Creek Station, claimant met Captain Shuman and Captain Marshall, of the Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, then moving against the Indians, and communicated to these officers much valuable information as to the designs of the Indians.

These two commanding officers, Captains Shuman and Marshall, swear that if it had not been for the information given by Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer the command with which they were about to start out at that hour would have been massacred and destroyed, but by acting under her information, dismounting and arming the teamsters, and gathering in all the available and additional forces within immediate reach, and by following the directions given by Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer they were able to avoid the great destruction to the command and to citizens that otherwise would have happened.

It further appears that claimant, as well as citizens, testify to the fact of claimant's captivity and to her loss of property by the Sioux Indians at said time and place.

It seems that by acts of Congress, in the year 1870 and in the year 1872, the lady, Miss Fannie Kelly, who was captured at the same time and place and by the very same Indians who captured Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, has been allowed payment for valuable information and loss of property.

The affidavits of Captain Shuman and of Captain Marshall, two of the witnesses offered in support of this claim, are herewith attached and made a part thereof.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "five," in line 5, and with that amendment that it do pass.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the House, notwithstanding the finding of the committee, to allow Mrs. Larimer $10,000. As I have said, another lady who was captured at the same time was given $15,000, although she did not give as valuable information or lose as much property as Mrs. Larimer. The evidence is pretty clear that Mrs. Larimer lost in the neighborhood of $10,000 worth of property, and besides that the proof is clear that she saved our command by the information that she gave. I hope the House will allow her $10,000; and I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee so as to make the amount $10,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As a member of the Committee on Claims I deem it simple justice to myself to state that I was only present in the committee during a very short period of the discussion on this bill. I had the pleasure of listening for a few moments to the persuasive tones of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD]; but when the vote was taken I expressly reserved the right to follow my own judgment upon this case, irrespective of the finding of the committee. I do not concur in the majority report. I did not think it necessary to file a minority report; but I have said thus much in justice to myself.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD] to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000."

Mr. WOLFORD'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out in the bill the words "fifteen thousand dollars" and insert "five thousand dollars," it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that any argument will do any good here; but let me ask the House to consider upon what this claim is based. First, upon the proposition that property was destroyed, whether a dollar, a thousand dollars, or a million dollars, neither you nor I have any more idea than the man in the moon.

Mr. LANHAM. The uncertainty as to the exact amount is the reason, if the gentleman will permit me to state it, why the Committee on Claims reduced the amount from $15,000 to $5,000, and blended the claim for loss of property and valuable information.

Mr. PRICE. Simply because you did not know whether the value of the property destroyed was one dollar or a million dollars?

Mr. LANHAM. Money and property were lost, as appeared from the testimony; but the evidence was not sufficiently explicit as to the amount.

Mr. PRICE. Precisely.

Mr. LANHAM. And this bill proposes to give compensation not only for the property destroyed but for valuable information furnished to the Government troops at that time, for which a precedent can be shown.

Mr. PRICE. I was coming to that point. The first proposition is to give this woman money because her property was destroyed by Indians. Now, I say that from the reading of the report there is not the slightest indication which will enable us to determine whether the value of the property destroyed was a dollar, a thousand dollars, or a million dollars.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman——

Mr. PRICE. Pardon me a moment. Therefore, because the committee had not the most remote information upon which to base an opinion of the value of the property lost, the committee, as I understand the gentleman, reduced the amount from $15,000 to $5,000. Now, the same reasoning would have justified cutting down the amount to $1; indeed, the loss of one dollar's worth of property is not proven by the report.

Having disposed of that question, the next point is that this woman gave important information, by which we were able to protect ourselves from the Indians. Who would not do that under similar circumstances? She was found by the United States troops in the woods, naked, almost torn to pieces, having been abused by the Indians while their prisoner. She gave us the information she had in her possession, which was valuable to us. Must we pay her for that? Why the proposition is simply ridiculous.

The next argument in favor of making payment as proposed in this bill is that some other woman captured at the same time or some other time has been paid for giving valuable information. Sir, when this House is driven to a point where it can find no justification at all for a measure, then the records of Congress are searched to find a case in which something equally without justification has been done; and this is set up as a precedent.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will take the trouble to examine the entire report he will find, in addition to what has been read, appended to it in the nature of exhibits, two affidavits, one of Captain Marshall and another of Captain Shuman, which state the fact that property, including horses, a wagon, some money, and other property, was lost. This is all stated in the supplement to the report, though it was not read by the Clerk, these affidavits being attached as exhibits. There was a volume of testimony, though only so much as was deemed necessary and important was incorporated in the report by the committee or appended in the form of exhibits. Now, in 1870 and 1872——

Mr. PRICE. Are you making this speech or I?

Mr. LANHAM. I just wanted to explain that you had not fully examined the report, and to show what Congress had done in a similar case in the past.

Mr. PRICE. You are doing admirably—better, no doubt, than I could, but you are not on the right side; that is the only objection to your occupying the floor all the morning.

Mr. LANHAM. I only meant to explain——

Mr. PRICE. After the gentleman's explanation I have no doubt at all that he has seen something to indicate to him that $5,000 is a proper sum to be paid in this case; but having called for the reading of the report, the only source of information at our command, I undertake to say there is not a scintilla of evidence there to prove the loss of a single dollar. We have simply a vague, indefinite statement that something was lost; that is all, so far as I know. I do not say that if the subject were investigated it could not be shown that some property was lost; and if so, the next question would be as to the amount of the loss, whether $100, $1,000, or $10,000. Whatever amount may be proved by proper evidence to have been lost I am willing we shall pay for, provided you first establish the fact that the Government is responsible for the losses sustained by persons who, while traveling in the Indian country, are overtaken by the Indians and despoiled of their property, but I do not believe that doctrine. To sum up my position on this case: First, I do not believe we are responsible for acts committed by the Indians; second, I do not know that a single dollar's worth of property was destroyed; third, I am not willing to pay for information thus obtained; and fourth, I am not willing to vote one dollar because somebody else has been paid on a similar basis.

Mr. STRUBLE. I presume that this payment does not come out of any Indian fund.

Mr. LANHAM. No, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. But it is to be paid directly from the Treasury.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. This seems to be a matter of considerable importance, and I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims for further information.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order, the previous question having been ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill. When the bill is upon its passage the motion will be in order to recommit with or without instructions.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there were—ayes 31, noes 40.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I will move, Mr. Speaker, if I can get consent, to recommit the bill rather than have it adversely acted upon.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent, the previous question having been ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WOLFORD. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EDWIN STEVENS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7809) for the relief of Edwin Stevens, and put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The letter from the Secretary of State to the House of Representatives, which is embodied in the report, I think will explain fully the reason for this; and I ask that that portion of the report be read, which will occupy the time of the House but briefly.

There was no objection.

The letter embodied in the report was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 21, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, inclosing a copy of bill (H. R. 7809) for the relief of Edwin Stevens, late consul at Ningpo, and asking my opinion as to the justice of the claim. This case has been very carefully considered by the Department of State, and the conclusion reached that the money claimed, $730, was actually expended in the interest and for the benefit of the United States, and that Congress should provide for its reimbursement. It was not thought proper to settle the account from any fund at the disposal of the Department.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

S. E. SCARBOROUGH.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3257) for the relief of S. E. Scarborough, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out in the fifth line "one hundred" and insert "$91.08;" also amend the second section to conform to the amended first section, so that it will read: "That the sum of $91.08 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to pay said claim."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH. On last Tuesday I presented the report of the Committee on the Territories on the bill H. R. 2850, under the impression that the Committee on the Judiciary, to which committee the bill had been originally referred, had been discharged from its further consideration. Since that report was submitted I have discovered my mistake, and now ask consent to withdraw the report.

There was no objection, and the report was withdrawn.

SURVIVORS OF ARCTIC STEAMER JEANNETTE.

Mr. LINDSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of this bill, as heard in this part of the House, I have been unable to ascertain about how much it carries, or exactly what its provisions are. It seems, however, to embody a considerable sum, and as it is a matter which has caused a great deal of discussion, I would like to have the report of the committee read, reserving the right to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That may be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I dislike to object to the consideration of the bill in view of the fact that many of the beneficiaries are so meritorious; but it is a bill which should have careful consideration. The amount is large, covering $8,000, granting also twelve months' pay to a number of persons, the number of whom do not seem to be given in the report——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be a statement given.

Mr. COWLES. I object.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the regular order.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich.

MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Under the order of the House of yesterday I call up the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the special order of yesterday supersede the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The order of yesterday was to postpone the further consideration of this bill till this morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. REED, of Maine. As this measure which is now before the House is one somewhat novel in its character, I feel it necessary that there should be a full, free, and frank explanation of the whole thing to the members of the House. In the first place, it concerns a very deserving class of people. It concerns between five and six thousand fishermen on the coast of Maine and Massachusetts and New England generally. In a larger sense it concerns the whole of the people of the United States, because it is a food question as well as an industrial question. The class immediately concerned are at this time especially deserving of the attention of the House not only because of what they have suffered under the unfortunate articles in the treaty of Washington, but also because to-day a difficulty exceedingly great and affecting them is springing up, causing them great damage and threatening more. The people who are engaged in the fisheries upon the Northeastern coast owing to the treaty of 1870 have been suffering severely in their person and estate in past times, and at this present time, unless there be the most careful and judicious management on the part of all concerned, there is likely to be greater suffering on their part and the beginning of trouble which will extend its effects all over the country. At this time and in behalf of this portion of our people I present the provisions of this bill. And if I shall succeed, as I hope, in gaining the attention of the House and in satisfying the minds of the members that the request which I make is a reasonable one, the cause and objects of it will plead for me better than I can myself.

The mackerel fishery is one that has been very important to the people of this country in times past, and which can be made of equal importance in the times to come if we judiciously attend to it. But there have been of late years a great falling off in the character of the catch and a great change in the nature of the fisheries, as I will demonstrate to you by figures. I hope to be able to point out to you the cause and also the remedy. In former years the mackerel used to be caught by a hook and line, and the result was that very fine fish were caught; but within the last ten years the nature of the fishery has changed very much. Instead of a hook-and-line fishery the purse-seine fishery has been developed, and instead of going into a school of mackerel and hauling out what could be brought out by hook and line, the fishermen of to-day, in larger craft, go out and surround the school of mackerel by nets which are placed vertically in the water and are floated by cork at the top edge. When the school is entirely surrounded the bottom edges of the net are drawn together into purse-like shape, and the result is that the whole body of fish, good, bad, and indifferent, are scooped up together as if they were so much dirt.

Now, at a particular time any one can see that such a fishery may be specially disadvantageous to the increase of fish. There is a time when the fish thus caught are filled with spawn and with the future possibilities of the production of mackerel. All these fish are taken together; and while they are in the spawning condition—that is, while the spawn is forming within them—they are poor and almost unfit for food; they are very bad for food under all circumstances.

The proposition which I have to present to the House to-day is the same which has been put in operation in almost all the States with regard to the internal fisheries. That is, I propose that we shall have a close time which shall cover this period of spawning. I desire frankly to state any objections that there are, and I believe I know them all. It will strike you at first sight as if there could be nothing said against a proposition as reasonable as this is to stop the destruction of fish in their spwaning period when the reproduction of the fish is in very great peril. But there are arguments urged against it, and I am bound to say to you at the outset that our scientific men, Professor Baird and Professor Goode, express an opinion which I can best show by giving the opinion of Professor Goode, which is:

I have never been convinced that the abundance of mackerel along our eastern coast has been in past years diminished through the agency of man. I am not therefore prepared to say that I believe the prosecution of the spring mackerel fishing will lead to its own destruction.

In a report on the history of mackerel, published in 1883 by the Commissioner of Fisheries, I reviewed the evidence at that time in existence and I have not as yet seen any reason for changing the views therein expressed.

I should say to you there are other reasons besides these which I will develop, but I want to say distinctly that while Professor Goode says he does not know whether such a measure is necessary for that purpose or not, I am bound to say to you that every fisherman engaged in the business does know, and all of them are here before you with hardly a dissenting voice urging upon the ground of their personal experience that it will be the destruction of the fisheries not to have a close time, and I am prepared to show you that the lack of a close time already has been a very severe injury to the fishing industries of the United States.

All the fishermen present themselves here with their petitions for this bill. On the other hand there is a single petition against it, and I will show you from what source that comes. It is the petition of the Fishmongers' Association of the city of New York. They are opposed to this legislation. I think I may say without being accused of imputing unworthy motives to anybody, that they are opposed to it upon the salutary ground that commissions are good for people who sell. Of course they present one other ground, because people never reveal their selfishness utterly. The Fishmongers' Association say that they are struggling in the interest of cheap food for the people. Let us see precisely what this cheap-food cry means. Mr. Blackford, who is a New York fish commissioner but who is also, I think, or has been, connected with the Fishmongers' Association——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He is a dealer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. He is a dealer himself. Mr. Blackford gives a single instance of this cheapness of food which illustrates it all. He says:

About the 1st of April the mackerel fleet struck an immense school of fresh mackerel, and they all loaded up and came into New York, and there was at one time upward of fifteen million mackerel lying around the wharves in the vicinity of Fulton Market. Those mackerel were unloaded there just as fast as possible. Men, women, and children came from all parts of the city with baskets and the wagons of licensed venders, and there was no question about the price. They gave a basketful for 5 or 10 cents and would load a wagon for 25 cents. For the space of two or three weeks the poorer classes had the benefit of this immense catch of mackerel. They were distributed all through the city. Of course it was the means of a large class of people making money—not myself, although I am in the fish business.

What was the nature of this cheap food? Cheap things we want. It is a little hard sometimes on the men who furnish them that they should be so very cheap, but still we want cheap food, provided it is also good food—not cheap and nasty, but cheap and good. What does Mr. Blackford himself say about the character of this food? He says:

A large portion of these were salted, but at that season of the year the mackerel are inferior in fatness; the quality is not of a kind that makes them most desirable for salting.

Let me add one other fact in that connection, which is that in order to supply that week or two of cheap food to the people in and around the city of New York 100,000 barrels of mackerel filled with spawn were thrown into the ocean and could not be used—a destruction greater than the actual use that was made; for Mr. Collins tells us that only 75,000 barrels were used and 25,000 salted. Is that the kind of cheap-food production that you wish to preserve at the expense of what I am about to state? There has been a remarkable change of late in the nature of the results of mackerel fishing. Several years ago, when 300 barrels of mackerel were caught, 200 of them were No. 1, fat, valuable fish; 66⅔ per cent. of the whole were fit subjects for consumption by human beings.

What are the actual results now, as taken from the books of Lewis, Chase & Whitten, of Portland, for the year 1884? Of 14,877 barrels taken 317 barrels were No. 1; that is, less than 2.2 per cent. instead of 66⅔ per cent. Of No. 2s there were 3,121 barrels—less than 21 per cent.; and the balance, 11,439 barrels, were of poor quality—No. 3s, or perhaps worse. The result of all this is that under this system of fishing the proportion of No. 1 mackerel has been reduced from 66⅔ per cent. of the whole to less than 2.2 per cent., and the number of No. 3s has increased to 75 per cent. Now, what is the effect of that upon the production of this food for the people? Most men know nothing of these details. To most men a mackerel is a mackerel, and there's an end of it. When they go to buy a mackerel, if they get one they do not like they do not go any more. You see there is a temptation to dealers all the time to brand up their goods, because, I am sorry to say, the dealers in fish are no more honest than the members of the legal profession—things are branded up.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is pretty honest.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; that is a high standard. I took the highest standard I could find. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to ask him whether this change does not grow out of the change in the manner of catching the fish, the change from the line to the purse-net.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have no doubt of it, and the result is that the great majority of these fish are taken during the spawning season, when they are very poor. I can show from the report of Mr. Collins (whom I am going to quote as an expert against these other gentlemen) that all these fish are good after the spawning season.

To resume what I was saying, the effect of stopping the catching of the fish at the season when they are bad and really not suitable for food will be that we shall have good fish caught and good fish distributed all over the United States. There will be an increased market for them and an increased supply, because the catch of good, sound mackerel will be largely increased. So then I urge this bill, not only on behalf of my constituents, but on behalf of all the people of the United States.

Gentlemen may ask, "What people are you keeping out?" and among the cries raised in opposition to this bill is this: "You want to wait until these fish get up along the coast of Maine so that your people can catch them all. The fish proceed northward, and you want to shut us out until after the 1st of June, when they will have gone up north, so that you can catch the whole of them." Well, I trust I have been in this House long enough not to attempt a steal of that kind. [Laughter.] What is the fact? Why, the fact is that of the one hundred and eighty-four vessels that are engaged in the spring mackerel fishery, which we want closed, not a solitary vessel can be found outside of Maine and Massachusetts. So we have got the whole business now. But the truth about it is that, as Captain Collins says here in this report, when the fish get well filled with spawn in June they dive down in order to accomplish the work. Then there is another difficulty. When the fish start in the warm waters about the Gulf Stream, at the beginning they are huddled together, and this pursuing them with purse-nets breaks them up and drives them way offshore, scattering as well as destroying them.

Why, look at it. In the face of scientific authorities I will not undertake to say we can prove that the destructive agency of man will extirpate the whole mackerel tribe from the face of the earth; but I will say this, every man on the New England coast knows that the lobster has almost disappeared. You can now only catch lobsters about 10 or 12 inches long, and I can remember when the ordinary size of the lobsters caught was pretty nearly twice that size; and according to Mr. Evarts there are affidavits in existence as to lobsters weighing 25 pounds, although I believe the lobster of that weight was not producible at the time the affidavit was made. [Laughter.] We know that the supply of halibut is thinned out, and that the case is the same in regard to a great many other kinds of fish. I am aware that Professor Huxley says there is no proof that the herring has been diminished by the agency of man. But while I can not absolutely prove the necessity, I say all these considerations put together render it exceedingly desirable that this experiment should be tried.

I hold in my hand the printed statement of a gentleman who is probably as conversant with this subject as any other man. He came to the committee with the emphatic recommendation of Professor Baird, who has employed him specially with regard to this part of the fishery question; and whatever information Professor Baird may have has been derived largely from this gentleman, who says there is no doubt that there would be a great improvement in the quality of the fish if we should adopt this measure; and then he comments upon the question of cheap food very much as I have done.

A MEMBER. Who is he?

Mr. REED, of Maine. J. W. Collins, a gentleman well known to all who are interested in this business.

One other consideration. Why is it that our people, having complete possession of this fishery, wish it to be closed as proposed in this bill? I have given you some of the reasons; and I will give you another. It is at present a fishery of so poor a character that it does not pay; yet nevertheless we are forced into it, and why? From the same peculiarity of human nature that sustains the Louisiana Lottery. Out of one hundred and eighty-four vessels engaged in this fishery three or four make large hauls and find the business profitable; the others expect that they may do the same; and if one goes into it all go into it. Now, all should be stopped.

I think I have stated reasons why this bill should be passed. Let me recapitulate them. The bill is a trial proposition for five years. It is a proposition to close this fishery during the spawning season, from March until the 1st of June. Its purpose is to increase the character and value of the fish which will be distributed to the people of the United States. If I have made these points as clear to the House as they stand in my own mind I can not doubt the result. Allow me to add that this is a matter of serious import to my people. They are deeply concerned in this question; and I know of no opposition to this measure that has not its origin in the fish-mongers' association of one place or another. We propose to stop the catching of these fish during the period named by stopping the importation and sale; and the United States being the only place where they can be sold, if we stop their sale here the fish will not be caught.

There is another class of fishermen represented by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], a class with which I confess I have sympathy; and I hope, when I perfectly understand his amendment, to be able to assent to it; if not, I shall have to submit to the vote of the House on that question. He states that the people on the New Jersey coast are interested in fishing carried on in rowboats; and that this measure, without the amendment he suggests, will cut them off from some degree of sustenance during the period to which the prohibition will apply. I sympathize with the gentleman's position; for the consideration he presents is of similar character to that I present in behalf of my people. It may be, however, that we can not arrange a close season without injuring somebody. But I trust I have shown the counterbalancing advantages to be so great that this House will not hesitate to give the fishermen of this country what they all demand.

I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. HEWITT obtained the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield a moment that I may have an amendment read for information?

Mr. HEWITT. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the first section the following:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught offshore south of Sandy Hook, with hook and line, from open rowboats of less than 20 feet keel, and landed in said boats south of said point."

Mr. HEWITT. Will my friend from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] be good enough to tell me whether the mackerel caught with hook and line off the coast of New Jersey are large or small mackerel?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Both.

Mr. HEWITT. Then they catch large, fine mackerel there with hook and line?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the House would like to know how it happens that a bill of this importance comes before the House with a report in its favor and no minority report, and yet a member of the Committee on Ways and Means takes the floor in opposition to the bill. The reason is that the bill was ordered to be reported in total ignorance of the facts of this particular fishery. I take it my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] who made the report will admit that if all the facts now known had been presented to the committee and discussed in committee, as they were not, there would have been at least a very considerable difference of opinion as to the propriety of this measure.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I hope the gentleman from New York will not attempt to express what other gentlemen think. I have expressed no such opinion as that, and I assent to no such opinion. If other gentlemen of the committee agree with my friend from New York I hope they will so announce, but until they have done so I trust he will not claim them as concurring with him.

Mr. HEWITT. I have claimed nobody. I only repeat what I said, that there was no discussion in the committee which could by possibility have led to the presentation of any minority report. The facts I am about to bring to the attention of the House were offered to the attention of the committee, but it was after the bill and report had been submitted to the House and were placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from New York is aware the committee is well able to take care of itself. If the gentleman has a great deal of information he deserves credit for it, but I do not think he is the sole gatherer of information, or that other gentlemen are as ignorant as he seeks to represent them.

Mr. HEWITT. Before I am through——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I trust the gentleman will not impeach other people.

Mr. HEWITT. Before I am through with the matter it will be discovered when and why at the time the report was made.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill should be enacted into a law it will certainly produce three results:

First, it will deprive a very large number of the people of this country of cheap and nutritious food.

Secondly, it will deprive of employment a very large number of fishermen, more than two thousand in number, who find occupation in this business between the months of April and June, in mackerel catching, which it is now proposed to prohibit.

And, lastly, it will confine the mackerel fishing to the States of Massachusetts and Maine, because mackerel arrive on this coast about the end of March. They come chiefly off the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, and proceed thence slowly northward and reach Massachusetts and Maine in the month of June, when this bill, if enacted, would cease to operate. While fishermen along the coast below were prohibited from fishing, the whole mackerel schools, whatever they amount to, would be open for the fishermen of the States of Maine and Massachusetts.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT. I shall decline to answer any question at this moment, because the gentleman's case has been presented by a representative of his State who is quite able to take care of the State of Maine, and I wish to get my statement before the House. After that it will give me pleasure to answer any question the gentleman may put to me.

Now as to the quantity of this food. There are about one hundred and eighty vessels which are engaged in catching mackerel from the 1st of April to the 1st of June. The quantity caught is almost fabulous.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] referred to the testimony of Mr. Blackford that on one occasion last year 15,000,000 of mackerel were brought into the city of New York, and the inability to handle them—of the market to take them—was so great they were finally given away by basketsful to the poor. This year the mackerel have been somewhat late in coming on the coast, probably due to the cold weather. I happened to see the first vessel which came into Fulton market. It contained 30,000 mackerel. Two weeks later, in a single day, 8,000,000 of mackerel were brought into the port of New York and distributed, not as the gentleman from Maine said, in the immediate vicinity of that port, but under the modern system of refrigerating cars were sent over the entire United States.

The fact is, transportation has come in to distribute this food to every point east of the Rocky Mountains, making this a question of importance to the whole country. This prolific catch of mackerel has gone on so that last night I received from Mr. Blackford, who, perhaps, is the best practical expert in matters of fish in this country, this telegram:

Since last Monday—

That is four days—

four thousand five hundred and ten barrels of fresh mackerel landed and sold in Fulton market; all large, fine fish.

I quote that now as an answer to the assertion of the gentleman from Maine this spring fishing produced only fish of an inferior grade.

There is authority for saying many of these fish are not good for salting. That is true. Spring mackerel are not so good an article for salting as those caught later in the season; but for fresh food, which in the spring of the year every man, whether he be workman, lawyer, or statesman craves, mackerel is one of the best food-fishes which is put upon the table.

Now, a proposition to destroy an industry employing over two thousand of these very fishermen for whom the gentleman from Maine seems to be so interested, and they are his people, not mine—by whose aid this fishing is done in the main—a proposition to take away from them an employment which is so advantageous to them and so useful to the whole community ought to rest on very clear authority.

That it will be a damage to the mackerel fishermen is beyond question. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], when interrupted yesterday as to whether he had consulted the Fish Commission on this subject, replied, as stated in the RECORD, he had been talked with but had not been consulted by the commission.

My friend's memory must have been rather short on that occasion, for I hold in my hand a letter addressed to him from Professor Baird——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the gentleman will read my remarks in the RECORD he will find that they are entirely in harmony with the statement that I had made no specific inquiry as to the pending bill; but that I conferred fully with the Commissioner and others by letter and verbally about the proposition in the bill. I refer the gentleman to the RECORD.

Mr. HEWITT. I understand what the gentleman said; it appears in the RECORD; and if you will give me the RECORD I will quote the exact language, so that there can be no question as to the accuracy of it.

I hold in my hand a letter addressed to the gentleman from Arkansas as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, signed by Spencer F. Baird, Commissioner, being an official answer to the inquiry addressed to him; but first I read from the RECORD the remarks of the gentleman in answer to the inquiry as to whether the Fish Commission had been consulted with reference to this bill or not:

Mr. LORE. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether the Fish Commission of the United States have favored this bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will state in response to the gentleman from Delaware that the Fish Commission of the United States has not been asked specifically about the bill; though I have talked fully with the Commissioner and others of the service, and had some correspondence with them about the propositions involved; and I have here in my hand a very interesting letter from the specialist employed by Professor Baird to study and observe the habits, &c., of the mackerel, Captain Collins, a gentleman who I am assured by Professor Baird is the best living authority on the subject, and his statements of facts strongly sustain this bill.

In which it will be seen that the gentleman has omitted altogether every reference to the letter of Professor Baird himself. Now I will read to the House that letter, and I suppose it will not be questioned that Professor Baird is recognized throughout not only the whole of this country but the habitable globe as second only to one man, whose authority I shall also produce, Professor Huxley, in regard to the effect of fishing in any form or shape upon the catch of deep-sea fish. He says:

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter asking for an opinion as to whether the preventing of mackerel fishing—

And I take it that that is abundant proof to begin with that the gentleman had asked his opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. HEWITT. February 15. I will give it in full:

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter asking for an opinion as to whether "the preventing of mackerel fishing during the spring months is necessary for the maintenance of an abundant supply of that fish upon our shores."

I have never been convinced that the abundance of mackerel has been in any way affected through the agency of man. The catch in 1884 and 1885 was far above the average for the past fifty years. It is not impossible, however, that the continuance of the use of the great purse-seines may in time have an appreciable effect in decreasing their numbers. The statistics of the next few years will doubtless enable us to form a definite opinion upon this question.

Naturalists are obliged to admit their ignorance in regard to many portions of the life-history of the mackerel and other fishes of similar roving habits. We do not yet know definitely where they go in winter, nor by what routes they approach our shores in spring. We are equally ignorant of their habits during the breeding season. So important has the study of these matters been considered that I asked some years ago for a schooner especially adapted for their investigation. Congress at its last session acceded to this request, and the vessel has been built and is now nearly ready for service. I hope that in the near future the habits of the mackerel, the menhaden, and the bluefish will be as thoroughly understood as are now those of the trout and the cod.

The bill before you would appear to aim at the prohibition of mackerel fishing prior to and during the spawning season. In reality, however, the time of spawning, especially on the coast of New England, extends considerably beyond the 1st of June.

So that the bill would not affect the object, for the only spawning of value which takes place is in and after the months of June and July.

The probable effect of the passage of this bill upon the extensive pound and weir fisheries of Southern New England is worthy of your consideration, since the pound fishermen can not exclude mackerel when they admit the other species which are swimming in company with them.

So that if this were adopted the pound fishing would have to be stopped; and I leave that to my Massachusetts friends to determine its value.

In conclusion, I regret to say that in the present state of knowledge of the life-history of the mackerel I am unable to express a positive opinion as to whether or not the passage of the bill under consideration would have a beneficial effect.

Very respectfully,

SPENCER F. BAIRD, Commissioner.

Hon. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE,
Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the judgment of a thoroughly disinterested man in the presence of a proposition to deprive the people of this country of an almost unlimited supply of food for a period of three months, and a great number of fishermen, who are entitled, as the gentleman from Maine has well said, to great consideration at the hands of this House in view of their difficulties with Canada. There is his opinion that this bill could not be said to have any beneficent effect whatever, that he does not know and is not able to state what the effect would be. That is the opinion expressed here.

Now he has an assistant, Professor Brown Goode, who was sent out in charge of the American exhibits to the London Fisheries' Exposition and received a medal. I presume it will scarcely be questioned that Professor Goode and Professor Baird are two among the greatest experts of the world in this line. I wrote him a letter myself later upon this subject, for I was ignorant of the effect of it, and asked his opinion. In his response he says:

UNITED STATES NATIONAL MUSEUM, Washington, April 12, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have never been convinced that the abundance of mackerel along our eastern coast has been, in past years, diminished through the agency of man. I am not, therefore, prepared to say that I believe that the prosecution of the spring mackerel fishery will lead to its own destruction. In a report upon the history of the mackerel, published in 1883 by the Commissioner of Fisheries, I reviewed the evidence at that time in existence, and I have not yet seen any reason for changing the views therein expressed. I mail you herewith a copy of this report.

Believe me, yours, very respectfully,

G. BROWN GOODE.

Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT.

In this report, which I have here on my desk, giving the facts and conclusions which are the results of careful research, discussing as it does all of the phases of the mackerel question, in this public document, which is at the disposal of any gentleman, all of these facts will be found fully set forth and sustained.

Now, the gentleman from Maine says it is necessary to have a close period for mackerel. That is what he wants. That is a very plausible idea, Mr. Speaker, and I was originally taken in by it myself. Every man who has ever approached the subject has thought that there ought to be a close period for animals to breed in. But when you examine the facts you will find that there are two classes of ocean fishes. Those which come into our rivers and seek the fresh water for spawning purposes need a close period, because if all were taken, as the salmon have been taken at the mouth of the river when running in to spawn, there could never be a return current of young fishes after the spawning season.

Hence we have wisely provided for close periods for the ocean fishes that seek the fresh water to spawn. But there is another class of ocean fishes, such as mackerel, herring, the cod, the bluefish, and the menhaden, that never spawn in fresh water, that never come to the rivers to spawn. And in regard to the mackerel there is this remarkable fact: They spawn upon the surface, upon the open ocean, upon the broad surface of the ocean. Their spawn is at the mercy of the winds and the waves; no doubt wisely so. No doubt in the order of Providence that is the method which He has taken for the production of certain kinds of fish which the energy of man has never yet been able to destroy. The herring fisheries of to-day are more productive than they have ever been in any previous period of man's history since we have had any record. The mackerel fishery of to-day is more productive than it ever has been in any previous period. When you remember the spawn of a single mackerel produces five hundred thousand eggs you will understand how small a quantity is necessary to produce the number of mackerel we take in a single season; it is safe to say less than five hundred thousand mackerel would produce the entire catch of twenty-five millions of mackerel supposed to be taken in a single season.

So you see that man can not by any contrivance whatever destroy these fish which come in large schools. Do gentlemen here know the magnitude and size of these schools which are sent upon our coasts for the express purpose of giving us cheap food? One fisherman I saw told me he had met this year a school of mackerel 7 miles long and 2 miles broad, and packed so densely that it seemed to him as if the water could find no place among them; and yet this is the kind of animal life which the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Maine say is worried by the attempts of the fishermen to catch a few of them, and is driven off the coast in consequence of it. There is no possibility of worrying them. When taken by one of these purse-net seines they are scooped in, as many as the net can hold, put on the vessel, and brought into port, and the rest go no one knows where. Even the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] admits that when they spawn on his coast the mackerel disappear for a time. He did not tell us whether they disappeared before or after they spawn. But the mackerel disappear. Where have they gone? Into Fulton market?

Mr. REED, of Maine. As the gentleman from New York is quoting me, I will read the exact language I quoted from some one else:

At this time in June the fish appear to sink out of sight for two or three weeks; this occuring a few seasons a little earlier or later than at other times, owing probably to the varying temperature of the water. It is said they have gone down to spawn.

That is the testimony of Captain Collins.

Mr. HEWITT. I thank the gentleman for giving that testimony. Captain Collins is a great expert, but he does not know what they go down for; nor do I, nor does the gentleman from Maine. I do not know what they go down for; but this is certain, notwithstanding the fact that this work of destruction has been going on for the last fifteen years when the purse-seine contrivance was first adopted, and for ten years and with the same energy that it is now prosecuted and with the same results, the catch of mackerel has gone on, with slight variations, steadily increasing. It is true that we do not get the same quantity of No. 1 mackerel that we formerly caught, but those statistics are the statistics when the mackerel were caught by the hook and line; and that was the point of my question to the gentleman from New Jersey, whether when his Jersey constituents go out to catch mackerel with hook and line they do not get as good fish as ever.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Come up and try them.

Mr. HEWITT. I know something about the Jersey fish. And that reminds me that all this talk about taking mackerel in the spawning season is simply ridiculous in view of the facts. In the first place it turns out as a curious fact in natural history that three-fourths of the fish caught in the spring fishing are male fish, and only one-fourth are female fish. Will some one undertake to explain by what provision of Divine Providence the female fish are preserved out of sight, not within the range of these nets, while the male fish are principally taken? And let me mention another thing as to the shad. A shad is not regarded as fit to eat except when it is in the spawning season, and what is true of the shad is true of the mackerel. The mackerel that have been brought into New York this year, as certified by Mr. Blackford, turn out to be a very large, better, and a finer class of fish than have come there for the last few years. If I, like the gentleman from Maine, were to reason post hoc propter hoc, I would say the seine-fishing is steadily increasing and improving the value of the fish; they get better all the time, every year a little better than they were the year before. But I confess frankly I do not know anything about it. I only know the fact that we get mackerel, that we get them in increasing quantity, and that they are a fish essential to the support not merely of my people, but of the people whom all of you represent on this floor. Now this testimony which I have cited agrees with the testimony of everybody who has carefully considered this subject.

Mr. Blackford is one of the fish commissioners of the State of New York, and is also the assistant fish commissioner of the United States in charge of the oyster-beds. He is a fish-dealer, a most remarkable fish-dealer, an honor to his State and to his country, a man who devotes the profit of his great business (and he is the greatest fish-dealer in the world) to the propagation of food-fishes and the investigation of the laws which govern their growth and their perpetuity. Mr. Blackford testified on the subject before the Senate committee, and in his testimony he said that he had begun (as all of us have begun) with the idea that the mackerel fishery and all the ocean fisheries would be injured unless provision was made for a close season. He says:

> Not being much of a writer or speaker, it was a matter of considerable labor for me, and I went to work to get together my facts from my own diaries that I keep of the daily supplies of the markets, and of the prices and notes that I take of the large catches, in order to prepare this paper to be read; but when I got my material all together I found the facts were entirely opposite to the views which I had entertained, and the more I looked into the subject the more I became impressed that there was no necessity for legislation for the protection of any of the free-swimming ocean sea-fishes.

There is the conclusion of the most intelligent practical man on this subject in this country, who went into the investigation with his mind made up that protection was necessary in order to preserve these fisheries from damage but who came out of it satisfied that his former view was wrong and testified before the Senate committee that in his judgment it was impossible for man to do any injury to the ocean fisheries.

This same question has been up time and again in Great Britain. It has been the subject of royal commissions. The last commission that sat upon it was headed by Professor Huxley. I hold in my hand a paper by that eminent scientific man in which he sums up the matter, and which is so interesting that I shall read it at a greater length than I otherwise would. It was published in the Popular Science Monthly for August, 1881. In this paper Professor Huxley is speaking of the herring; but the habits of the herring and of the mackerel are almost identical. There is, however, a slight difference in their mode of spawning. Professor Huxley says:

> Suppose that every mature female herring lays 10,000 eggs, that the fish are not interfered with by man, and that their numbers remain approximately the same year after year, it follows that 9,998 of the progeny of every female must be destroyed before they reach maturity. For, if more than two out of the 10,000 escape destruction, the number of herrings will be proportionately increased. Or, in other words, if the average strength of the shoals which visit a given locality is to remain the same year by year, many thousand times the number contained in those shoals must be annually destroyed. And how this enormous amount of destruction is effected will be obvious to any one who considers the operations of the fin-whales, the porpoises, the gannets, the gulls, the codfish, and the dogfish, which accompany the shoals and perennially feast upon them; to say nothing of the flat-fish, which prey upon the newly deposited spawn, or of the mackerel, and the innumerable smaller enemies which devour the fry in all stages of their development. It is no uncommon thing to find five or six—nay, even ten or twelve—herrings in the stomach of a codfish, and in 1863 we calculated that the whole take of the great Scotch herring fisheries is less than the number of herrings which would in all probability have been consumed by the codfish captured in the same waters if they had been left in the sea.
> Man, in fact, is but one of a vast co-operative society of herring-catchers, and the larger the share he takes, the less there is for the rest of the company. If man took none, the other shareholders would have a larger dividend, and would thrive and multiply in proportion; but it would come to pretty much the same thing to the herrings.

And the fact is the same in regard to the mackerel. Finally, Professor Huxley says in conclusion:

> I do not think that any one who looks carefully into the subject will arrive at any other conclusion than that reached by my colleagues and myself: namely, that the best thing for governments to do in relation to the herring-fisheries is to let them alone, except in so far as the police of the sea is concerned. With this proviso, let people fish how they like, as they like, and when they like. At present I must repeat the conviction we expressed so many years ago, that there is not a particle of evidence that anything man does has an appreciable influence on the stock of herrings. It will be time to meddle when any satisfactory evidence that mischief is being done is produced.

Now, I think I have shown that there is a "plentiful lack" of knowledge on this subject; and in the presence of this lack of knowledge we are asked to pass a bill which it is admitted, if passed now, is too late to have any effect this year, either good or bad. We are asked to pass now a measure which can not take effect until next year, though by referring the whole subject to the Fish Commission we can get their deliberate opinion in time for action in December next. That is the wise and sensible thing to do. I think the Fish Commission will probably know something more on this question than they know now, but I do not expect they will ever get any knowledge which will serve to show that the fisheries can by any possibility be affected by any quantity of fish that man, with all his contrivances, can take out of the ocean in any period of two or three months; for after all this fishing is over, these vast schools of mackerel are found passing up the coasts of Massachusetts and Maine to Canada; so all that we do not take go to Canada for her protected fishermen, because our people, as the law now stands, can not go there and take any of those fish. If then this bill passes it will have but one effect. It will entirely prevent mackerel fishing below the coast of Massachusetts; it will confine it for a brief period to Massachusetts and Maine; and these fish will then pass to Canada out of the reach of our fishermen.

In the face of these facts, which can not be controverted, the gentleman from Maine says, "If you will pass this bill we shall be able to supply you with big mackerel." That is not what my constituents or the people of this country want, for the big mackerel fetch a big price per pound. Twenty-five cents per pound is often charged for large mackerel, while little mackerel sell for 1 cent a pound. The only effect of the bill advocated by the gentleman from Maine will be to take away mackerel as the cheap food of the common people and give it as a luxury to the tables of the rich. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the catch of mackerel in one year, according to the figures cited by the gentleman from Maine, was about 14,000 barrels, of which 66 per cent., he said, were large mackerel, which would be 8,000 or 9,000 barrels. Sir, in four days in the city of New York half that number—4,500 barrels—were sold and distributed as cheap food to our people. So that if you pass this bill you merely prevent a great industry from being carried on in order that you may have a few barrels of very fine fish.

The gentleman also said that all the fishermen are in favor of this measure. Well, sir, I went upon a fishing-boat, the captain being a Gloucester man, having a crew of eight fishermen. When I asked him whether he wanted this fishery stopped he said he did not; that it gave them employment at a time when they had no other. "But," said he, "we will settle this business." So he sent me down a series of petitions, which are signed by these rude fishermen.

These petitioners say:

> The undersigned, mackerel fishermen, being aggrieved at the introduction in the House of Representatives of the bill (H. R. 3538) entitled "A bill relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season," and whereby the catching and landing of mackerel from March to June 1, inclusive, are prohibited, hereby protest against the same.
> First. It is an experimental and unnecessary bill.
> Second. During the months mentioned very few mackerel spawn.

Now, these fishermen know something about this matter.

> June and July are the principal spawning months.
> Third. Mackerel are increasing and not diminishing in quantity.
> Fourth. The passage of the bill would turn out of employment during the prohibited season over two thousand of our fishermen, who are dependent thereon for the support of themselves and their families.
> And we earnestly ask that the passage of the said bill be defeated.

Now, this petition is a genuine article—not the kind made to order. Here are the signatures of hard-working, honest, diligent fishermen, who only ask to be let alone, to be undisturbed in the pursuit of an honest livelihood. They are the gentleman's constituents, not mine, for whom I appeal to this House. They sell to my constituents what my constituents want to buy; but they want to be let alone in their honest industry. Yet, in ignorance of the facts of the case, and in the presence of the scientific testimony, so far as it goes, that no good can come from this measure, this House is asked to pass it when there is every reason why, out of regard to the food of the poor, the occupations of the industrious, and the general good of the whole country, we should not only go slowly, but if necessary vote the measure down. I have no desire to subject these gentlemen of the committee to the humiliation of having the enacting clause of this bill struck out. I prefer that it shall be recommitted. I want them to study this subject a little more thoroughly than they have studied it, although they seem to be satisfied with the knowledge they have thus far obtained. I am not satisfied with what I have been able to get within this short time; but I say, so far as the facts appear there is abundant reason to apprehend that this proposed legislation is not only unnecessary, but dangerous and destructive to interests which are entitled to the consideration of the House.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAMMOND. This seems to be the application of game laws to food-fishes. I wish to ask the gentleman whether such a thing has ever been done before by the United States?

Mr. HEWITT. There has never been any such measure as to open-sea fishery. There has been the application of the close season to those fishes that seek the fresh waters to spawn; and even there the Government of the United States has had to keep its hands off, because the State jurisdiction in almost every case comes in. The Fish Commission has sought for the co-operation of the States wherever it could be obtained, and has in most cases been able to get it.

Mr. REAGAN. As the attention of the gentleman from New York has been directed to this question, I wish to inquire whether the Government of the United States has ever heretofore undertaken to regulate fishing upon the high seas outside of the marine league, and whether Congress has authority to regulate fisheries on the borders of States within the marine league?

Mr. HEWITT. I have not given my personal attention to that matter. It is a legal question; and such questions I always prefer not to discuss. But I think in this House, so largely composed of lawyers, that question can be readily answered. I know of no power on the part of the United States to control fishing within the jurisdiction suggested by the gentleman; but I do recognize the fact that in licensing fishing boats, the Government of the United States might put in the licenses a provision limiting the operations of such boats. I suppose that might be done.

Mr. MCADOO. As the gentleman from New York has given this subject some investigation, I will ask him whether it is not the fact that the menhaden fishing is doing more harm than any other class of fishing on our coast?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the point in this case to be that the supposed danger against which this bill is directed does not exist.

Mr. HEWITT. It does not exist according to the testimony of every intelligent man who has examined the subject.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has at last got through, that I do not purpose to discuss the constitutional objection which is raised against this measure, as it is raised against every measure which is called up for consideration in this House and which certain gentlemen wish to defeat. Indeed, I do not purpose to discuss the question at length in any of its aspects; but it seems to me to be a question whether we will legislate to save the source of supply of a valuable article of food, the source of a great industry, or allow people for immediate gain to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

And in this controversy the same old question arises, and it arises between the same parties as when I first heard it discussed; that is, between the fishermen and the fishmongers. I know how it was in my own State. We had all these arguments against the protection of the menhaden. They told us menhaden could never be lessened on the coast of Maine by the hand of man. I have gone down to the shore and have seen at one time thirteen steamers fishing for menhaden, a single steamer taking 800 barrels of these fish at one haul.

Our people wanted menhaden protected by law from this wholesale slaughter in order that our fishermen might have them to use for bait in catching cod and other large fish. And by the way, sir, if this had been done sufficiently early the trouble between us and Canada would never have occurred, because we would have had an abundance of bait upon our own coast to supply all our fishermen.

When, however, it was proposed to protect the menhaden by legislation the same reasons and excuses were urged against it that we have listened to to-day. The fishmongers and the great corporations interested in the product of these fisheries defeated for a time the efforts made for the preservation of the menhaden. At last these fish left our shores, and during the last eight or nine years there has not been enough menhaden caught on the coast of Maine to supply bait for our fishermen.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] says that out of ten thousand eggs deposited by the female fish not more than two escape destruction before the young fish are hatched, and he by allowing the fish to be taken in spawning time would destroy these two. My colleague has referred to the effort made in Maine to protect by legislation the lobster from annihilation. These efforts finally succeeded in procuring the enactment of a law providing for a close time, and that lobsters less than a certain length should not be exposed for sale.

But this law, while it has arrested the destruction, and I hope may prevent the extermination of the lobster, came too late to save it from being so seriously diminished, both in numbers and size, that this fish once so plentiful and cheap is now comparatively rare and dear, and will average less than one-half its size of twenty years ago. Still we had the same experience in obtaining legislation to preserve the lobster that we had in trying to save the menhaden, the same we have here to-day in our efforts to prevent the extermination of the mackerel. Our opponents quoted from scientific gentlemen, produced the testimony of theoretical experts, and talked of the enormous number of eggs which the fish deposited, but what the practical fisherman said proved to be correct and what they petitioned for was shown, as I am sure it will be in this case, to be wise.

My friend from New York says we are selfish in this thing; that we want this bill to pass so these fish will be caught on the coasts of Maine and Massachusetts. He, however, recognizes the fact that they are all Maine and Massachusetts fishermen who catch these mackerel. What does it matter to him whether they catch them in one part of the ocean or another? Does he think they are any better caught off the coast of New York than when they are caught off the coasts of Maine and Massachusetts?

What has been said in favor of the bill I know to be true by experience, because I have seen mackerel caught ever since my boyhood.

If mackerel are caught before the 1st day of June and put on the market for sale, very few people who know what good wholesome mackerel are will want them. Why? Because they are then a poor article of food. Indeed this involves the question of good or poor food for the people. Mackerel, when spawning time is over and they have had an opportunity to fatten, are, as the gentleman has said, the finest fish in the world. But before that time, when caught off the coast here, I am bound to say from experience they are the meanest fish that swim—too mean to be eaten by anybody, rich or poor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend, as I said when I rose, to make any lengthy remarks upon this subject, but I do not see why the people of this country are not as much interested in having a close time for fishing for mackerel as they are in having the fisheries protected in our several States by legal enactment. I do not see why the people of the whole country who consume fish, as well as the fishermen themselves on the coast who earn their livelihood by fishing, should not be as much interested in the protection of this great article of food and this important industry as they are in the protection of game, which in many of our States is so zealously guarded.

We are everywhere establishing fish-breeding places in order to cultivate the supply of food-fishes, and I am glad to be able to say that the salmon on the coast of Maine, which had been growing scarce, have sensibly increased since fish-breeding was established at Bucksport. And while we are taking so much pains to propagate our valuable fishes, does not a wise economy demand that we should prevent as far as possible their wanton destruction?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine, with his permission, a question in connection with one remark of the gentleman from New York. He says the testimony of gentlemen who are interested in the success of this industry points to the fact that the spawning season is early in June and July, and not largely in March and April. What are the facts and what is the testimony which the gentleman has on that particular point?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in answer to my friend from Ohio, that if I should attempt to reply to the immense amount of misinformation which the gentleman from New York has this morning given to the House on the subject of fish and fisheries of different kinds I think I would require much more time than I would care to consume in this House and much more I am sure than anybody would like to occupy in listening to me. But the testimony to the contrary of the statement of the gentleman from New York is abundant and overwhelming.

The gentlemen from New York has quoted Professor Baird and others, and what does it all amount to? When he gets through it amounts to the fact that he admits that he knows nothing about the habits of these fish, and notwithstanding this he has talked to the House almost an hour, and has succeeded in giving us such lack of information as we should have a right to expect from one making such an admission.

Sir, I say in conclusion that the question is whether we shall allow men for immediate gains—men who do not regard the future of this great industry, nor the necessities of our people so largely benefited by this article of food—to impair its supply, as has been done in the case of the menhaden and lobster, or shall we by administering a timely and effective remedy preserve it?

The importance of both cheap and wholesome food for the people demands that the mackerel, which is almost universally used, should be allowed to perpetuate itself and should be taken only when in good condition, and I believe that the provisions of this bill designed to secure these objects will meet with the approval of this House and the country.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my friend from Maine I may be permitted to state that since the days of wooden nutmegs and Waterbury clocks I have not seen such an ingenious piece of mechanism as the construction of this bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Wooden nutmegs and Waterbury clocks were not made in Maine.

Mr. LORE. Not very far from it; they were just across the line.

Mr. MILLIKEN. A good long way across the line. The gentleman himself lives as near to the wooden nutmegs and Waterbury clocks as I do.

Mr. LORE. That may be; but I am not abusing my New England friends, only suggesting a historical fact. I have always admired Yankee ingenuity and skill in devising such mechanism.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us examine this bill section by section and analyze its provisions and effect. This first section provides that no mackerel, other than Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st of June in each year, shall be permitted to be imported or landed on our shores. The next section provides that the license to be granted by the United States shall be made to conform to that condition of facts, and shall not authorize the person holding the same to violate the first section.

The third section provides for the forfeiture of the vessel if it violates the provisions of the act if it be an American vessel, and if not, then it provides for the forfeiture of the mackerel or the fish that are landed.

You will observe that the bill as it stands is an absolute prohibition against catching mackerel from the 1st of March to the 1st of June of each year all along our coast from Cape Hatteras to New England. Let us consider it. This mackerel question is an exceedingly interesting one. The makerel is in a great degree the most mysterious fish in its habits and haunts. They first approach our shores in March off Cape Hatteras in North Carolina in immense shoals, and pass northward until they strike the coast of Maine, which they reach about the month of June. Now I am not responsible for the truth of what a very intelligent gentleman said last night, but will give it in passing. He said the ingenuity of my friends from Maine and Massachusetts is so great that they secure the kind of food the mackerel are accustomed to, watch their coming, spread it bountifully on the way, toll them all along the coast from Cape Hatteras until they get them up to Maine, and when they get them up there they feed it out in such abundance as to keep them from going farther, to the fishermen of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. [Laughter.]

I presume this is a myth, but is illustrative of the popular opinion of the skill and forehandedness of our New England friends. But judging from the mechanism of this bill it would not strike one as an impossibility.

These fish as they pass along the coast from Hatteras up to Maine are caught by the dwellers on the coast in every direction. They are caught by men who go out in boats and bateaux, and as the bill now stands it would prevent a person in North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, or New York from going out in a canoe or a boat and catching and landing fish for his own use.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is an amendment which will provide for that.

Mr. LORE. That I understand they propose to correct by an amendment. If the bill is so amended that objection would be removed. But there is a broader objection than that. As the bill now stands it would be open and vulnerable to that attack. But if amended it is vulnerable in other points. But first let me consider the reasons urged for this bill, and which were presented by my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] in his usually vigorous, terse, and exceedingly forcible style. The first one is that it benefits the fishermen. Now I say to the gentleman in all frankness there are other fishermen than those on the coasts of Maine and Massachusetts. The mackerel run from Hatteras up to Maine. They get up to the coasts of Massachusetts and Maine in June; so that if you prevent the catching of mackerel up to the 1st day of June all dwellers on the coast up to Massachusetts and Maine are prevented from catching mackerel, for this time covers the exact period of their passage from Hatteras to New England.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There are none that go out to catch these schools of mackerel. There are only fishermen that go out within 10 miles of the shore, and those we propose to provide for. The only ones that are interfered with by this bill after the amendment is made are people from Maine and Massachusetts.

Mr. LORE. Then this is an attempt to prevent your Maine and Massachusetts men from taking the fish at that time?

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is an attempt to stop that kind of fishery during the spawning season.

Mr. LORE. I do not know that that alters very materially the point I make as to whether or not the bill benefits the fishermen. If the amendment to the bill corrects the first defect of which I spoke and deprives the Maine and Massachusetts men of the power to catch and bring the fish into New York, it deprives them of just such profits as they may make during that season; and I do not see that it would be a material advantage even to them.

Mr. REED, of Maine. They think it would be.

Mr. LORE. I do not think the case is so clear on that ground that it is for the benefit of the fishermen. Now take the other ground, which the gentleman from Maine presented with considerable force and which strikes me as the one upon which he rests his argument mainly for the passage of this bill; that is, that fishing during these months diminishes the catch; that it diminishes the supply of mackerel.

Let us examine this position? I know my friend from Maine says that the Maine and Massachusetts fishermen, by almost unanimous consent, say as a matter of fact it does. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] presented and read petitions of these very men largely signed maintaining the opposite view. Congress has at considerable expense established a Fish Commission. The head of that commission is Professor Spencer F. Baird, who has devoted much of his life to this work. So has Professor Goode, associated with Professor Baird as assistant fish commissioner. Captain Collins, Professor Baird, Professor Goode, Professor Huxley of England, all say that they are not satisfied that the catch of mackerel during this time of the alleged spawning from the 1st March to the 1st June does diminish the supply. They say they do not know, and in effect that it is not known.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. LORE. With pleasure.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Professor Baird, as I understood the reading of his opinion, states he is not satisfied the use of the purse-seine will not materially diminish the propagation of mackerel.

Mr. LORE. He says he is not satisfied the catch in this intervening time does diminish the supply.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As I understood the reading, what he said was he was not satisfied that the intervention of man would materially diminish the supply of sea-fish. But further on he said he did not feel sure that the use of the purse-seine, which is a modern contrivance, might not very materially affect it, and that it might require some years to determine that. So that we have the scientists in doubt about the matter, while the practical fishermen, who have been engaged in this business for years and whose whole avocation depends on the plenteousness of the fish, unanimously or with practical unanimity declare the catching by the seine in this close-time is materially affecting the supply.

Mr. LORE. I think my friend will agree, and I am sure the reading of Professor Baird's letter will satisfy any member of this House, that he does not believe that the catching of the mackerel during that time does interfere with the supply. Professors Goode and Huxley are quite clear on this point, and the petitions of fishermen presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] show the fishermen do not agree.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to show that the committee itself had evidence before it tending to contradict that proposition I read from their report where they say:

> That the mackerel continued to abound, and the industry of catching them to increase, is to be accounted for rather by the fact that it is not an anadromous fish, and by reason of the primitive devices of the day, than because of the laws of the period. In 1831 the catch reached its maximum, being 449,950 barrels. It then steadily fell off each year until in 1838 it was only a little over 138,000 barrels. With varying fortune it fell in 1877 to nearly 127,000 barrels. Each period of decline in the catch, and consequently of comparative exemption from molestation of this fish, has apparently led to the hatching and maturity of sufficient numbers to fully restock our waters. Thus in 1881 the catch rose again to over 391,000 barrels.

In 1882 to 1884 the catch has been increasing, and yet during this time not only have the fishermen been catching the mackerel between the 1st of March and the 1st of June, but they have been catching them with the purse-net. We have, therefore, right here in the report of the committee evidence that instead of the amount of the supply decreasing it has actually increased.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not possible that this gentleman mistakes an increased catch for an increased supply? Is an increased catch necessarily an indication of an increased supply of these fish? May not the increased catch be the result of the employment of a larger number of vessels and the use of improved appliances.

Mr. LORE. That may be so, sir; and yet I take it that the number of fish we take out of the sea is the best indication we have of the number of fish in the sea. Certainly it is a better means of gauging the supply than a mere speculation based upon no facts whatever. That the supply of these fish will not be diminished in this way it seems to me has been most clearly demonstrated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

I remember that a few years ago the old method of catching oysters in Chesapeake Bay by the fishermen of Maryland and Virginia was "tonging." Then the dredge system was introduced, and the fishermen raked the oyster-beds from one end of the Chesapeake to the other wherever they could find them. There was a terrific outcry on the part of the tongers that this would destroy the supply; but the result simply was that instead of having oyster-beds scattered here and there at special points on the bottom of the bay, the dredges dragged them all over it and made the bottom of Chesapeake Bay almost one continuous oyster-bed, and the oysters were multiplied by the thousand. This grew out of the fecundity of the oyster spawn, rivaling to some extent the mackerel in this respect. I know that the analogy between the two cases is not complete at all points, but I mention this to show that the alarm which arises as to the results of new methods is frequently without foundation or any just cause.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the supply of oysters has not been disadvantageously affected by the use of the dredge?

Mr. LORE. I do say so, unhesitatingly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My impression was very decidedly to the contrary.

Mr. LORE. Well, I speak of what I know. I have it from the "tongers" as well as from the dredgers that the effect has simply been to spread the oyster-beds over the bottom of the bay and make it almost one continuous oyster-bed. As I have said, however, I mention this merely to show that the fears of men in such cases are not always warranted by the facts.

Mr. Chairman, when men speak of the diminution of the fish supply from cause stated it is a mere conjecture. The report of the committee itself shows that the catch, instead of diminishing, has increased; and I say that when it is shown as a matter of fact that more fish have been taken out of the water in a given time it is a fair inference that more have been taken because the supply in the water was larger.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Suppose that the Congress of the United States should address itself to the work of decreasing or rendering extinct the mackerel on our coast (if they should deem that to be a public necessity), can the gentleman conceive of any more efficient manner of starting the experiment than by fitting out a fleet of vessels to use the purse-net to take these fish at the spawning season? Is not that exactly what Congress would do if it were going to invest Professor Baird with power to experiment as to the best means of rendering the mackerel extinct?

Mr. LORE. I will answer my friend, although I think he has been already completely answered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. The answer is this: These fish are preyed upon not only by man, but by a great number of the denizens of the sea, and the share that man takes in their destruction is but as a drop in the ocean; the number that are taken and consumed by man is trifling compared with the multitudes that swarm along our coasts and are consumed in other ways. Therefore I say you may adopt any device you please, you can not destroy the supply. When you remember that a single female mackerel scatters in the spawning season from 500,000 to 1,000,000 eggs, you can see that the supply must be practically unlimited, and that it will not be seriously affected whatever devices you may employ.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the gentleman overlooks this fact. When the spawn is thrown out upon the sea and becomes subject to the ravages of those destructive enemies to which the gentleman refers there is yet a percentage of a chance of its fecundation; but when the fishermen go out with their purse-nets and scoop in the fish containing the spawn before it is shed at all, then all possible chance of reproduction from that source is utterly lost.

Mr. LORE. I concede that; but, take all you possibly can, the catch is so insignificant in quantity that there is still left enough to people the seas with these fish in inexhaustible supply. No fact has been produced to the contrary. So far as anything is demonstrated in the case, it is that the catch has not decreased; and, as I have said, it is fair to infer from that that the supply is at least as great as it was before.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Fishermen who petition here urge that the quantity has largely decreased; and, as I understand, Professor Baird states distinctly he is not sure this fishing during the spawning season will not have the direct effect of decreasing the supply.

Mr. LORE. Well, he does not know what may occur in the future. But the past and present are our teachers. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has just put in my hands a statement exhibiting the catch of these fish for the last fifty years; and it shows that there has grown up quite a regular and systematic increase in quantity of catch.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest that if the gentleman from New York will now collect and put alongside of that statistics showing the increase in the amount of beef consumed by the people of the United States year by year during the last seventy-five years, it will be equally interesting and equally pertinent.

Mr. REED, of Maine. In other words, it would not show that the mackerel catch has not diminished as alleged.

Mr. LORE. Let me ask my friend from Maine what evidence he has to-day that the supply of mackerel in the ocean has been diminished at all by the use of these nets—I mean the supply for all practical purposes?

Mr. BOUTELLE. We have the evidence of men engaged in the pursuit of those fish as to the relative difficulty of obtaining a certain quantity. That is the only evidence that can be had.

Mr. LORE. Certainly no evidence of that kind is before the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the fishermen were unable to catch any mackerel at all on the coast it would not prove there were not mackerel somewhere in the sea, but it would be pretty good evidence to that effect. The difficulty of obtaining the fish is certainly competent evidence to show their increasing scarcity.

Mr. LORE. But, measured by that which is before our eyes, it is fair to assume that the supply is still there, for it not only meets all the demand, but the quantity is so abundant that to-day mackerel are a drug on the market.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How about the quality?

Mr. LORE. I will come to the question of the quality presently. I have been speaking of the quantity; and on that point I think I have said all I care to say. I think I have shown that the quantity is not diminished.

Now as to the quality of the food. I am free to say—and I have no other wish than that all the facts in this case should appear—that not merely from the 1st of March till the 1st of June, but from the 1st of March till the 1st of August, embracing at least the entire month of June and part of July, even while these fish on the shores of Maine and Massachusetts are spawning, the quality is not so good as later in the season, after they become fat; still they are wholesome and palatable food.

I have in my hand a very interesting work upon the fisheries of Massachusetts, published in 1833, the author being Dr. Jerome B. C. Smith. In this work the habits of these fish are largely discussed. It has always been a mystery where they came from. Indeed, we might say in biblical language that they are like the wind, which "bloweth where it listeth; thou cans't not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." We know that these fish appear in the northern waters about March and disappear about November. From whence they come to our shores in March and where they go when they leave the New England coast in November each year is a profound mystery and a curious study for our scientists. Some say they hibernate in the mud on cold northern shores; others, that they spend the winter under the icebergs in arctic regions, but in this book one writer states that in the month of November he found immense schools of these mackerel taking their way back apparently to the southern climes. And this writer seems to have satisfied himself and others that these fish, passing between the Gulf Stream and the coast, go to the deep water south to repursue in another season their migrations northward.

It is urged that the fish caught between the 1st of March and the 1st of August are inferior in quality. I concede that they are not so good as those caught after the spawning season is over; but they are perfectly palatable, wholesome food, though a little poor; that is all. The authorities which have been produced do not show that fish caught during the spawning season are unwholesome food. The very authority cited by the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Collins—who, by the way, was born in Maine—was appointed from Massachusetts; was a mackerel fisherman himself for twenty-five years, and who frankly says he feels an interest in the whole matter, I might say a strong bias in favor of the old calling, and is the only one of the scientists who gives countenance to the theory of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly. We contend that everybody who is in this business or knows anything about it is of the same opinion.

Mr. LORE. What does he say about these mackerel caught during the spawning season? He does not say that they are unpalatable or unwholesome, but simply that they are of inferior quality. But the point of the matter appears a little later. It conclusively appears that when these fish come into the New York market, though of comparatively poor quality, men living all along the coast buy them with avidity and eat them with gusto. The catching of the fish and the packing of the fish then caught interfere to a great extent with the sale of fish caught and packed on the coast of Maine and Massachusetts. The reason, then, is clear, if you can prevent the catching of mackerel while they are on the coast of the Middle States and suffer them only to be caught while they can be found on the New England shores, you deplete the market and make a demand for the large stock of mackerel now on the hands of the Eastern fishermen and dealers which is now a drug in the market.

The catch may be a little inferior; but let me say to the gentlemen of this House that the man who labors six days in the week, who has house-rent to pay, a wife and five or six little ones to feed, can not afford to buy high-price mackerel at 25 cents a pound.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What?

Mr. LORE. He can not afford to buy high-price mackerel at 25 cents a pound.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is where your interesting fishmongers' association comes in, because the man who sells mackerel does not get more than 3 cents a pound, and if the fishmongers put on enough to run it up to 25 cents a pound they are a nice set of people indeed.

Mr. LORE. Suppose this bill should be passed and no mackerel should be allowed to be caught in the months of March and April on the Middle States' coast, and that your fishermen in Maine and Massachusetts should only be permitted to catch them after June, what then will be the price to which they will run it up? Will my friend from Maine answer?

Mr. REED, of Maine. We are talking of a time when No. 1 mackerel are not caught.

Mr. LORE. Take away the mackerel coming into New York and Philadelphia from this summer catch cut off by this bill and let your New England fishermen and dealers only supply the mackerel to Philadelphia and New York, and what would be the price of No. 1 then? That is a problem I will leave to my friend from Maine to solve.

Mr. REED, of Maine. They will not be had at any price, because they will not be caught.

Mr. LORE. I will say, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the quality of these fish, that the fish caught and placed in the New York market during this week have been of the finest quality. I hold in my hand a message from a man who is an expert in the business, who telegraphs from Fulton market that since last Monday there came into that market 4,510 barrels of fresh mackerel; that that quantity of fresh mackerel was landed in Fulton, and that they were all large, fine fish, readily sold to and eagerly bought by the people seeking fresh fish at this opportune season of the year.

But, sir, I do not put it on that ground only; I have no doubt these fish are somewhat inferior in quality when caught early in the season. I am equally satisfied they are healthy food, cheap, and desirable.

I was amazed at what my friend from Maine presented to you. He stated the quantity of No. 1 mackerel compared to the whole catch years ago with the quantity of No. 1 mackerel compared to the whole catch at the present time, and left us to infer this grew out of this spring catch. Did he fairly and frankly give us the true reason for that difference? Did he tell us that the difference was because these large No. 1 fish were caught at that time by hook and line? But the Maine and Massachusetts men were not satisfied with the hook and line; it was too slow; and now they use the purse-net, which has already been graphically described to the House. With that net they surrounded a whole school of fish and scooped them all in, big and little. The difference in quantity was very great, because they scooped them in and put them on the market without regard to size.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We are trying to restrict that kind of fishing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We want to try and stop Maine and Massachusetts from doing that of which you complain.

Mr. LORE. You can do that in your own State; but you do not propose to do so from June to November while they are on your own shores, but only from March to June while they are on our coast.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We can not when the mackerel are down on the coast of Delaware.

Mr. LORE. Precisely; that is what you should not do. You take good care not to ask to do so while the mackerel are on the coast of Maine and Massachusetts. When gentlemen bring in a bill to prohibit Maine and Massachusetts fishermen from using purse-nets to scoop in whole schools of mackerel, big and little, without regard to size, that will be a different proposition, and it is one for which I hope this House will vote. But there is no such proposition as that before the House.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If the gentleman will bring in a bill to do that I will vote for it. We can not do everything at once.

Mr. LORE. We are on this question now, and let us settle it before we go to any other. I could not get up a bill at once to accomplish that purpose, and I have only referred to it because it is necessary it should be stated in order to explain what was said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I have considered the question of the quantity and quality of mackerel which have been caught and sold for food. The alleged diminished supply I have already dealt with. The reason for it I have tried to present. Even if the questions were not embarrassed with doubt this House, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, ought to act with great caution and hesitate to interfere with an industry as large as this is and involving such grave interests. There may be other objections to the passage of this bill, but those which have already been given, to my mind, ought to convince you it should not pass. It seems to me they are unanswerable.

What does the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] himself say as to this? At the very outstart, at the very threshold of this question you are met by the gravest questions as to the right to touch it at all. In the report of the committee they say they are not entirely certain of their jurisdiction, but as the question was referred to them by the House and the question of jurisdiction seems to be a matter of doubt, they assumed without arrogating the functions of others to report the bill.

Why, my friend from Arkansas, who has evidently looked into this with some degree of care, doubts, as it must be apparent here, the right of this House, the right of this Congress, to pass such a bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. LORE. Am I? In what respect?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I was referring to that as a parliamentary question, not as a legal question. I did not know whether or not it should have been referred to some other committee under the division of labor required by the rules of the House; and it was purely a parliamentary question. The gentleman is going a long way to get at his argument.

Mr. LORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I see upon a closer scrutiny of the language of the report that it bears that construction.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is exactly the construction it was intended to bear.

Mr. LORE. And you did not consider the question of the right of Congress to deal with the subject?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. We had no doubt of the right of Congress to deal with the subject.

Mr. LORE. Then let me ask the gentleman how far will Congress go beyond the line? I confess, sir, that I have some very grave doubt upon that point. I have some doubt as to whether the right of Congress exists to go beyond three marine leagues, in addition to the questions raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who throws grave doubts upon some features of the bill.

I doubt very much the equity and justice and fairness of any bill you may bring in here the object of which is to lay an embargo upon a class of our people occupying three or four or five States, if they see proper to embark in this particular class of business, and that is practically what this bill does. And what is the argument of gentlemen? If it is so profitable, and you pass this bill, then they may not engage in the industry. The Middle States are not now engaged in mackerel fishing to any great extent; but non constat, if it prove profitable, as it seems to be, may they not see proper to equip themselves and go out upon the ocean and engage in the business while the fish are on their coast in the months from March to June?

Pass this bill, and you throw the entire mackerel catch into the States above the south line of Massachusetts. You lay an absolute prohibition upon all the States south of the southern line of Massachusetts. These are grave questions and ought to be considered in all of their phases. If the vessels are now exclusively owned in Maine and Massachusetts, if this business proves to be so profitable, or even if it be a lottery, men will be found willing to embark in the enterprise, and for five years you absolutely prohibit them from going upon the coast and catching the mackerel and landing them upon our shores. It will prohibit them from catching the mackerel at all, because after the 1st day of June there are no mackerel upon our eastern coast north of Cape Hatteras and south of Massachusetts. They are all north of that point, and you give the whole business to Maine and Massachusetts, a proposition so modest that it strikes one with amazement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman from Delaware think that there is any reason for the expectation that large interests will embark in this business?

Mr. LORE. I see no reason why they should not, or why any people should be excluded. But the main objection to the bill, so far as the small catch is concerned, will be remedied by the amendment which has been suggested.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Can not the constituents of the gentleman from Delaware, if they choose to go into this avocation, come down to Maine and Massachusetts and catch them as our people go from Maine down along your coast to catch them?

Mr. LORE. But that does not answer the objection I make. Of course they can do so; but I see no justice or propriety in saying to the New Jersey or Delaware or New York man who desires to engage in this fishery business that you shall not catch the fish when on your shores, but you must wait until the mackerel have passed by you and gotten up to the coast of Maine before you can be permitted to catch and land them.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But will not any man in Maine or Massachusetts be prohibited as well as your constituents? Is it not a prohibition which prohibits everybody alike?

Mr. LORE. Precisely, but you prohibit our people while the fish are passing our shores and compel them to wait until they get up in front of the door of your house. We can not catch them until then. I submit, therefore, the argument I make against this bill is a perfectly legitimate one; and, as my friend from New York [Mr. BEACH] suggests, you do not want us to have them fresh while passing in schools before our eyes, but want us to wait until you catch and salt them down and then get them from you. Now, I do not believe that you can salt down this House with that kind of mackerel supply. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. What we desire is to give you healthy mackerel in good condition: not permitting them to be taken when, as we believe, they are not suitable for food. We want to save the mackerel alive until it has spawned, in order to furnish a supply every year, and not exhaust them and destroy the possibility of a supply, as you wish to do. Now we do not care whether they be caught on the coast of Maine or Delaware or Florida; all we ask is to protect them from destruction and to protect the mackerel during the spawning season. We do not use the mackerel until they are in a good, healthy condition.

Mr. LORE. Well, I hope the gentleman will not consume all of my time making his speech. I agree if we may take the Maine delegation as fair types of well-fed mackerel men they are excellent specimens. [Laughter.]

You are not willing we should catch and eat them from March to June when spawning on our coasts. But you catch for packing in purse-seines during June and July while they are spawning on your coasts. This is genuine generosity.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But we do not eat them while we are here.

Mr. LORE. No, you were well developed before you came here. We have men in the Middle States who are willing to take the mackerel as we find them off our coasts while they are fresh; and in that condition we believe they are just as good, if not a little better, than after you have caught, salted, and sent them to us.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You will not be so content after you get some of our good mackerel.

Mr. LORE. There is another reason why this bill should not pass, and it is a strong one in my mind. The catch of mackerel from the 1st of March to the 1st of June along our coast does supply a cheap article of food that is perfectly palatable, food that is nourishing and that is fresh.

The mackerel we thus get from the 1st of March to the 1st of June is far superior to the salt mackerel, even No. 1, that we get from Maine and Massachusetts, and is much more palatable. Then why should we be deprived of the fresh fish that are passing by our doors, and wait until they get up to Maine and Massachusetts to be caught and salted and sent back to us in a salt state? It used to give the sailors the scurvy to eat salt fish. Now in Delaware we want to have some fresh mackerel occasionally. And we do not want to be confined by a bill like this to Spanish mackerel. You are willing, in your generosity, we should have Spanish mackerel. I suppose that is because they are not caught by your fishermen in sufficient quantities to be profitable.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How many does it take to provide Delaware? [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. That depends on the kind of food. Does it not strike my friend's generous nature harshly that the large States should seek to deprive the smaller ones of good food? While Delaware is small, the appetites of her people are healthy and normal. They live bounteously and are willing others should live. They prefer fresh Delaware mackerel in the spring to the briny article sent down from our generous New England friends. I have heard that in the mountains of Pennsylvania, where my friend dwells, men live on mountain laurel. Is that so? If so, I would ask how much laurel it takes to supply food for the canny mountaineers?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We do not get fresh mackerel.

Mr. LORE. And you can not get them from Maine. Are you willing others should have them?

Mr. MILLIKEN. We could send some on ice.

Mr. LORE. All we want is to have the privilege of catching a few of these fish as they pass us. Seriously, this is a question of cheap food; and it is cheap food for the people who live along the Atlantic coast. There are at times 75,000, ay, 100,000, barrels of fresh mackerel caught off the coast and taken into the city of New York, into the city of Philadelphia, and other cities, which sell all the way up from five cents a bucket or basket full. The poor woman can take on her arm and carry to her home a large supply for her family at one or two or three cents a pound. By this bill you would take away that supply at this season when the people need just that kind of food, when they have come through the winter and have not got the vegetables of spring and summer. Just at that time nature has provided this bounteous inflow of food from the ocean. And yet we are told, "Do not lay your hand upon it; keep off, and let it get up to Maine and Massachusetts."

Mr. BOUTELLE. We want you to wait till the fish is born before you eat it.

Mr. LORE. It seems that in Maine and Massachusetts they do not wait till the fish is born, but scoop all into their nets, at all stages and in every shape. It is the Maine men who catch these unborn fish and sell them in New York.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why not stop the Maine men from doing that?

Mr. LORE. You do not ask this in your bill. There are others than Maine men—men all along the line—who are anxious about this.

As a question of cheap food I hope this House will not be willing to prevent the people of the Middle States from getting these fish all along the coast by passing a bill of this kind. The whole question is clouded with doubt. The scientists who are engaged in the careful study of this question tell you there is doubt about it. They tell you there is doubt about its decreasing the supply. In fact it is not decreasing the catch. They tell you there is doubt about every point which has been raised in support of this measure. On the other hand, in opposing these unjust restrictions which are sought to be imposed upon our people we present the fact that by this industry we obtain a cheap supply of food.

I will not weary the House with a further detailed presentation of this matter, but I desire to read just for a moment on the question of cheaper food what is stated by Capt. J. W. Collins, who is assistant fish commissioner. He was questioned by the Committee on Ways and Means. Some eight or nine questions were addressed to him. In reply to one of those questions he said:

The "effect as relates to the cheapness of mackerel as measured by its real qualities as food" has been partially answered above. That the fish caught after June 1 will bring a higher price than those taken before that date goes without saying.

It goes without saying that fish are cheaper that are caught before the 1st than after the 1st day of June. He says further:

One of the largest dealers in mackerel in the United States has told me that in his opinion the demand for good mackerel could not be supplied if the "inferior trash" could be kept out of the market.

Pursue this plan, keep these fish out of the market, and this expert frankly tells you that the demand can not be supplied. Where would the price go to? Yet you talk of supplying and making abundant this article of food, which for years has been used all over the country.

Let me say, in conclusion, not only am I thoroughly satisfied that the reasons adduced for the passage of this bill are not warranted by the facts, but that the reasons against it are overwhelming. And I do most heartily and earnestly support the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], that this whole matter should go back to the Fish Commission. They tell you that they have a vessel equipped to go out upon the ocean to investigate the habits of these fish and find out if possible whence they come and where they go, and settle all these questions of supply and modes of fishing. Therefore I say, send this subject back to the commission, and when we get their report we shall have something intelligent to act upon, and we shall be enabled to pass laws that will be wise in their inception and just and equitable in their execution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words upon this bill before the vote is taken. As has been said by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, this is a question of cheap food, and if I did not believe that the passage of this bill would improve the quality of this character of food and eventually cause the people of the country at large to have a better supply than they have now, I should not support it.

Professor Baird has been quoted in this debate as not being in favor of the bill, and a letter from him has been read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] which seemed to imply that he was not in favor of the bill, and that he had serious doubts as to its effect. Within a day or two I have seen Professor Baird and talked with him personally upon this very subject. I spent considerable time with him discussing the subject, for, Mr. Chairman, I represent the most important fishing town in the United States, and have been familiar with fishermen ever since I was a boy, and have known, so far as they are known, the habits of the mackerel and the modes in which they are caught. Professor Baird has told me within two days that while he did not feel clear in respect to the effect of this legislation upon the quantity of fish that might be taken hereafter, yet that upon the whole he thought it was wise to pass this bill, because it might have a favorable effect upon the mackerel upon our coast in the future, and that, at all events, he was in favor of trying the experiment.

That was Professor Baird's statement to me within two days. It has been said here, among other things, that there is no proof that the quantity of mackerel has diminished during the last few years by reason of purse-seine fishing. I do not claim, Mr. Chairman, that there is any satisfactory proof upon that point; but I wish the members of this House to take notice of one fact which bears directly upon the question. That fact is that the business of fishing as now prosecuted is conducted very differently from what it was twenty years ago. The fishermen now have the very best and most costly boats; they are all supplied with the best equipments; they are all, or nearly all, supplied with these purse-nets. The purse-net, so called, is 1,200 feet—nearly a quarter of a mile—long and twenty-odd fathoms deep, and when it is cast around a school of mackerel, embracing as it does an area of 1,200 feet one way and 120 feet the other, gentlemen can conceive of the immense quantity of mackerel it is possible to take at one haul. Now, observe, the fact that the supply for the last ten or twelve years has not decreased does not go to prove that the mackerel may not be diminished by this method of fishing, for the new method has been adopted because it is an improvement upon the old one and enables the men to make a greater catch.

A seine is worth from a thousand to twelve hundred dollars, and the fishermen now put into a single adventure $10,000 or $12,000 where they formerly put only $3,000 or $4,000 at the outside. Therefore the business is now so conducted that the take is not diminished, but it is because these new methods are so effective, and therefore so destructive. Not only are more mackerel by a great many thousand barrels annually taken into the city of New York now than were taken there ten years ago but thousands of barrels are wasted and destroyed, because the men take so many fish at a time that they can not handle them all.

The quantity that goes into New York is really no indication of the total quantity taken, but it is clear that the amount taken now in the Southern fishing grounds is very much greater than it was ten years ago. The effect is noticed particularly in relation to the quality of the fish. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] cited evidence as to the quality of the fish in one case, showing that it had very much deteriorated. However, a single instance of that kind is not entitled to much weight in determining the general question, because it may be exceptional. But I hold in my hand the annual report of the fish bureau of Boston, giving the quantity and quality of fish taken for more than fifty years, and also an annual statement of the quality of the fish from year to year. The report covers the period from 1809 to 1884. I have made an abstract of it. It appears that for the ten years ending 1885 the amount of No. 1 mackerel taken as compared with the whole catch was 225,253 barrels out of 1,880,767 barrels. For the ten years previous, from 1865 to 1875, the number of barrels of No. 1 mackerel was 103,630 out of 317,096 barrels. Thus it will be perceived that from 1865 to 1875 the amount of No. 1 mackerel was little short of 50 per cent., while from 1875 to 1885 it was from 14 to 16 per cent. This shows a very important change for the worse in the character of the fish.

Now, in respect to this very experiment, I desire to say that Professor Baird—to quote him again, because his is the best authority in this country upon the question—Professor Baird has said that he believes it is worth while to try the experiment of this legislation, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that his testimony should receive the consideration of this House and should be regarded as almost decisive in its effect.

It is said that this movement is almost exclusively in the interest of the fishermen of Maine and Massachusetts. It can not be denied that it is in the interest of the fishermen of Maine and Massachusetts, but it is not urged here to-day because it is in their interest; it is urged because it is believed to be in the interest of the people of the whole country, and almost certain to result eventually in improving the character and the amount of the supply of this food. Gentlemen know very well that Professor Baird, who is a philanthropist as well as an accomplished man in his profession, would not encourage legislation of this kind if he did not believe that eventually it would have a good effect.

Mr. HEWITT. He does not encourage it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, the first section of this bill provides—

That for the period of five years from and after the passage of this act no mackerel, other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

The object of the bill is to prohibit the indiscriminate slaughter of mackerel during the spawning season by the use of purse-nets. That, as I understand from the promoters of the bill, is its sole object. But the bill as drawn will go further than that in its practical operation. We have all along our New Jersey shore hardy fishermen who in the morning put out to sea in their open boats, and anchoring from 1 to 10 miles from shore, spend the day in fishing for mackerel with hook and line. They thus obtain a livelihood for their families, and they supply among other places those numerous seaside hotels which are dotting our shores. I understand that the promoters of the bill do not desire to interfere with this fishery. The number of mackerel caught by the men I have indicated constitutes but a very small proportion of the total catch—is in fact not even a "drop in the bucket," but only one of the atoms that make up the drop. To save the rights of these men I proposed an amendment which has been read. Upon conferring with the friends of the bill I have consented to modify that amendment; and I ask that the Clerk now read it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the end of the first section the following:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught off shore with hook and line from open rowboats of less than 20 feet keel and landed in said boats."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say that the terms of this amendment are stricter than I like; but they are such as meet the approval of the friends of the bill. I earnestly hope the amendment will be adopted. Those who favor the bill have no objection to the amendment, and those who oppose the bill will vote against it whether it be amended or not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a few of the authorities who, as my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] said, have expressed themselves upon the policy indicated by this bill. They are not, however, as the gentleman believes. Mr. Goode, of whom the gentleman justly spoke in very high terms, made the following statement before the international fisheries' exhibition in London some years ago:

The importance of the distinction between the extermination of a species, even in a restricted locality, and the destruction of a fishery, should be noted. The former is somewhat unusual and seemingly impossible in the case of oceanic species; but the latter, especially for limited regions, is almost of yearly occurrence.

Now, the gentleman from New York spoke of what this bill proposes to do as a new proposition sprung upon this House and not properly considered. In this same address, delivered years ago, the same distinguished authority to whom I have just referred used the following language:

There could be no doubt that the extensive fisheries prosecuted by menhaden steamers in the gulf of Maine were prejudicial to the shore fishermen by driving the fish they formerly caught for bait out to sea and beyond the reach of their nets.

Speaking of the schools being depredated upon before they came into our shores he said:

There is also reason to believe that our great purse-seine fisheries for menhaden and mackerel, though perhaps not causing a decrease in the numbers of the fish, have kept them farther from shore. There is a decided disposition on the part of the intelligent men engaged in these fisheries to press the passage of a law which should prevent the use of the purse-seine before the 1st of June.

This is the language of Mr. Goode himself, used years ago, in his address before that international assemblage at London.

Then Professor Huxley, speaking in the highest terms of commendation of this address, used language which I will read, going to show that some measures of this character are deemed by the most eminent authorities advisable; and certainly no measure could be more moderate than the one proposed, and even this is limited in its duration to five years. This very conservative measure is the response which the House is requested to give at this time to the intelligent demands of the older fishermen. Mr. Huxley said:

The great moral of the United States contribution to this exhibition, especially of the contribution which Mr. Brown Goode has just made to the conferences, was that if this country, or any society which could be formed of sufficient extent to take up the question, was going to deal seriously with the fisheries and not let them take care of themselves, as they had been doing for the last thousand years or so, they had a very considerable job before them; and unless they put into that organization of fisheries the energy, the ingenuity, the scientific knowledge, and the practical skill which characterized his friend Professor Baird and his assistants, their efforts were not likely to come to very much good.

Now the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was very kind, and I think also very adroit, in intimating the immaturity of those who do not agree with him and a few fishmongers of his city. I stated to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE], when interrogated by him yesterday as to whether or not this bill had been submitted to our Fish Commission, that I had not submitted this specific bill, but that I had submitted the proposition in the bill, that I had held correspondence with the distinguished Commissioners and others, and I had had also protracted personal conversation with them. And I alluded at that time to the letter which I hold in my hand, and to which I will now make more specific allusion.

When I saw Professor Baird he told me the best authority in the world on this subject was the gentleman who wrote me this letter. Not willing to trust to memory as to the results of a verbal interview, I addressed to this gentleman, Captain Collins, who is the selected expert of Professor Baird and of our Government in charge of this branch of our fisheries, a letter containing inquiries which I thought analyzed the subject, and his letter in response to mine was printed and put at the disposition of the members of the committee and of the House.

I will go over some of these points:

(3) In reply to the question of "what is the effect of unrestricted fishing upon the total weight of catch?" I have to say that this can only be conjectured. With the catch totally unrestricted the amount of mackerel taken between March and June may vary from one-eighth to about one-fourth of the season's catch.

That is the measure of a prodigious industry, which the gentleman from New York and others speak of. The very men who prosecute it thought some sort of system ought to be established by the only power that claims or possesses the power to establish such system out on the high seas. Laboring men and other consumers of the great bulk of this product are interested in there being a reasonable effort at some sort of regulation.

Captain Collins proceeds:

It is, however, known that about 75,000 barrels of fresh mackerel were landed, and it is claimed that more than that amount were thrown away for lack of a market or because they were unfit for food.

He is speaking of mackerel which are caught out of season—caught during the season when we seek to impose a wholesome restriction, although the business may still be carried on from the 1st of July to the 1st of November, at which period the fish disappear, and with the exception of the limited period of restriction, from March to June, all the ships of the country may go out upon the assembled schools of fish when every fish is in condition to be eaten by man.

Captain Collins proceeds:

Probably 25,000 barrels were salted in the same period. But it is claimed by those best qualified to know, or at least who have followed the mackerel fishery for many years, that if the spring fishery is restricted there will be a heavier catch of mackerel later in the season, when the fish are in much finer condition for food.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (S. 121) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road; in which concurrence was requested.

MACKEREL FISHING.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, that is what this distinguished authority says as to the annual quantity of the catch, that if this restriction be made there will be a heavier catch and there will not be only this increased supply, but the increased supply will be in a fit condition for food. The bill, therefore, is in the interest of cheap and more abundant food. The fish will be permitted to assemble upon their feeding ground. They will be caught at less expense per barrel, and they will be fit to eat after they are caught. The selling price of good mackerel will be less. But the catch will be so much heavier and the expense of catching so much less, if the fish are permitted to approach our shores unmolested, that the cost of production, if I may so speak, will diminish in a greater ratio than the selling price. Hence consumer and producer will both be benefited. This bill therefore is in the interest of cheap food to my people and to all the people of the country and yet good for the fisherman, whose recompense is a part of the proceeds of each catch. The advantage is the difference between system and no system.

If it were not so I should oppose the bill. If it sought to restrict anybody's occupation in order to enhance anybody's income, I would oppose it as a piece of class legislation.

It is asserted, apparently with good reason—

Says this same authority whom Professor Baird says is second in practical knowledge to no one in the world—that the expensive operations carried on with purse-seines in the spring, when the mackerel are migrating north, has a tendency to divert them from their intended course—

The same idea which was advanced by Professor Goode in the London address—

they are driven offshore, and frequently fail to reach their natural feeding and spawning grounds in the Gulf of Maine.

They are dispersed at the very inception of their rising from the depths of the sea. They are not permitted either to fatten or to assemble upon their feeding grounds. How can you net fish or birds if they are dispersed before they get to the trap? Captain Collins further says:

This is believed to be especially the case with the larger mackerel, which, as the season advances, grow fat and become the best qualities known to our market. Where these fish go is not clearly understood, and this is one of the problems which the Fish Commission hope to solve in the schooner now being built with the appropriation made by Congress last winter.

The practical effect of the present system is that the fish are driven away from our people, and beyond a point where they can be economically caught by our fishermen.

Then further:

The effect upon the quality of the catch, should a restriction he put upon the spring fishing—

Says this same gentleman, who is the best authority, according to Professor Baird, in the world—the effect would be to improve it very materially. This is well known to every one who has any knowledge of the species.

The improvement in quality would be due to two causes, first, fish taken before June are poor and thin, but after that date they fatten rapidly and soon reach their maximum of fineness as an article of food; second, if the fish are undisturbed in the spring and allowed to deposit their spawn during the most critical period of their existence, it is believed that the size of the fish will improve very materially, and that No. 1 mackerel of full size and best quality may again become fairly abundant in our markets—

Our people being deprived of them now—

May again become fairly abundant in our markets and an article of food for any person of ordinary means.

That is what they are not now, and that is exactly what this bill seeks to make them to the public and to the laboring poor of this country. I should not expect that four or a half dozen fishmongers in the city of New York would see their necessities or show that they sympathized with them in that respect; but it is my belief, on the statement of the best authority, although the gentleman from New York says there is no authority in favor of such a course as this, that such would be the result.

It will be accessible for any person of ordinary means, instead of being so rare that they have become a luxury and attainable only by the wealthy, if attainable at all.

That is the present condition, just the reverse of what is stated by the gentleman from New York:

One thing is certain, whereas mackerel now taken before June 1, as above stated, are always poor and generally small or medium size, those taken after that date are mostly fat fish and very much more valuable for food, containing a far larger amount of nutritive qualities in proportion to the actual weight of the fish when taken from the water.

He goes on to answer another of my questions:

You ask—

Said he,

"Will this make mackerel no higher to consumers, but more suitable for eating, hence insuring consumption and the popularity of the fish, followed by the unlimited supply of good fish?"

That was one of the questions that I asked, and to which I sought an answer, because anything that tends to make food cheaper to our people commends itself to me, and that was the object I had in view in framing this bill.

I have already said something of the price. It should be understood that the price, in accordance with the laws of trade, will be governed largely by the supply and demand.

It is claimed by many, both dealers and fishermen, that a direct result of putting a better average quality of fish on the market would be to increase the popularity of the mackerel with our people, a popularity it once enjoyed in a pre-eminent degree, and as a consequence the consumption of this species would be much larger than now.

And I will state here that this country now, with all the improved and unlimited appliances to catch fish, with its 120,000 miles of railroads for distributing them into the interior of the country, with its sixty millions of fish-loving people, does not consume, taking the percentage as represented by the population, 30 per cent. of what it did in 1831. We do not consume as many mackerel now as we did in 1831. We consumed then over 400,000 barrels, and we ought to be able now to give at least 1,000,000 barrels of good mackerel to our people.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of this kind of food.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And yet this food is to-day higher by nearly 100 per cent. than it was in those days.

A balance-wheel, or regulator—

Says this eminent authority—

A balance-wheel, or regulator it may be called, which would prevent the price ever reaching a too high figure under ordinary conditions is this: As soon as the demand improves, and anything like reasonably paying prices can be obtained, the immediate result will be a very material increase in the number of men and vessels employed.

Implying that there is no limitation upon that—

And considering the rapid growth of the United States, the accumulating millions to be fed, and the greatly increased facilities for transportation, there seems little reason to doubt that, notwithstanding the improved methods for the capture of mackerel, if its former popularity can be restored, the pursuit of this species may in future years, as in the past, employ a fleet of upward of eight hundred sail of vessels instead of less than four hundred, which are at present engaged. This may seem strong ground to take, but when we consider that a catch of upward of 400,000 barrels of mackerel found a market in 1831, with the population of our country infinitely smaller than it is now, the statement will not, I trust, appear to be an exaggerated one.

And this gentleman further states:

The cry of the age is "cheap food!"

Gentlemen will see that I for my part am pushing after cheap food, and I was asking my questions of this expert in order to develop the fact as to this being the way to get cheap food. This authority says further:

The average person who goes to market to buy fish for his table can not be expected to be conversant with the different grades of mackerel, at least not enough so to make a good selection. A mackerel is a mackerel to him, and if he chances to get a good one he will return for another; but if the first trial results in disappointment it can scarcely be expected that the experiment will be repeated. So, although the fish may be cheap, it falls into disuse with a large number of consumers simply because it fails to gratify the needs and expectations of the purchaser, who thereafter prefers to put his money elsewhere.

It is cheap because worthless. I want it to mature and abound, and then to be cheap because abundant.

I am informed that the dealers and fishermen along the coast of Maine—

Says this authority about men whose petitions have come in great volume to our committee-room, men about whom the gentleman from New York seems to know nothing, and whom he does not represent, yet about whom, in the face of their own protests and in the face of the protests of those here who do represent them, he seems to be so solicitous—about these men, says this authority who for twenty-five years was one of them—

I am informed that the dealers and fishermen along the coast of Maine—

And mark you, every vessel in the Union engaged in the trade that is affected by this bill is a vessel of Maine or of Massachusetts—are unanimously in favor of restriction.

That is the information which this gentleman supplies. I do not know who got up the petition the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has had imposed upon him. It is got up in letter-type style, very unlike what we would expect as coming from the rugged men of the sea, the genuine men of the sea whom we had before our committee, and whose petitions we have—men who are very unanimously in favor of restriction; and Capt. Jesse Freeman, formerly manager of the fishing company at Wellfleet, Mass., very positively asserts that all the people on Cape Cod are similarly inclined.

That, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps as much as it is worth my while to say to the House; and I trust the House will give due weight to these opinions I have adduced of Professor Huxley, and Professor Goode, and of this gentleman to whom I was referred by Professor Baird as the man from whom to get information; nay, he was detained in the city by Professor Baird to give me this information, and he was brought on here ahead of the time he would otherwise have come because we expected early action, and Professor Baird considered he was better qualified to give the information sought than he was himself. I trust I have read enough from these eminent authorities to show the House that many of the statements made by gentlemen are not warranted by the facts; that they are mistakes; and that the bill which is offered here is in the interest of cheap food and better food and more of it, and is a conservative and reasonable bill for us to pass.

I call for the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. HEWITT. I reserved seventeen minutes of my time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Have I a right to call the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The other side has consumed a great deal more time than we have.

Mr. HEWITT. I reserved seventeen minutes of my time, and have promised it to other gentlemen. I wish to carry out my promise, and the gentleman can not move the previous question when there is that reservation of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reservation would entitle the gentleman to that time unless the House should sooner cut off debate by ordering the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I was not aware the gentleman from New York had reserved any portion of his time.

Mr. HEWITT. I do not wish to occupy the time myself, and if the gentlemen to whom I promised this time are satisfied to let the matter go as it stands, I have no objection. But I think the gentleman should see the propriety of at least allowing me to fulfill my promise to other gentlemen.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws the motion for the previous question and offers the amendment which he sends to the desk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have not yielded the floor.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3, strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of March, 1887."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to move to strike out the fourth section, relating to treaties.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is that amendment to be voted on while the gentleman from Arkansas is still occupying the floor to speak?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Arkansas for the purpose of discussing the amendment or for any motion he desired to make.

Mr. HAMMOND. As I understood from the gentleman's announcement he expected to occupy the floor for some time in debate; and I thought if that was the case we could not yet vote on the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the patience of the House has been sufficiently taxed, and I am sorry the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has not been gratified by the amount of discussion he has heard already.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am gratified and I want to hear some more. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was first on the amendment proposed by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, as follows:

In line 3, strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of March, 1887;" so that it will read:

"That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of March, 1887, &c."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was next on the amendment offered by Mr. BUCHANAN; which was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the first section the following:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught offshore with hook and line from open rowboats of less than 20 feet keel, and landed in said boats."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was next on the amendment offered by Mr. REED, of Maine, to strike out section 4, as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with existing treaties.

The motion to strike out the section was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 97, noes 36.

Mr. HEWITT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. HEWITT.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 47.

Mr. HEWITT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The House again divided; and there were—yeas 119, nays 89, not voting 114; as follows:

SATURDAY SESSIONS FOR DEBATE.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present for consideration a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which objection will be asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following order, adopted by the House February 23, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded and repealed, to wit:

"Ordered, That hereafter, until the further order of the House, there shall be a session of the House on each Saturday for general debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, no other business to be transacted."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to object to that, unless it can be amended to take effect after to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It will have no effect to-morrow, since there is a special order fixed for consideration on that day.

Mr. DUNHAM. This proposes to change another special order of the House fixed for Saturdays——

The SPEAKER. But it does not affect to-morrow, because that day is not set apart for general debate, there being a later order setting aside that day for the consideration of the bill reported from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Mr. DINGLEY. Suppose that special order should not be called up to-morrow, what would be the effect; would the original order apply to that day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I must object unless it excepts to-morrow from its operation. I will not object if it can be modified to take effect after to-morrow.

Mr. MORRISON. I will modify the resolution so as to provide that it shall not take effect until after to-morrow, the 22d instant.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There being no further objection, the resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed now to dispose of the bills heretofore reported from the Committee of the Whole House yet undisposed of, with the exception of two bills, one with regard to the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad, and the other with regard to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], having charge of the bill relating to the McMinnville road, wishes it to be understood that the vote shall be taken on that bill next Friday before the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that the previous question shall now be considered as ordered on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. What is the arrangement proposed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinos [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the House, before going into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of private bills, take up for consideration bills already reported from that committee excepting two bills which he has indicated.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to withhold his request for a few moments that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a public-building bill from my State.

The SPEAKER. This will not interfere with the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, but must be disposed of first.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. OATES], who has reported one of these bills, is absent. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is here representing the other. As they are important measures, requiring a yea-and-nay vote, I ask that it be understood that the vote shall be taken on them next Friday before going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can it be understood that when next Friday comes you will commence earlier in the day and take action on those bills, instead of waiting till there is not a quorum present?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is with a view of their being taken up earlier in the day that this request is made.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I object to that arrangement so far as the bill relating to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad is concerned. The absence of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] need not interfere with the vote on that case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet stated the entire request of the gentleman from Illinois. He asks unanimous consent that the House before going into Committee of the Whole to-day take up for consideration the bills heretofore reported from the Committee of the Whole House, except the two bills indicated; the vote on those bills to be taken next Friday before going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Does that cut off debate on those two bills?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has not the previous question been ordered on the McMinnville bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. DUNHAM. It seems to me we have spent time enough over that bill, and we should have some understanding that next Friday it will be taken up early in the day.

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks; that those two bills next Friday shall be taken up before the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can there not be unanimous consent that we shall do nothing else next Friday before that business comes up? That those bills shall be taken up early and nothing else put in their place?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to suggest the McMinnville bill be made the special order immediately after the reading of the Journal next Friday.

The SPEAKER. It would come after the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. DUNHAM. I want it disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COBB. I object; and I move that all private business be dispensed with for the remainder of this day. My object is to call up the Southern Pacific and California land-grant-forfeiture bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] that if private business is dispensed with, under the rule of the House on that subject the next matter would be the hour for the consideration of public bills reported by committees. The rule provides that when private business is dispensed with public bills shall be considered as on other days.

Mr. COBB. Then I will move to dispense with the hour for the consideration of public bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. You have to get there first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to dispense with private business for to-day.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again asks is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

There was no objection.

CHRISTOPHER SCHAEFNOCKER.

The first bill undisposed of reported by the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 2195) for the relief of Christopher Schaefnocker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JACKSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. BACON.

The bill (H. R. 3384) for the relief of James M. Bacon, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a favorable recommendation, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIE S. HOWARD.

7, the words "appropriated for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims" and inserting "in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there is no fund appropriated for payment of judgments except in special cases. Mr. SPRINGER. It is now nearly 4 o'clock, and I desire to propose that the remaining hour of to-day's session be devoted to calling up by unanimous consent bills on the Calendar and disposing of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there should be some order adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the request that one hour be devoted——

Mr. MCMILLIN. We had better follow the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. As there is objection, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HATCH in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN NEW MEXICO.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that this and the next three bills on the Calendar, which are of the same nature, be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COLUMBIA BANK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of the Columbia Bank in Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HIESTAND], who is interested in this bill, is at present absent. I ask that the bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

CONTINENTAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1628) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company, the Eagle Fire Insurance Company, the City Fire Insurance Company, and the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company, all of New York city; the Western National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, and the Maryland Fire Insurance Company of Baltimore, Md.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the refunding claims of the Continental Fire Insurance Company for $1,023.75, the Eagle Fire Insurance Company for $2,857.31, the City Fire Insurance Company for $4,141.07, and the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company for $9,685.93, of New York city; the Western National Bank for $5,041.27, the Merchants' National Bank for $1,217.50, and the Maryland Fire Insurance Company for $1,640.42, of Baltimore, Md.; which refunding claims are now on file in his office, and to examine them, and to allow such amounts as he may find said companies and banks have paid as a double tax upon the same profits, deducting, however, any legal unpaid taxes which the claimants should have paid and did not, under any laws of the United States, if any there shall be; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay such amounts as are allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The bill simply proposes to refer this matter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, authorizing and directing him to reopen these accounts and to pay whatever may be found to be justly due to these corporations. A similar bill was reported favorably in the last Congress by the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report was read.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House, the motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES OF G. ALEXANDER RAMSAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5554) for the relief of the legal representatives of G. Alexander Ramsay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,700 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid to the legal representatives of G. Alexander Ramsay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in settlement of his claim for moiety against the United States.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this measure grows out of some thirty prosecutions against a railroad company for violations of the provisions of the internal-revenue laws. Under the law as it existed when the prosecutions were commenced the informer was allowed a moiety of the fines and penalties collected by the Government. During the pendency of the suits a law was passed repealing the section of the statutes which allowed the moiety, but all rights which had accrued to any parties under the previous law were reserved.

This matter was before the last Congress, and a bill was then favorably reported proposing to pay something over $3,100—I think under a misapprehension of the law. Fifteen thousand dollars was collected upon these suits by compromise authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In that compromise they named $5,000 as the amount of the fine and penalty, the other $10,000 being taxes and costs.

So the Committee on Claims was of the opinion the informer was only entitled to the moiety which would be allowed on the $5,000 fixed by the Department as fine and penalty, as follows: On the first $500 at 50 per cent., $250; the next $1,500 at 40 per cent., $600; the next $2,000 at 30 per cent., $600; and the next $1,000 at 25 per cent., $250; making $1,700 in all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why was the claimant not paid at the time?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. For the reason other claimants are not paid by the Government, that the accounting officer of the Treasury wanted to be on the safe side, and as the statute had been repealed, notwithstanding the saving clause, refused to pay this man the money.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why could he not get it by going to the Court of Claims?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I think he could have gone into the Court of Claims, but he could not go there now, as the statute of limitations would run against him.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When was this claim first presented to Congress?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. This matter was reported on by the Committee on Claims at the last Congress. How many preceding Congresses it has been before I do not know. I find life is too short for a member of the Committee on Claims to trace back the ages these claimants have been before Congress from time to time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Some I know go back to the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I did not go back of that report.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYSANDER H. CARROLL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1445) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $194.24 be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Lysander H. Carroll, late postmaster at Concord, Merrimack County, New Hampshire, for money received for stamps stolen by burglars from the post-office at that place on the night of September 5, 1883.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who reported that bill, is not in the House, and I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom House bill 1455 was referred, having considered the same, respectfully report the same back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The accompanying documents are made a part of the report:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1884.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the burglary of the post-office at Concord, N. H., I have the honor to state:

(1) That this Department has absolutely no means of ascertaining the amount of "postal" funds in the possession of a postmaster at a given date.

(2) From the evidence filed in the case it appeared that the loss occurred through no fault or negligence of the postmaster; and he was therefore allowed a credit of $86.18 for money-order funds and $534.11 for postage-stamps lost by the burglary referred to.

(3) There has been no evidence filed to show that the postmaster was guilty of any violation of law or regulation touching the custody of such funds.

(4) All papers filed in the case were transmitted on the 12th instant to Hon. ELI SAULSBURY, of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, for consideration in connection with a bill similar to the one inclosed.

Very respectfully,

A. A. FREEMAN,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. OSSIAN RAY,
House of Representatives.

CONCORD, N. H., January 25, 1886.

SIR: I wish to present, through you, to the House Committee on Claims, a statement relative to my loss by burglars, which occurred September 5, 1883. The Concord post-office is a depository office. A hundred and eighty or more fourth-class postmasters deposit at this office the balance due the Government from them quarterly. The money so received, and when received, is placed in the safe with other postal funds, and deposited in the bank as frequently as the amount is sufficiently large for a deposit. I usually kept my cash deposited up very closely. The safe in the office was purchased and put there by the Post-Office Department, and was placed in the most exposed position, being near the sidewalk, and a gas-jet kept burning during the night within 6 feet of the safe-door. This office is also a paying office of railway postal clerks, who register at this office. On the last day of August, 1883, I drew my check and took money from the bank sufficient to meet the demands of my monthly pay-roll. Previous to the burglary I had paid all who were on the pay-roll except John E. Skinner, a postal clerk running on the route from Richford, Vt., to Concord, N. H. It being his week off duty, he had not received his pay as usual. The amount, being $75.82, was placed in an envelope and put with the pay-roll, and locked in an iron vault in the safe. This amount, $75.82, was a part of the $194.24 in cash which the burglars took from the safe. Of course it is impossible for me to tell whether the money so stolen was a part of it, postal funds, or money that had been received on deposit from other offices, as my practice was to keep but one package before depositing in the safe vault. As the $75.82 had been once deposited in the bank and drawn therefrom, it could not possibly be the same money received by me as postal funds.

L. H. CARROLL.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, Washington, D. C.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Merrimack, ss:

JANUARY 25, 1886.

Personally appeared the above-named L. H. Carroll, and made oath that the above statement by him subscribed is true.

Before me,

ROBT. A. RAY, Justice of the Peace.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

T. H. TRIPLETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 279) for the relief of T. H. Triplett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, in the adjustment of the accounts of T. H. Triplett, postmaster at Dalton, Ga., to allow him a credit for the sum of $120, the amount of postal funds forwarded by him for deposit and destroyed in transit by fire.

SEC. 2. That in the event that said accounts be finally adjusted prior to the passage of this act, then the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to draw his warrant for said amount in favor of said T. H. Triplett from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. NEAL. The report in that case is short, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. NEAL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 279) for the relief of T. H. Triplett, submit the following report:

It appears that the claimant, as postmaster at Dalton, Ga., on November 3, 1884, forwarded by register $120 postal funds due by him for the month of October, 1884, addressed to the assistant treasurer of the United States, New York; that the same was destroyed, with much other mail matter, including all registered packages, by a wreck of the train near Bristol, Tenn., on the night of November 4, 1884, in which the postal car was consumed by fire. The Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, not being authorized by law to allow claimant credit for the amount lost, required him to make an additional deposit covering the same, which was done July 3, 1885. The above-stated facts are clearly shown by the records of the Post-Office Department. It further appears that the funds lost had been forwarded in strict accordance with the instructions of the Department, and that the loss was in no way due to any fault or negligence of claimant. The bill under consideration provides for the allowance of said sum to claimant.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN LEATHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to John Leathers the sum of $744.90, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on account of said amount having been paid by said John Leathers as a fine for trespassing upon an Indian reservation, for which transgression the President of the United States granted said John Leathers a full and unconditional pardon.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRY FISK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3909) for the relief of Harry Fisk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in adjusting the accounts of Harry Fisk, postmaster at the city of Aurora, in the State of Indiana, as such postmaster, to allow him a credit of $285.50 for postal funds stolen from said Harry Fisk at said post-office on the 23d day of November, 1885, without any negligence or default on the part of the said postmaster.

The committee recommended an amendment, to strike out "85" and insert "83"; so it will read:

Two hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty cents.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois whether it would not be better to insert the words "stolen by burglars at the said post-office on the night of the 23d of September?"

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington.

The bill and the amendments of the committee were read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed on principle to the extension of any patent, and therefore I object.

ESTATE OF EDWIN T. PILKENTON, DECEASED.

Mr. WISE. I ask by unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 2517) for the relief of the estate of Edwin T. Pilkenton, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated by law, to the estate of Edwin T. Pilkenton, deceased, the sum of $2,684.96, or so much thereof as the Secretary shall find was actually lost, in full satisfaction for his claim for that amount of internal-revenue tobacco-stamps which were destroyed by fire in the burning of his tobacco factory on the 3d of May, 1869, in Manchester, Va.

Mr. SPRINGER. Those stamps were burned up before they were put on the market.

Mr. BRUMM. I shall not object to this bill, but I give notice I will object hereafter to calling bills up out of their order on the Calendar.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What committee is that bill from?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. WISE. It was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means at the last Congress.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. R. MARTIN.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 707) for the relief of J. R. Martin.

Mr. BRUMM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it will be necessary for the committee to rise in a few minutes and report the bills back to the House.

The next bill upon the Calendar is one that will consume considerable time, and we will facilitate matters by allowing them to be taken up in this manner by consent.

Mr. BRUMM. I withdraw the demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the account of J. R. Martin, late postmaster at Perry, Kans., with the sum of $125.62, on account of moneys received from the sale of postage-stamps and the rent of boxes, and the further sum of $278.35, on account of moneys received from the sale of money-orders; the above amounts having been stolen from the safe in the post-office at Perry, Kans., on the night of December 22, 1883.

Mr. CURTIN. Is that the next bill on the Calendar?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not.

Mr. CURTIN. Then I object.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. This is simply to pay a poor man a small sum of money.

Mr. CURTIN. A poor man, you say?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIN. Then I withdraw the objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments the bill (H. R. 6661) to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, in which concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate insists upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. CALL as managers on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate returned to the House, as requested, the bill (S. 891) granting a pension to Geriah Collins.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

ELIAS B. MOORE.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 107) for the relief of Elias B. Moore, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $325 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Elias B. Moore, ex-postmaster of Fayetteville, Ark., that being the amount of postal stamps taken possession of by the United States Army in 1862, the value of which has been paid to the Government.

Mr. BEACH. I did not catch the amount that is covered by that bill.

Mr. PEEL. Three hundred and twenty-five dollars is the sum appropriated.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. KLEINER. I insist that the regular order shall be pursued in this respect. There are a number of bills upon the Calendar preceding those which have been called up here; and I shall object to pursuing any other than the regular course.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state that the next bill upon the Calendar will require some two or three hours to dispose of; and there are some small matters which can be acted upon, and which will not lead to much, if any, controversy. As I said before, this will facilitate the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar to get these out of the way.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. This bill does not take a dollar out of the Treasury.

Mr. SPRINGER. If objection is insisted upon, I shall be compelled to move that the committee rise and report the bills already recommended to the House.

Mr. KLEINER. I will withdraw the objection under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object. If the next bill will occupy some time we can go over that by consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. But objection was made to pursuing that course.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Then there is a provision made by which the committee can report that objection to the House.

Mr. ROWELL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We have already laid aside a number of bills, and I would suggest to the Chairman——

Mr. SPRINGER. The bills to which the gentleman refers have been already acted upon.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, we have a number laid aside now; and as it wants only about twenty minutes of 5 o'clock I think we had better not add to the number, but dispose of those already recommended.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 19.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 1628) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company, the Eagle Fire Insurance Company, the City Fire Insurance Company, and the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company, all of New York city; the Western National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, and the Maryland Fire Insurance Company, of Baltimore, Md.;

A bill (H. R. 5554) for the relief of the legal representatives of G. Alexander Ramsay;

A bill (H. R. 1455) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll;

A bill (H. R. 279) for the relief of T. H. Triplett; and

A bill (H. R. 107) for the relief of Elias D. Moore.

The bill (H. R. 707) for the relief of J. R. Martin was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 52, noes 3.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was passed.

A bill (H. R. 3909) for the relief of Harry Fisk was reported with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

A bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers, reported with a favorable recommendation, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK SHUTT.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8297) and that the same be passed. It is a bill to pay a postmaster $193. I make this request because I have to leave the city.

The bill (H. R. 8297) for the relief of Frank Shutt was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Frank Shutt, postmaster at Litchfield Ill., the sum of —— out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for postal funds stolen out of his safe on the 10th day of November, 1885.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendment:

Fill the blank by inserting $193.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTIN MURPHY.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2156); and that the same be now considered.

The bill (H. R. 2156) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Martin Murphy was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the charge of desertion standing against the name of Martin Murphy, late a soldier in Company I, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteers, be, and the same is hereby, removed; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to issue to him, the said Martin Murphy, an honorable discharge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEACH. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I would like to hear the report in this case read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be read, the right to object being reserved.

The report (by Mr. ERMENTROUT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 2156, beg leave to submit the following report:

That having examined the testimony in this case and duly considered the same, they are led to the conclusion that Martin Murphy was a faithful soldier, with a good record, up to the date of leaving the hospital in 1864, which constitutes the charge of desertion. The evidence shows that said Murphy was wounded on the 8th day of May, 1864, at Spottsylvania, Va. He was first sent to Carver Hospital, and afterward to the General Hospital, Albany, N. Y., where he was on the 28th July, when he was taken to his home, 9 miles away. It appears that he left the hospital without leave and never returned; but, in mitigation of his offense, it is shown by his own testimony and that of his brother Michael, and supported by Patrick O'Neil and John Neagle, that at no time prior to the muster-out of his company was he sufficiently recovered from the effects of his wound to do duty. It also appears in evidence that prior to the date of the application to the War Department for a discharge the doctor who attended him in his sickness had died. This testimony is only rebutted by the conclusions of the Surgeon-General, whose opinion was asked "whether on the wound received the case was made out," and who replied that "the gunshot wound was not of sufficient gravity to prevent the soldier from completing his enlistment." The committee are of opinion that a charge which must affect a soldier's standing through life and his name after death should not be permitted to stand simply because a Surgeon-General gives it as his opinion that the healing of a gunshot wound should not require the time claimed by the testimony in this case. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 175) be now considered.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

F. THOMPSON, ALIAS S. E. E. SEELYE.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1172, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill (H. R. 1172) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the charge of desertion borne against the name of Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye, late a private in Company F, Second Michigan Infantry, be, and the same is hereby, removed.

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers of the Government are hereby directed to liquidate and settle the amount of back pay, bounty, and allowances due to said Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye, at the date of his (her) alleged desertion; and thereupon the proper disbursing officers are authorized and directed to pay to said Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye, the amount of back pay, bounty, and allowances so ascertained to be due, the same as if no charge of desertion had ever existed against the said Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to give some explanation of this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Michigan will give an explanation of the bill, or the report can be read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Clerk has not the report. It is very lengthy, covering several pages. I can make a statement in a few minutes that I think will satisfy every gentleman. This is a case of a female soldier that served in Company F of the Second Michigan Infantry for two years. The bill has been reported unanimously by the Military Committee in this as well as in the last Congress. This woman is already on the pension-roll at the rate of $12 a month by a special bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It is a remarkable case. There is no question about the identity of this person. I myself knew personally this Franklin Thompson when in the service.

She was postmaster of the brigade in which I had the honor to serve. [Laughter.] She was orderly of Brig. Gen. O. M. Poe, now colonel upon the Engineer Corps. She did good service both as a soldier in the ranks and as an attendant in the hospital, and after leaving the service, which she was compelled to do by sickness, she wrote the book, then somewhat famous, entitled "Nurse and Spy," and from the proceeds of that book she donated $1,000 to the use of the Sanitary Commission. All these facts are duly established by affidavits.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much will be carried by this bill, if it passes?

Mr. CUTCHEON. There may be, perhaps, two months' pay—simply whatever was due her upon the pay-roll from the time of the last payment she received to the time she left the service in 1863.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DUPLICATE CHECK ON UNITED STATES TREASURER, NEW YORK.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2395, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That J. G. C. Lee, a major and quartermaster in the United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and deliver to J. L. Millspaugh a duplicate check on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York in lieu and in the place of a certain check by the said Lee unto the said Millspaugh issued and delivered upon said assistant treasurer for the sum of $2,679 53, dated the 6th day of November, A. D. 1883, payable to the order of the said Millspaugh, and numbered 124773.

SEC. 2. That the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay said duplicate check upon the presentation thereof: Provided, That the said Millspaugh, or his assigns, shall have first complied with the requirements of the Revised Statutes of the United States and with the regulations of the Treasury Department in reference to the issuance and payment of duplicate checks by the disbursing officers and agents of the United States: And provided further, That said original check has not been previously paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House then, on motion of Mr. SOWDEN (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes), took a recess until half past 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at half past 7 p. m.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole under the special order for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar under the special order of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that members present may be permitted to call up such bills as they desire.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, inserting the letter "B" after the word "Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN P. M'DONALD.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 8151) granting a pension to John P. McDonald.

The bill was read, as follows:

Stone, deceased, late of the Third New York Volunteer Artillery, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Commiteee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, inserting after the word "laws," at the end of the bill, the words "and to pay her the pension allowed by law to the dependent relatives of deceased soldiers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY B. BAKER.

Mr. WEBER. I call up the bill (H. R. 1580) for the relief of Emily B. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily B. Baker, widow of Joel B. Baker, late colonel of the Eighth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. PARKS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7736) to increase the pension of George W. Parks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the rate of pension now allowed to George W. Parks, late a private in Company I, Seventh Regiment Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, under certificate numbered 27071, from the sum of $30 per month to the sum of $50 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out, before the word "dollars," the word "fifty" and substituting "forty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. CUTLER.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 3551) granting a pension to George W. Cutler, late a private in Company B, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George W. Cutler, late a private in Company B, Ninth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers, on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA A. VORHEES.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8066) to pension Martha A. Vorhees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha A. Vorhees, widow of John Vorhees, late of Company A, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteers.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, adding after the word "volunteers," at the end of the bill, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN L. BRUCE.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I call up the bill (S. 788) granting a pension to John L. Bruce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John L. Bruce, late of Company H, Third Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET O'CONNOR.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I call up the bill (H. R. 6278) granting a pension to Margaret O'Connor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret O'Connor, late widow of James Hackett, deceased, late of Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend this bill by striking out, in the fourth and fifth lines, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and by adding at the end of the bill these words:

Subject to the provisions and limitatations of the pension laws: Provided, however, That the subsequent marriage of the said widow with Michael O'Connor shall not be so construed as to prevent the allowance of a pension under this act.

The effect of this amendment is simply to change the position of the words, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and to add a proviso allowing the granting of this pension notwithstanding the subsequent marriage of the widow.

This woman, after trying for nearly twenty years to obtain a pension, married Michael O'Connor, another soldier. I desire that she shall be permitted to draw her pension notwithstanding her remarriage. Her husband is a poor man, who is now afflicted with rheumatism to such an extent as to be confined to his house and unable to perform any manual labor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Does he draw a pension?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. He does not. He has made application to the Pension Office, but has been refused a pension on the ground that he did not connect his physical disability with his military service. I think this is a most just case.

Mr. NEECE. When was this lady married the last time?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. About two years ago.

Mr. NEECE. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The amendment of Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I call up the bill (S. 670) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension now allowed by law to Marie Louise Craven, widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven, from $30 to $50 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this bill comes from the committee with an adverse report.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. GREEN of New Jersey. That is understood.

Mr. NEECE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 670, submit the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of the widow of a commander in the Navy. Your committee are of opinion that the benefit asked should be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy.

Notwithstanding the fact that the naval record of Commander Craven develops great merit, still your committee are constrained to report adversely to the bill, and do so report, with a recommendation that the bill do lie upon the table.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I ask the Clerk to read a petition from officers of the Navy in favor of the passage of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned respectfully ask that the pension now allowed Mrs. Marie Louise Craven, widow of Commander T. A. M. Craven, who lost his life while gallantly leading the fleet into action, under Farragut, at Mobile, in 1864, be increased to $50 per month.

The lapse of time and remembrance of Craven's conspicuous valor at all times, and his last and crowning act of heroism, when his ship was sinking, in renouncing the only chance of saving his own life in order to save that of his pilot, must ever appeal to the hearts of all brave men, and especially to those of your petitioners, some of whom knew him through all the years of his naval career, and were witnesses of his tragic death.

S. P. CARTER, Rear-Admiral.	ED. T. NICHOLS, Rear-Admiral, U. S. N.
JNO. C. FEBIGER, Rear-Admiral.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. NEECE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, rose.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GREEN] will allow me to make a suggestion, I think we can avoid all discussion on this question. I suggest that the Committee of the Whole report this bill to the House with the understanding that the previous question shall be ordered and that the bill be submitted to a vote of the full House. That is what our committee has insisted on in every case of this kind. Wherever we have made an adverse report we have felt it our duty to refer the question to a full House if the passage of the bill was pressed.

Mr. NEECE. That will be satisfactory to me, and with that understanding I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. If the bill can be placed in the position suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], I have no objection to adopting that course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the previous question be ordered upon it and that the vote be taken in the House. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

ROBERT B. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call up the bill (H. R. 7244) granting a pension to Robert B. Kirkpatrick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to place the name of Robert B. Kirkpatrick, late a private in Company E, Eighty-ninth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7244) granting a pension to Robert B. Kirkpatrick, submit the following report:

Claimant was a private in Company E, Eighty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, and was allowed a pension of $4 per month for the loss of sight of right eye. In June, 1881, he applied for an increase, alleging total blindness; a special examination was held in the case, and he was dropped from the rolls on the ground that disease of the eyes existed prior to enlistment.

Dr. S. B. Crews, the regimental surgeon, testifies that about September 26, 1862, claimant was disabled while in the line of duty by an acute attack of conjunctival opthalmia from fatigue, exposure, and sleeping on the ground in the open air; that the inflammation was more severe in the right eye, and resulted in the thickening of the conjunctiva and loss of sight in the right eye. The sight of the left eye was uninjured. This is fully corroborated by the captain of the company and by comrades. The following evidence was submitted to prove prior unsoundness:

John C. Brown testified that it was the understanding that claimant's eyes were weak when he enlisted.

William H. Evans, that "claimant had a cross eye at enlistment; had a staring look, and was an odd-looking fellow out of his eyes."

Samuel A. McIlhaney, that "claimant was naturally of weak eyes before enlistment, had a dull, dead-appearing eye, and was near-sighted; thinks both eyes were affected."

H. N. Wallace, "that his eyes had a dull, glassy appearance at enlistment; one eye was a little drawn; one eye looked less than the other; thinks the surgeon hesitated to take him into service."

Elizabeth McIlhaney, that "claimant was squint-eyed in one eye before enlistment; children used to call him squint-eye; one eye was smaller than the other; he could not see as well out of the small eye; don't think anything ailed the other before enlistment."

Mary Johnson, that "his eyes looked weak, watery, and glassy, and sometimes he could not get around very well."

Norval Johnson, same as above, and that claimant drew his book close to his eyes in school, and that he stumbled after night.

J. F. Pickerell, that the family had sore eyes when claimant was small, and that he was kept from school on that account; saw nothing wrong in one eye after they got well.

Richard Joy and Jane K. Thompson testify that he had a defective eye before enlistment. The foregoing embraces the substance of all evidence offered to prove prior unsoundness. On the other hand, the following evidence is offered:

Dr. J. N. Salisbury, family physician, testifies that he was frequently called to see different members of claimant's father's family, and am certain that not only claimant, but all the family, had good eyes; that when claimant entered the service he had good eyes.

Dr. W. A. Dixon, that he knew claimant prior to enlistment, and knows nothing to the contrary but that his health was good.

Capt. J. H. Jolly, that the trouble with his eyes was caused by taking cold by exposure while in the service, and that had it not been for such exposure and hardship in the service his eyes would yet be good.

William A. Dixon, M. D., that claimant went to school to affiant in 1859, and that he saw him occasionally up to the time of his enlistment, and knew nothing to be the matter with his eyes.

Margaret J. Baird, that she saw nothing wrong with his eyes prior to enlistment; that they were never inflamed.

Addison Pickerell, that he knew claimant from childhood; saw him often for ten years before enlistment; did not see him the year prior; his eyes were good, so far as affiant knew, prior to the war.

Thomas J. Pickerell, that he had known claimant ever since he was a small boy; saw him often for five years before he enlisted; he never knew or heard of his eyes being sore prior to enlistment. Claimant served two years and a half after losing one eye, and was mustered out with his company. The evidence of his condition since the war proves conclusively to your committee that the right of the left eye has been lost through sympathy with the right.

The only question in the case is whether the loss of sight of the right eye was the result of his military service. Accepting all the adverse testimony without qualification it seems to your committee to prove only that claimant was near-sighted, had one cross-eye, and when a child had the disease so common in the West known as "sore eyes."

To assume that soldier's present disability is the result of any disease existing prior to enlistment seems to your committee a forced and unreasonable assumption, unwarranted by the evidence submitted, and only to be reached by utterly ignoring the strong and positive evidence of the family physician, his former teacher, the captain of his company, and the regimental surgeon. Such testimony seems never to be ignored when it is against a claimant. After a full and thorough examination of the case, carefully weighing the evidence submitted, your committee conclude that the soldier ought to receive a pension for the loss of his eyes. In addition it ought to be added that the evidence shows that claimant has always been a man of good morals and strictly temperate; that he is now totally blind, with a family dependent upon him; and that he is in part supported by the county is also shown.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask some gentleman of the committee to state what pension this bill will give the claimant.

Mr. MORRILL. If the man proves that he is totally blind he will receive a pension of $72 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This bill simply puts him on the list of pensioners——

Mr. MORRILL. It simply puts him on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws; and he loses his pension for all these years, for which, it seems to me, he ought to have had it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He will simply receive a pension according to the rating of the Pension Office?

Mr. MORRILL. That is all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH M. CARROLL.

Mr. RANDALL. I call up the bill (H. R. 8602) granting a pension to Sarah M. Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah M. Carroll, a nurse in the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12.50 per month from the passage of this act.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report (by Mr. PINDAR), as follows:

First, the verified petition of Sarah M. Carroll, in her own behalf, and second, letters from Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, General P. H. Sheridan, United States Army, and Surgeons Hammond and Billings, all testifying in the strongest manner to valuable services rendered by the petitioner as a nurse to the soldiers during the late war of the rebellion.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Miss Sarah Mary Carroll, resident of New York city, prays that Congress will grant her a pension, in consideration of her past services as hospital nurse, in charge of officers and soldiers of both armies, in military and civil hospitals, during the late war.

Your memorialist respectfully represents that she devoted herself to hospital service in the city of Washington, D. C., during the years 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1864, and that during these several years she was a member of the community of the Sisters of Charity, and known as "Sister Mary Carroll."

The Providence Hospital, in Washington, was established and conducted by Sister Mary Carroll. Although a civil hospital, many officers and soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy were admitted and taken care of by her there, as can be attested by many present residents of the capital.

Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles, after the loss of his leg in the battle of Gettysburg, although not an inmate of the hospital, was daily visited by Sister Mary Carroll, and he will vouch for the care bestowed on many of his Third Corps officers, who were in the hospitals under Miss Carroll's ministration.

Besides the government of the Providence Hospital (civil) Miss Carroll was appointed to the charge of the corps of sisters employed in the nursing department of the Cliffburn General Hospital (military). The number of sick and wounded in that hospital at the time she took charge of the nursing in May, 1862, was over one thousand. The sufferers were from the ranks of both armies. There being no adequate quarters in 1862 for sick or wounded prisoners the stables of the Sixth Cavalry were rudely fitted up for temporary hospital use; Dr. John S. Billings, now in charge of the Anatomical Museum, Washington, asked the Sisters of Charity to take charge of the nursing, and Miss Carroll was appointed by her superiors to take charge as afore stated.

In these rude and uncomfortable quarters Miss Carroll assisted the surgeons in the care and comfort of those suffering soldiers. If desired, your memorialist will produce ample testimony to prove the impartiality of the care and attention bestowed on the Federal and confederate soldier. As this appeal is made to representatives of a reunited country the fact should be remembered.

Miss Carroll's loyalty was never questioned, and proof of the confidence reposed in her may be judged from the fact that the Secretary of War (Mr. Stanton) intrusted prisoners of war, ill with typhoid fever, who were confined in the Old Capitol Prison, to her care and custody, in the Providence Hospital in 1861, because at that early stage of the war there was not suitable accommodations for the sick in the Old Capitol Prison. Miss Carroll was also permitted to enter the Old Capitol and visit the sick there at will later on during the war, and throughout the prison she was called the "Flag of Truce." Mr. Wood was superintendent, and Dr. Greenleaf surgeon in charge of the prison; if they are living they can verify this statement.

When the Sixth Cavalry barracks (Cliffburn General Hospital) was abandoned for the more commodious quarters of the Lincoln General Hospital, Miss Carroll was assigned to the Eckington General Hospital. Dr. Storrer was the surgeon in charge; there and at Providence Hospital at the same time she did duty until ordered to New Orleans, in January, 1865, to take charge of the Hotel Dieu (civil hospital), where she labored until the end of the epidemic of 1867. Lieut. Gen. P. H. Sheridan will vouch for the value of her services during the cholera visitation in 1866 and the riots and yellow fever scourge of the year following.

At last, while nursing the worst cases, Miss Carroll was stricken by the fever and has never fully recovered from its pernicious effects. She was recalled North, in the hope of benefit to her health, but very little good resulted. Her naturally strong constitution was greatly weakened by her previous laborious hospital duties and has never since recovered its wonted vigor; gradually her health became so miserable that she was incapable of doing full duty as a Sister of Charity, and she would not consent to become a burden on the community she loved so well, for which reason principally she resigned. Up to the present time Miss Carroll has supported herself by her own exertions and the kindness of old friends, but her health is rapidly failing; hemorrhages of the lungs often prostrate her, and she has no greater dread than that of becoming a burden on relatives or friends.

As a last resort, to prevent such a contingency, she, who aided so many others in the past, now petitions for aid herself from the Government she has always honored and endeavored to serve as much as was in her humble power.

Miss Carroll does not make this appeal, based on her position as a Sister of Charity; she places her petition on the actual value of her services to the suffering soldiers in the capacity of a skilled nurse and Christian woman, as also on the consequent loss of health from her labors in hospital service. Miss Carroll is fifty years of hge now.

SARAH MARY CARROLL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (interrupting the reading). That is enough of the report unless other gentlemen desire to have its reading completed. It appears that she rendered the service without pay and rendered meritorious services.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN S. WILLIAMS.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to take up the bill (S. 789) granting a pension to John S. Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Williams, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The claimant, John S. Williams, was a private in Company K, Twelfth Ohio Volunteers, and of Company C, Twenty-third Ohio Volunteers. He applied to the Pension Office for a pension, but his claim was rejected by the Department on the ground "that there is no record of alleged injury of left shoulder, and that the claimant is unable to furnish the testimony of his surgeon or officers, or other satisfactory evidence of incurrence in the service and line of duty."

The existence of the injury and disability at the present time is admitted. Treatment for two months by the regimental surgeon for injury is shown as a matter of record. The claimant himself and several comrades testify to his receiving the injury, as alleged, in the line of duty, and the continuance of the disability from then until the present time is also shown by comrades and other apparently reliable testimony. The claimant shows that the doctors, surgeons, and officers who knew him are dead, and that would seem to be a satisfactory reason for his failure to procure their testimony. We are unable to see any reason for the rejection of this claim. The examining surgeon finds the existence of the disability, and certifies that in his belief from his examination it was received in the service and in line of duty. There is no suggestion of fraud or anything to justify the suggestion if it were made.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH W. RHINEHALT.

Mr. ELLSBERRY. I ask to call up the bill (S. 1235) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Rhinehalt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the amount of pension allowed Joseph W. Rhinehalt, late of Company D, Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to the sum of $20 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

Mr. DOCKERY. At the request of one or two gentlemen I ask that the reports be read in each case.

Mr. MORRILL. Can they not be printed in the RECORD? That will save the time.

The CHAIRMAN. When the reading of the reports is called for they will be read. The gentleman from Missouri asks for the reading of the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

That it appears from the records in this case that claimant was a private in Company D, Thirty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was mustered into the United States service July 31, 1861. It also appears that he was wounded in action several times, and was in every particular a good soldier. It appears that claimant now receives a pension of $5 per month for disabilities resulting from wounds received in action, and he now asks for an increase of pension because of total deafness, resulting from disabilities received in battle September 1, 1864.

Declaration for increase of pension on ground of deafness filed May 1, 1880.

Claim rejected on the ground that deafness existed prior to enlistment.

Statement of claimant that he was not deaf when he enlisted, and did not become deaf until the time given, is substantiated by the fact that he was accepted by the mustering officer; also by the affidavits of his captain, his first lieutenant, and several comrades, and by the sworn testimony of a large number of witnesses who had known him from boyhood, and knew that he was not deaf at enlistment and was deaf when he was discharged. It is further substantiated by certificate of Examining Surgeon A. V. Patterson, who found him unable to hear.

Taking into consideration the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage as amended, to wit, by striking out all the bill after the word "infantry," in the sixth line, and inserting the following: "to the sum of $20 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. H. BUCK.

Mr. GROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 3118) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Buck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of William H. H. Buck, late of Company G, First Vermont Cavalry, upon the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month, instead of $6 per month, as provided by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARVEY COBURN.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask to take up the bill (H. R. 5091) to restore the name of Harvey Coburn to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harvey Coburn, late of Company K, Second Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery (One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers).

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN RYAN.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUTTIT], who is temporarily absent this evening, I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John Ryan, late first lieutenant of Company F, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay to him a pension of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid to him, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LOUTTIT) is as follows:

The soldier in this case, John Ryan, enlisted April 1, 1861, in Company I, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as a private. He was discharged July 30, 1861, and enlisted as sergeant in Company H, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, August 6, 1861; promoted to second lieutenant November 8, 1862, and first lieutenant May 1, 1863; received a contused wound over the liver at the battle of Fredericksburg, December, 1862; was captured at the battle of Gettysburg, July, 1863; was treated while a prisoner of war for dysentery, contracted scurvy, and was paroled, March 7, 1864. He was discharged July 9, 1864, on account of physical disabilities.

It appears from the records of the War Department that the wound affected his stomach to such a degree as to compel him to reject a greater part of his food, even while in the service.

In 1878 he presented his claim to the Pension Office, and was pensioned at the rate of $8.50 per month from result of scurvy.

It is evident from the testimony presented in this case that the soldier has been a constant sufferer ever since his discharge, both from this and several other disabilities, all of which were evidently contracted in the service.

Your committee, therefore, are clearly of the opinion that his services and sufferings while in the Army, that the degree of his disability since discharge as shown by the testimony offered, would warrant the increase of his pension. Therefore your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALEXANDER FALCONER.

Mr. FULLER. I call up the bill (H. R. 6443) granting a pension to Alexander Falconer.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander Falconer, late a sergeant of Company E, First United States Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AUGUSTUS FIELD STEVENS.

Mr. KING. On behalf of Mr. NEECE, who was compelled to leave the House on account of pressing public business, I ask to call up the bill (S. 1726) granting a pension to Augustus Field Stevens; which he says is a good bill, and ask its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augustus Field Stevens, late a private in Company L, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES E. O'SHEA.

Mr. SYMES. I call up the bill (S. 327) granting a pension to James E. O'Shea.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James E. O'Shea, late of Company F, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BETHUREN.

Mr. THOMPSON. I call up the bill (S. 1124) granting a pension to William Bethuren.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Bethuren, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Kansas Cavalry.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report read in this case.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

That the claimant enlisted as a private in Company I, Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, August 1, 1863, and was discharged June 25, 1865; that he made application for pension June 6, 1878, alleging as the basis of his claim—

"That at Fort Smith, Ark., April, 1864, took measles, and having been detailed from regiment was compelled to lay outdoors. When they came to take him to the hospital he was so stiff could not walk on account of taking cold."

The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground that the "alleged disability was not incident to the service and line of duty." The claimant testifies:

"That after the attack of measles and results therefrom he had a weakness of knees and back which has continued ever since; prevents him from lifting any heavy weight or from walking fast; that if he stoops over, he falls forward; that he walks in a staggering manner; strangers often think he is drunk; that he was doing duty with his regiment at the time he was taken with measles; that by weakness of back and knees he meant what the physicians call Saint Vitus's dance."

Claimant files affidavit that the physician who attended his family prior to enlistment is dead.

Eliza Stout, W. T. Appier, Wellington Burchnell, E. F. Broughton, and Joseph Rickabaugh all testify to claimant's soundness prior to enlistment.

Lieut. Joseph Rickabaugh testifies that he was on detached duty most of the time while in the service:

"That for months after claimant's enlistment he was a sound, able-bodied man; frequently saw him; appeared well until he saw him in the hospital at Fort Smith, Ark., in the fall of 1864; is not certain of the year, but thinks it correct as above; that claimant was absent without leave, if at all, before May 26, 1864, and that he was sick with measles after that time; knows by records in his possession that he was at Fort Smith, Ark., May 26, 1864, where he saw claimant well and on duty; that frequently thereafter he saw claimant on duty up to the time he was taken sick with the measles."

W. T. Appier, comrade, testifies:

That claimant was sound before entering the service, and continued so until about April, 1864, when he took the measles while on duty at Fort Smith, Ark., and was sent to the hospital at that place. Before that he had no trouble with his limbs, but was active and stout.

Surgeon Chenowith, Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, states that his recollection is—

"That claimant was sent to the regimental hospital at Fort Smith in spring of 1864 with measles, from which he was returned early in June, 1864, and was treated in regimental hospital for debility until late in summer or early fall, occasionally doing light duty. Does not positively remember his condition; thinks his eyes were sore and vision bad. He was weak, and remained so until regiment was mustered out."

J. B. McKinley, first sergeant, states claimant suffered in June, 1864, from an affection of spine caused by measles. William F. Curry, comrade, testifies to same condition as Sergeant McKinley. Dr. J. W. Trewathy testifies—

"That he has known claimant sixteen years (1865 to 1881); been his physician most of that time. When I was first called he had chorea (Saint Vitus's dance); said disability has continued ever since. Disabled at least one-half; never less than one-half, and has grown upon him; believes measles in service the exciting cause."

Eliza Stout testifies to continuance of claimant's disability since service from Saint Vitus's dance.

Dr. Hibben, examining surgeon, March 26, 1881, in his report to the Commissioner of Pensions, says:

"The disability is probably permanent. The disability is locomotio ataxia. His gait is precipitate—staggering—legs hither and thither vaguely, his heels coming down at each step with a stamp; eyes partially closed; hearing impaired. Has a younger brother similarly diseased; knows nothing further as to family predisposition. Rates him one-half total, or $4 per month."

The Emporia board of examining surgeons, under date of February 7, 1883, find substantially as above, and rate him total third grade, or $15 per month.

The Emporia board made an additional examination November 12, 1884. and rated for resulting disability second-grade rating.

Your committee are of the opinion the claimant was an able-bodied man when he entered the service, and that he contracted measles therein; that he was a good soldier, and rendered fair service; that he is now a pauper, unable to perform manual labor, an inmate of an almshouse, and that it is their opinion that the spirit of the law covers this class of claimants, aud they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALFRED J. HILL.

Mr. HAYNES. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8651) increasing the penson of Alfred J. Hill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Alfred J. Hill, late adjutant of the Third New Hampshire Regiment, at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the sum now paid him.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. BUTLER.

Mr. PINDAR. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8601) granting a pension to James H. Butler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Butler, formerly captain of Company F, Thirty-second New York Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read in part, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James H. Butler for pension, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted and was mustered into service May 31, 1861. He was discharged June 9, 1863. His declaration was filed October 21, 1884, and was rejected upon the ground that there is no record of the disability claimed at the War Department, and that the testimony furnished was not satisfactory, showing origin of or existence in service or at discharge.

The committee report that they deem the evidence submitted sufficient, proving that the disability originated in the service in line of duty; that it existed at time of discharge, and that claimant has ever since and still suffers therefrom, and is entitled to a pension therefor, as stated by said examining board as aforesaid. We therefore report the accompanying bill, to accompany this report.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RACHEL FLEMING CELLAR.

Mr. BRADY. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 895) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rachel Fleming Cellar, widow of George Cellar, late a private in Captain Norton's company of Ohio militia, war of 1812.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BRADY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 895) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar, submit the following report:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 895) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar, have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The following is the report, by Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, made April 14, 1886 (S. R. 530), namely:

"On October 24, 1881, the claimant made a declaration alleging that she was the widow of George Cellar, who had served as a private in Captain Norton's company of militia in the war of 1812 for fourteen days, and by reason of said service received a land warrant some time between the years 1850 and 1855, and refers to proof on file to procure said warrant.

"There is proof that the claimant's husband was engaged some two weeks in the erection of a block house within or near the Indian boundary, and although previous to the declaration of war, was immediately preceding and obviously preparatory to it.

"The claimant is worthy, advanced in years, and in straitened circumstances.

"The committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. HATTIE A. BURNETT.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2022) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Hattie A. Burnett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Hattie A. Burnett, widow of Maj. Gen. Ward B. Burnett, on the pension-roll, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2022) granting an increase of pension to Mrs Hattie A. Burnett, submit the following report:

Your committee adopt the report of the Senate committee, which is annexed, and is as follows:

[Senate report No. 415, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant is the widow of Maj. Gen. Ward B. Burnett. The following statement of the military and civil record of this distinguished soldier has been furnished your committee:

General Ward B. Burnett died June 24, 1884, at Washington city, aged seventy-four.

This distinguished veteran of six wars was appointed by President Jackson a cadet at West Point in 1828, and he was graduated in 1832; brevetted second lieutenant Second Artillery, July 1, 1834; ordered to report to Colonel Mahan, professor of engineers (was furloughed); reported to chief engineer, Major Douglass, assistant upon the surveys and plans and estimates which resulted in the adoption of his plans for the Croton water-works, now indispensable to New York city, and a monument to his genius. When relieved from the academy, was ordered to report for duty to Maj. Hartman Bache, United States Topographical Engineers, at Philadelphia, Pa., on harbors and light-houses; then, as principal engineer to Col. H. Long, Topographical Engineer, upon surveys conducted by himself and Major Yarl, of the Royal Engineers, to determine the routes of railways connecting the Atlantic with the Canadas. Engaged in action of Lacha-Hatcha against the Seminole Indians. He fought in the Black Hawk war in that year on the ground near where Chicago now stands, before a single house was built in that city, and as captain of cadets in the Black Hawk war, the command, in seeking the enemies of his country, met one more formidable in the Asiatic cholera, which attacked more than one-half of General Scott's army, spreading consternation and death among them.

As the surgeon-general and his assistants were among the dead and dying, the officers were obliged to take care of the sick, and young Burnett, fearless of consequences, was among the most active in providing for their comfort and safety. Reported to Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott during the nullification difficulties at Charleston, S. C., acted quartermaster for a time, was staff officer to General Clinch, staff officer to General Bankhead at the battle of the Coves of the Withlacoochee. He organized two regiments and tendered his services to the President for the Mormon war. In 1842 and 1843 he organized a brigade and offered his services to the President when war was anticipated with England over the Oregon boundary line; he was the brigadier-general, and the brigade was kept together at his own expense. He attended the artillery school, Metz, France.

After leaving the Florida and Creek wars, was engineer, with Colonel Abert, chief of Topographical Engineers, on harbors, in 1837; became resident engineer in State of Illinois and Michigan canal upon that great and important work; was made major-general of militia; founded the Light Guard of New York State; captain of Tompkins Blues when a mere lad; was major and brigade inspector.

In 1846, two regiments of his brigade having been accepted by Governor Wright, he was ordered to report with his regiments (the first troops raised for the Mexican war) to Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott for duty in the Mexican war, where his actions were brilliant. He was engaged in that war in the siege of Vera Cruz, Molino del Rey, Buena Vista, Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Monterey, and Churubusco—battles unsurpassed in thrilling interest and the glory of military achievement in the annals of the world, and the bravest deeds on record.

General Burnett's regimental flag was the first one planted on the elevated causeway opposite Portalis in the battle of Churubusco, and his command captured Santa Anna and planted his flag at Cerro Gordo, the headquarters of General Santa Anna; after the troops had captured the position held by the whole Mexican line he returned the first American flag that was planted upon the castle at Chapultepec, even before the Mexican standard was hauled down from the plaza of the castle, and the brave Mexican general surrendered his troops and the key to the enemy's position to General Burnett's command, as shown of him in the great painting now hanging in the governor's room, city hall, New York, and the national flag presented to him by Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott at the national palace in the City of Mexico, and a beautiful one from the ladies of Mexico, made by their own hands, and three other ones presented by the State and city of New York for their gallant conduct through the war. General Burnett presented the flags of his country to his command at the island of Lobos, Mexico, in 1846, upon their knees repeating this oath from his lips: "No enemy shall capture these colors while our lives are spared to defend them."

Welcomed home to New York by the first division of New York regiments, under Major-General Sandford, by two hundred thousand people. Broadway was literally packed with people, who turned out to receive the returning troops, and flowers strewn in their pathway. Public receptions tendered him by the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Troy, Albany, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and others; then in the zenith of his glory, he was met everywhere by enthusiastic crowds. The young ladies from the seminaries, the school children forming processions, throwing and showering blossoms beneath the horse's feet in honor of the gallant rider.

General Burnett was a warm personal friend of President Andrew Jackson, of Henry Clay, Abraham Lincoln, and Daniel Webster. In the wars he had many wounds, and the Mexican, where he was severely wounded by a shot through his body, hip, and shoulder dislocated by the fall of his horse—twice shot under him; from his wounds his jaws were closed with lock-jaw (tetanus) for forty-five days. His coffin was made, but the gallant Major Twiggs was buried in it. He was promoted general by President Polk, September, 1847, by an act of Congress; his commission signed by Governor Seymour; he commanded a brigade.

For General Burnett's heroic services to his country he was tendered a resolution of thanks by Congress, the State of New York, and other States, and honors in private life showered upon him by his countrymen.

In 1861 he organized troops for the war of the rebellion, although a great cripple, in the assembly rooms, Broadway, New York city, at his own expense, consolidating regiments as general United States Army, under appointment by the governor and commission from the Government by President Lincoln; headquarters were at Metropolitan Hotel. He rendered valuable services to the city during the New York riots, and by his efforts saved the United States mint when he had command of the city; was wounded again and sent to the United States Ladies' Hospital. He organized several commands in New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and Pennsylvania for services in the field during the war. From exposure consequent upon these labors he became a martyr to inflammatory rheumatism and neuralgia.

General Burnett rendered valuable services to his country as United States topographical engineer. In 1849 President Polk offered to make him commissioner to run the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; but being upon crutches, he was made chief engineer for the construction of the navy-yard dry-dock, which he completed in 1852. Thence in 1855 he was in charge of the New York dry-dock and the construction of the workshops in the New York navy-yard.

He made the plans of the Brooklyn water-works, which were adopted and inestimable value to the City of Churches, and a lasting honor to his name. In 1857 he was made chief engineer of Norfolk navy-yard and Portsmouth water-works, which involved his survey of Lakes Drummond; in Richmond and Maryland, made plans for tunneling the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia.

He was made surveyor-general of Kansas and Nebraska, which included Colorado, Montana, and two other Territories, because from ill health he was unable to accept the appointment offered him by President Buchanan as minister to Turkey.

General Burnett at the time of his death was the oldest living graduate who became general United States Army in the Mexican war. Of the fruits of his valor was a territory conquered by the United States in 1848, almost one quarter in extent of its then existing area, which is now peopled by 1,500,000 souls, and which, from its mines alone, could pay our national debt. He won by his bravery the highest honors awarded to the immortal Jackson; in brief, the highest honors accorded to Lafayette by the empire city of the Union. Relics of great value were showered upon him; many came from foreigners.

Two massive gold medals from the city and State of New York; another of great intrinsic value from the officers and soldiers of his division and command. The sword and the old hickory cane of President Jackson, newly mounted and ornamented with jewels and a massive gold eagle; another one from Mrs. Jackson, heavily mounted. A beautiful, gold-mounted sword, with diamonds, was presented to him by the Light Guard of New York for the gallant acts of his youth and saving the life of Cadet Clark from drowning, and six others at different times. A grand reception was given to him by the mayor and common council and citizens at the governor's room, city hall, New York, at the theaters, and public places. A great dinner was given to him by the citizens of Philadelphia, and also dinners and receptions in several other cities. A grand banquet was given to him and his officers at Troy, where the ladies from the seminaries showered them with flowers.

General Burnett never was in a battle that was lost, or skirmish; he had great perseverance and fortitude, and many are the incidents of his generous nature which can be related. He drew around him a multitude of friends. In the parlor he was as gentle as a lady. He was calm, cool, and brave in the field. It was often said of him he never knew what fear was, ever manly and hopeful through the many afflictions and hardships he was called to endure. His civil and military career placed him as one of the most distinguished men in American history, and was a most accomplished gentleman, possessed of more than ordinary intelligence of mind and of refined and artistic tastes. His mind had been cultivated by reading, studying, and reflection, and his memory was wonderful even up to the hour of his death, and the extent and accuracy of his information was remarkable. He was sociable, refined, and generous to a fault. He revered and loved his Redeemer, and was confirmed early in life in the Episcopal Church. A hero, a gentleman, a kind father, a devoted husband; for many years an invalid, but cheered by a faithful, brave-hearted wife, which was the one bright spot in the closing years of a once brilliant career.

General Burnett was honored as the bravest officer in the United States, and by his countrymen he was awarded the "President Jackson gold box" (and bequeathed to his widow), which bears the following inscription:

Bequeathed

by Major-General Andrew Jackson "to that patriot, of New York city, who (should our happy country not be blessed with peace) should be adjudged by his countrymen to have been the most distinguished in defense of his country and our country's rights."

Awarded

under that bequest, by the general voice of his countrymen, to Brigadier-General Ward B. Burnett, commanding the New York troops in the late war with Mexico.

Major-General Burnett's achievements have made every American citizen his debtor. He declined the Democratic nomination for governor of New York—was provisional governor of New Mexico.

There should be no scant gratitude to the widow of "the bravest of the brave." His death was a source of national grief; his body lay in state in the governor's room, city hall, New York; the flags all placed at half-mast; thousands of citizens viewed the remains and followed him to his grave. Letters of condolence from the President, Congressmen, governors, military, and Navy were sent to his afflicted widow and family.

General Burnett was placed on the pension-roll by the Department at $30 per month, which amount was increased at different times to $72. Upon his death, in 1878, his widow made application to be allowed that amount, but was only given $30. The matter was taken to the Court of Claims, which sustained the decision of the Department, and upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the decision of the lower court was affirmed.

Your committee call attention to the language of Mr. Justice Harlan, who delivered the opinion of the court, which is as follows:

"By an act of Congress of March 3, 1879, the Secretary of the Interior was directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Ward B. Burnett, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension then received by him (20 Stat., 665, ch. 290). The subsequent act of June 16, 1880, provides that all soldiers then receiving a pension of $50 per month, under the provisions of the act of June 18, 1874, entitled "An act to increase the pension of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled" (18 Stat., 78, ch. 298), shall receive, in lieu of all pensions then paid to them by the United States, the sum of $72 per month; those whose pensions were thus increased from $50 to $72 per month to receive the difference between those sums monthly from June 17, 1878, to the date when that act took effect. (21 Stat., 281, ch. 236.)

"On the 17th of July, 1882, General Burnett received from the Department of the Interior a certificate showing that he was entitled to a pension "for gunshot wounds through left leg and rheumatism" at the rate of $30 per month, to commence on the 1st of August, 1848, and $31.25 per month from June 4, 1872, and $50 per month from June 4, 1874, and $72 per month from June 17, 1878.

"By an act approved July 25, 1882, it is provided that no person then receiving, or who should thereafter receive, a pension under a special act shall receive, in addition thereto, a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension which such person is entitled to receive under the general law. (22 Stat., 176 ch. 349.)

"General Burnett died on June 24, 1884, from the effect of wounds received in the war with Mexico. The appellant, his widow, claims the same pension—$72 per month, that her husband was receiving at his death. The Interior Department granted her a certificate for a pension at the rate of only $30 per month, to continue from June 24, 1884, during her widowhood. Her claim for a larger pension having been denied, the matter was referred by the Department to the Court of Claims. The claimant, in her petition in that court, asked for judgment against the United States for $210, that being the difference between $30 per month and $72 per month from the date of her husband's death to the commencement of this action. A demurrer by the Government to the petition having been sustained, the case has been brought to this court.

"The only question presented by the parties for our consideration is whether, under existing statutes, the widow of General Burnett is entitled to the same pension that he was receiving at his death.

"Section 4692 of the Revised Statutes provides that "every person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 4693, who has been, since the 4th day of March, 1861, or who is hereafter disabled under the conditions therein stated, shall * * * be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive for a total disability, or a permanent specific disability, such pension as is hereafter provided in such cases, and for an inferior disability, except in cases of permanent specific disability, for which the rate of pension is expressly provided, an amount proportionate to that provided for total disability, and such pension shall commence as hereinafter provided and continue during the existence of the disability." (17 Stat., 566; 18 Id., 61; 19 Id., 403.)

"Section 4693 specifies who shall be beneficiaries under the preceding section, among whom is "any officer of the Army, including regulars, volunteers, or militia, * * * disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty." (17 Stat., 566, 567; 19 Id., 403.)

"Section 4695 provides that "the pension for total disability shall be * * * for lieutenant-colonels and officers of higher rank in the military service * * * $30 per month." (17 Stat., 567; 19 Id., 264.) Other sections fix the amount of pensions in cases of disabilities known as permanent specific disability and inferior disability.

"It is then provided, by section 4702, that "if any person embraced within the provisions of sections 4692 and 4693 has died since the 4th day of March, 1861, or hereafter dies by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which, under the conditions and limitations of such sections, would have entitled him to an invalid pension had he been disabled, his widow * * * shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, to continue to the widow during her widowhood," &c. (Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat., page 569, chapter 234, section 8.)

"It would seem to be too clear for discussion that the construction which the court placed upon these statutory provisions is correct. It is not to be doubted that the words "total disability" in the pension laws has a technical signification which can not be disregarded. And when the statute fixes $30 per month as the pension, in case of total disability, of an officer of the rank of General Burnett, and declares that his widow shall receive the same pension as her husband would have received had he been "totally disabled," there is no room left for a construction that would give her a pension in excess of that amount. If it is supposed that the law operates unjustly against the officers and soldiers who became "totally disabled" in the service, or that an unreasonable distinction is made between different kinds of disability, the remedy is with another department of the Government. The courts must give effect to the intention of Congress as manifested by the statute. They can not make, but can only declare the law.

"The judgment is affirmed."

Mrs. Burnett is therefore now in receipt of only $30 per month. Her husband died in consequence of his services, having been for a considerable time in a condition of entire helplessness, and her health was seriously impaired by the constant care necessary for his comfort. She is now dependent upon her pension.

The bill as introduced provides for a pension at the rate of $100 per month, but your committee do not feel warranted in establishing such a precedent at this time, or in making this case an exception to the cases of widows of many other distinguished officers of the Army and Navy who have been allowed $50 per month. We therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendments:

In the title strike out the words "General Ward B." and insert "Hattie A."

In the fourth line strike out the letter "H." and insert "Hattie."

In the sixth line strike out the words "her late husband's invalid pension of one hundred" and insert "a pension at the rate of fifty."

Strike out in the seventh, eighth, and ninth lines all after the word "receiving," in the seventh line.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[When the report had been read in part,

Mr. PERKINS said: I would suggest that the committee is satisfied as to the merit of this claim from the portion of the report which has been read. I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to hear it all.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the whole report be read.

The Clerk continued, and completed the reading of the report as printed above.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. I want to object long enough to vote against this bill.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATHERINE E. COFFIN.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1150) granting a pension to Catherine E. Coffin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine E. Coffin, widow of Charles P. Coffin, late a corporal of Company A, Nineteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the following amendment:

In line 5, after the word "the," insert "provisions and."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 1150, submit the following report:

Catharine E. Coffin is widow of Charles P. Coffin, late private in Company A, Nineteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. He enlisted August 10, 1861, and was discharged for disability contracted in service and line of duty October 4, 1862. He died by suicide June 29, 1874.

At the date of his death he was a pensioner at the rate of $8 per month, on account of injury to back and kidneys. His widow filed her application for pension June 14, 1879, alleging that the soldier's death by suicide was attributable to the despondent condition of mind brought on by his disabilities. The claim was rejected on the ground that soldier's death was not attributable to his disabilities for which pensioned.

The evidence in the case shows that he suffered from his disabilities from his discharge to his death, and that he was frequently laid by from work, but he continued to labor off and on down until about the last year of his life, when he gave up.

There is no evidence of insanity, but the evidence discloses that he became in his last years despondent, silent, and depressed, while his natural disposition was cheerful.

George D. Whittier, Arthur M. Ordway, Jos. Newell, D. L. Ambrose, M. D., and Charles H. Emery, neighbors of the decedent, testify—

"That they were well acquainted with Charles P. Coffin for years before the late war and down to the time of his death, which they believe was caused by disabilities brought on by exposure in the war. The last six months of his life he was unable to work, consequently became very low spirited, and at times mentally as well as physically disabled. His case was, in affiant's opinions, a complicated case, which no medical skill could reach. Affiants believe that when he committed suicide he must have been laboring under mental aberration resulting from his low physical condition. His suicide was accomplished by passing out to the rear of the barn and cutting his throat with a razor."

A. M. Ordway and George D. Whitter testify:

"He complained of suffering very much with his back and kidneys, for which he doctored, but without securing any particular benefit. Eight or ten weeks before his death mentally and physically he was very feeble, and his death might have been expected at any time."

Orrin Warren, M. D., and late surgeon of the Third Massachusetts Infantry, testifies:

"I was professionally called to see the late Charles B. Coffin in 1871; found him suffering from disease of kidneys accompanied with pain in small of the back, with tenderness over the region of the kidneys. I examined his urine at the time, but kept no notes thereof and can not say what the result of the examination was. I found him very despondent at the time of my attendance, and although I did not attend him regularly after that, I saw him every week or two until May 30 (Decoration Day), 1874; at that time he with others were invited to join in the services of the day but was not able to march with the post, and rode in a carriage furnished for the invalid and wounded; he expressed himself as hardly in a condition to ride even. I do not remember to have seen him after that."

Your committee, from the evidence presented, have no doubt but the soldier's disabilities made life miserable to him, and finally weakened him so, physically and mentally, that in a fit of despondency he determined to end his sufferings for once and all.

His widow is seventy-three years of age and poor. Your committee are of opinion that she should be placed on the roll the few remaining days of her life, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, as amended in line 5, by adding after the word "the" the words "provisions and," so it will read, "provisions and limitations of."

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCES MOSHER.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7965) for the relief of Frances Mosher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Frances Mosher, widow of Hiram A. Mosher, late a private in Company F, Tenth Minnesota Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7965) for the relief of Frances Mosher, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Hiram A. Mosher, sergeant of Company F, Tenth Regiment Minnesota Infantry, who was wounded in battle before Nashville December 16, 1864.

Claimant's husband at the time of his death, November 13, 1884, was receiving a pension of $18 per month for loss of left arm, amputated just below the shoulder. Widow's claim was rejected because the cause of death—disease of the heart or apoplexy—not due to loss of the arm, and not otherwise shown to be due to the service.

Dr. H. J. Young testifies as follows;

"I treated and prescribed for said Mosher as physician and surgeon many times and often during the seventeen years prior to his death, which occurred on the 13th day of November, 1884. The disease for which I treated said pensioner was neuralgia in the stump of the left arm, axilla, and heart."

On the 13th day of November, 1884, soldier while walking in the street of Waseca, dropped dead of disease, the result of disability as above.

Dr. M. V. Hunt testifies—

"That he was personally acquainted with the claimant's late husband, Hiram A. Mosher, for more than thirteen years previous to his death, and that he treated him (said Mosher) at different times for neuralgia of the stump of left arm and a neuralgic condition of the heart and pericardium. At no time since I have known him had he been free from pain in the stump and all the nerves comprising the axillary plexus. The morning of soldier's death he complained of much pain in the stump and axilla. He fell dead on the street while talking to me, on the morning of November, 13, 1884.

"At the post-mortem examination the day following we found thickening of the neurilemma, adhesion of nerves and an enlarged condition of all blood-vessels; the anterior circumflex artery thickened; calcareous deposits, inducing necessarily imperfect circulation, and, by subsequent inflammation, all nerves and blood-vessels by thickening and extensive adhesions; increased overaction of nerves and blood-vessels of pericardium and the heart, i. e., the coronal arteries; the adhesions and thickening of all the structures of the heart, blood-vessels, nerves, and a partial ossification of the valves, with evidence of an inflammation heretofore existing, involving the pericardim and endocardium; the walls, valves, and substances of the heart indicated calcareous matter in all the tissues. Such a condition of all the structures could not have been induced under other circumstances than that of the loss of the arm, extensive inflammation, suppuration, and gangrene, hospital fever, pneumonia, and a lingering convalescence."

From the medical testimony in this case your committee are of the opinion that soldier's death can be attributed to the loss of left arm, the result of gunshot wound received while in battle.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH E. HENRY.

Mr. LYMAN. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1348) granting a pension to Sarah E. Henry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Henry, widow of George Henry, late of Company E, Second United States Cavalry, and general service, United States Army.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1348) granting a pension to Sarah E. Henry, having examined the same, concur in the Senate report hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The committee, having fully considered this bill and examined into the claim of Mrs. Henry, have reached the following conclusions:

George Henry, late of Company E, Second United States Cavalry, appears to have served two terms of enlistment in the Army, one of five years and one of three years. The application of the widow, Mrs. Sarah E. Henry, for a pension was rejected upon the ground that the said soldier died of pneumonia, which disease was not contracted during his service in the Army. The affidavit of the physician in attendance upon Henry is to the effect that he had been treated for rheumatism for a number of years, and that he died of that disease and pneumonia, and that, in the opinion of said physician, the former disease was contracted while in the line of duty in the Army. The committee desire, in closing this report, to append the following communications from Asst. Adj. Gen. Samuel Breck and General E. D. Townsend, late Adjutant-General United States Army, and make them a part thereof:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE,
Omaha, Nebr., March 10, 1886.

SIR: At the request of Franklin J. Henry, son of George Henry, deceased, I take the liberty of addressing you this letter on behalf of the widow of George Henry (Sarah E. Henry), to whom a bill now before the Senate (S. 1348) proposes to grant a pension.

George Henry was enlisted in February, 1858, in Company E, Second Dragoons (now known as Second Cavalry), and served until December, 1862, when he was discharged by order of Major-General Burnside at Falmouth, Va. The same month, being well recommended, he was again enlisted in the general service, United States Army, for clerical duty in the Adjutant-General's Office in Washington. On the latter duty he was under me.

While he was able to do his work in the office well his health seemed delicate and very gradually grew more so until I left the Adjutant-General's Office, in 1870, he having in the mean time been discharged as a soldier (in April, 1864) to accept a civilian clerkship. I understood and believed at the time of his enlistment in the Adjutant-General's Office, in 1862, that his health was broken by his service with his regiment in the Army, and certainly during all the time I knew him no one could have been a more zealous, faithful public servant. His habits, so far as I could know and see, were unexceptionable.

I hope something can be done for his widow.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L BRECK,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOHN I. MITCHELL, United States Senator,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, Washington, D. C.

I know that Mr. George Henry, once a soldier in the Second Regiment of Dragoons, was a valuable clerk in the Adjutant-General's Office under the immediate orders of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Samuel Breck, Assistant Adjutant-General. I can not say anything positive concerning his ill-health, or the cause of it, as he did not often come under my observation. He was one of those faithful old soldiers who, having been disabled from doing active duty in the field, served the Government no less faithfully, zealously, and efficiently in a sphere where he would be less exposed to vicissitudes of climate, hard fare, &c. The pay of men in that class was insufficient to enable them to make any provision for their families when they were no longer here to support them.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Brig. Gen., U. S. Army, retired (late Adjutant-General).

CITY OF WASHINGTON, March 15, 1886.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM S. RAY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8335) granting a pension to William S. Ray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William S. Ray, late a private in Company G, Third Regiment North Carolina Infantry Volunteers, to date from the day his name was dropped therefrom.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4628) granting a pension to William S. Ray, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

William S. Ray was duly enlisted as a private in Company G, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry. He was placed on the pension-rolls on account of wounds received which totally disabled him, receiving at the time $18 per month. He was dropped from the rolls the 26th of May, 1877, on a report from G. H. Ragsdale, special agent from Pension Department, on a charge that he was not in the line of duty when wounded. The affidavits of comrades show that the soldier came through the lines from his regiment into Madison County, North Carolina, on the special duty of piloting recruits for the Federal service, which he often did, and was fired upon by rebel scouts while so employed, receiving his severe wound at the time. This testimony is corroborated by that of soldiers in the confederate army, who were eye-witnesses to the whole affair.

The committee think that the testimony is sufficient to restore the soldier, and we recommend the passage of a substitute for the original bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN R. SMITH.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen R. Smith, late a private in Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, to commence from the passage of this act.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith, having examined the same, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to have some explanation of this case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does that adopt the Senate report? If it does, let the Senate report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability for gunshot wound of right lung received at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 27, 1864. He was pensioned in 1867 for gunshot wound of right lung, and has received various rates, ranging from $8 to $24 per month, since June 12, 1865, the date of his discharge, and the latter is the present rate of allowance, having been advanced to that sum under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883.

He subsequently made application for increase, and on June 17, 1884, was examined by the board of examining surgeons at Washington, D. C., who reported adversely to his application for increase, solely because he was receiving the maximum rate allowed by the pension law, and conclude their report as follows: "His disability is equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot."

The medical examinations held in this case have uniformly found "that the disability is permanent; that the ball still remains in his body; that he suffers much from dyspepsia and pain of right lung; that he can not perform any labor requiring the active use of his arms; that the wound yet remains open and discharges pus freely; that the wound is still an open suppurating ulcer; every symptom of consumption; the right arm partially paralyzed; general debility exists."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much does the bill propose to give?

Mr. MORRILL. It proposes to give $30 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not see for what reason an unusually large pension is given in this case. It does not appear that this claimant has any one dependent upon him or that he has to employ a nurse.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know anything of the circumstances of this man, but I think from the facts presented he is certainly disabled from any labor, and with a running sore he can not live long. This bill simply places him on the pension-roll the same as if totally disabled from manual labor.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is he now drawing a pension?

Mr. MORRILL. He is drawing a pension of $24. This increases it $6 on account of disability. The report says he is totally disabled for manual labor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The report says his disability is equivalent to the loss of one hand or one foot. That is not total disability by a good deal. That entitles him to $24 a month and he gets that now. I have a case similar to this in my district where a very worthy man suffers from a running sore the result of a wound, and he gets $24. I have talked with the Pension Committee about his case, but they have declined to recommend any increase of pension. I have had the case fairly presented, but they think that he is getting enough now. I object to the allowance in this bill because the report states that the man's disability is equivalent only to the loss of one hand or one foot, and he is now getting the pension allowed for that disability.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I shall ask for a quorum unless the bill is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about this case except from the evidence contained in the papers that I have examined. The evidence shows that this man suffers from a running sore, the result of being shot through the body, and that one of his hands is paralyzed, and it seems to me that $30 a month is a very small allowance for such disability. I question very much, however, whether it is a favor to him to pension him at $30 in this way, because where the pension is fixed by a special act I understand that the pensioner can not get the increase which he would otherwise be entitled to for increase of disability.

A MEMBER. This man will probably get $50 within a year.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well; I shall be glad that he gets it, if he is entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JOHNSON] has charge of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I called up the bill by request, but I really do not know anything about the facts in the case.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

W. D. HAVELY.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I call up House bill 7616, for the relief of W. D. Havely.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. D. Havely, father of Robert M. Havely, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment of West Virginia Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7616) for the relief of W. D. Havely, submit the following report:

The files in this case show that W. D. Havely is the father of Robert M. Havely, a private in Company C, Fifteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers, who fell mortally wounded at the battle of Cloyd's Mountain, May 9, 1864, and died from the effects of said wound twelve days later. The mother of the soldier died in 1845. He left neither widow nor child. The father is now old and nearly helpless. He has a small farm, which the evidence shows is mortgaged for its full value.

J. Boiconet and S. R. Tuttle testify:

"We have been acquainted with W. D. Havely for ten years, and know that he has been afflicted with double hernia, and on account thereof has not been able to perform any manual labor, but has done some work during the time; and we further state that said W. D. Havely is not worth anything financially. He has a small farm, but it is encumbered with mortgages for all it is worth."

William H. Warner and Orios J. Lent testify that they are intimately acquainted with the claimant; that he is unable to earn a living by reason of advanced age and feebleness of body, and the further fact that he has a double hernia; that his property is not more than sufficient to pay his indebtedness; that he is in every respect a man needing and deserving of aid from the Government, having been deprived of the service of his two sons by reason of their service in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion. The Pension Department can afford him no relief because he can not furnish the required evidence that his son was contributing to his support at the time of his death and that he was then dependent upon him, though claimant states under oath that such was the fact. Congress has invariably granted relief in cases of this kind where it is shown that the claimant lost a son in the service and is now destitute and unable to support himself. Upon this point there can be no question in this case, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to object to this bill, for the case is doubtless a very worthy one, but I want to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I would be glad if the chairman would inform us whether or no it is the intention of that committee to take any step at this session of Congress to report and press to its passage a general bill taking care of a large class of cases throughout the country that stand on all fours with this case. As I understand this it is one of those cases in which it is out of the power of the party seeking relief to furnish proof that he was dependent upon the son at the time of his death, though he is in a dependent condition now.

Mr. MORRILL. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I would say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] early in this session introduced a bill for that purpose, which was promptly reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and is now on the Calendar. I can further assure the gentleman from Illinois that if the Committee on Invalid Pensions were allowed to pass their bills they would pass a good many that are now on the Calendar, but which they have no hope of passing through this House.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think that unanimous consent could be obtained in the House to take up a general bill for this class of cases? If the question was fairly presented I do not believe that anybody on either side of the House would object. There are a great many old people throughout the length and breadth of the land who lost sons in the service and who are dependent in their old age—cases in which the son was in fact dependent upon them at the time he went into the Army; but he went into the service and was killed, or lost his health and died, and now the parents are left without that support which other parents in their old age receive from their children. I do hope that the committee will make an effort to bring such a bill before the House, and I believe that unanimous consent can be obtained for its consideration.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. THOMAS.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I call up Senate bill (S. 1357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Thomas. The bill is accompanied by a report, which I ask to have read for the information of the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Thomas, widow of Samuel H. Thomas, late of Company D, Sixtieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Thomas, having considered the same, concur in the Senate printed report, hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Thomas, beg leave to report back the same with recommendation that it do pass.

Samuel H. Thomas enlisted and was mustered as a private soldier of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the 17th day of February, 1864, and was mustered out with his company, July 28, 1865. He died December 31, 1879, very unexpectedly, and his family physician, who reached him a short time after his death, gave it as his opinion that the cause thereof was heart disease.

On the 6th day of January, 1870, the said Thomas was married to Sarah A. Warne, by whom he had five children born in wedlock, the oldest of whom will reach the age of sixteen years next December. The widow is but little able to perform the arduous duty of earning a maintenance for these five children.

In January, 1880, the widow made application for a pension, alleging that her husband, the said Samuel H. Thomas, had contracted heart disease and chronic diarrhea in the Army, &c.; but the claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground "that the fatal disease which terminated in [the] soldier's death can not be accepted as a result of his Army service."

A mass of testimony contained in sworn affidavits, the notes of examinations of witnesses under oath, &c., has been sent to the committee, upon request of the chairman, from the Pension Office, from which it appears that the said Thomas was, at the time of his enlistment, a hale, hearty, healthy man, and that he came out of the service with broken health, a victim to both heart disease and chronic diarrhea; that he suffered from these complaints, more or less acutely at frequent intervals up to the time of his death.

Your committee are satisfied that the cause of his death originated during his service in the Army, and that the widow is entitled to the relief proposed by the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN S. BRIDGES.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I call up Senate bill S. 1169 granting a pension to John S. Bridges.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Bridges, late of Company C, One hundred and twentieth Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1169, beg leave to submit the following report:

That they have examined Senate bill No. 1169, and the evidence in relation thereto; that they hereby adopt Senate report thereon, which report is in words and figures as follows:

"Claimant enlisted as a private in Company C, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, on the 14th day of August, 1862, and was discharged at Camp Butler, Illinois, September 15, 1865, by reason of expiration of term of service. In his original declaration he claims to have contracted heart disease in the line of his duty, namely, on a march from Memphis, Tenn., to Guntown, Miss., during which he was overheated. Officers and comrades corroborate this statement by affidavit. Medical testimony is furnished to show that he suffered from heart disease since the time of his discharge; that he is disqualified for severe manual labor, and that he was a sound man at the time of his enlistment. There is no record testimony bearing upon this case other than that which shows his presence on duty and his honorable discharge. The claimant testifies that he was treated by the original surgeon, Dr. Whitnall, who is dead, and that he is unable to procure further medical evidence.

"Dr. John R. Clark testifies that the claimant was a sound and able-bodied man at the time of his enlistment, and that he was his family physician for five years prior to that event.

"In view of the fact that the soldier was a healthy man when he went into the service, and that he came out of it broken in health and disqualified to perform manual labor, and that his disability increases with time, your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH ROMISER.

Mr. McCOMAS. I call up House bill No. 1059, granting a pension to Joseph Romiser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph Romiser, late of Capt. Frank Mason's company of Maryland volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, to be paid a pension from ——.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to amend by striking out the words "to be paid a pension from," which are unnecessary; also by striking out, in line 6, the word "restrictions" and substituting the word "provisions;" which I believe is the usual expression.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1059) granting a pension to Joseph Romiser, respectfully report:

The facts of this case, which are completely substantiated, are briefly as follows:

The claimant was a member of Capt. Frank Mason's company of volunteers, of Frostburg, Alleghany County, Maryland. This company of volunteers was not mustered into either the United States or State service. On the 19th of June, 1861, claimant was with said company when they were ordered to proceed to Cumberland, Md., to repel a threatened attack of the confederate forces. Upon the arrival of the company in Cumberland the men were ordered to uncap their muskets. While doing this duty a musket in the hands of Alpheus Beall was accidentally discharged, and a minie-ball, with which it was charged, struck claimant in the left side of the neck, coming out near the left eye, entirely destroying the sight of his eye, the hearing of his left ear, and the "hinge of his jaws."

Dr. George B. Tunfenburg testifies that he was one of the surgeons who professionally attended claimant. He found that a minie-ball had entered at the back part of the neck, passed along on the outside of the skull, under the ear, breaking the jaw at its ramus, and making its exit through the molar bone below and to the outer side of the eye of the same side. The wound was a dangerous one, but after a long sickness he recovered, but has lost the hearing of the injured ear and the sight of the eye. There is considerable deformity of the face caused by exfoliation of the bone.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau because "claimant was not in the military service of the United States." The Committee on Invalid Pensions have heretofore uniformly declined to recommend the granting of a pension to soldiers not enrolled in the service of the United States or acting under the immediate orders of an officer in the United States service. They are fully satisfied that this rule is the proper one and that it should be rigidly adhered to; otherwise it will be seen that the door would be opened wide to a great number of claimants of whom it would be impossible to obtain any official record.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that Senate bill No. 160 be taken up.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I understand there was an arrangement made between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], who reported the bill, that it should lie over with Senate bill No. 489 until next week.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the request. I did not understand that such an agreement had been made.

J. H. THORNBURY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I call up the bill (S. 1770) granting a pension to J. H. Thornbury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. H. Thornbury, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1770) granting a pension to Joseph H. Thornbury, submit the following report:

The records in this case show that after the soldier enlisted in Company D, Eighth Iowa Cavalry, but before he was mustered, while on guard and in the line of duty, he received a wound in his hand by the accidental discharge of his gun, which rendered him unfit for duty, and caused the mustering officer to reject him when the company was mustered into service. He afterward enlisted in the Veteran Reserve Corps and served until the close of the war. His application for pension was rejected on the ground that he was not regularly in the United States service when the wound was received. Technically this may be true, but it is not strictly so, for the soldier had enlisted and was held to be mustered whenever the mustering officer was ready to perform that duty.

Equity demands that this soldier should be treated as if the formal act of mustering in had been performed, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY SHIVELY.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call up the bill (S. 1257) granting a pension to Henry Shively.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Shively, late first lieutenant of Company D, Twelfth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1257) granting a pension to Henry A. Shively, submit the following report:

Your committee, after an examination of this case, have adopted the Senate report as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill:

The claimant, Lieut. Henry Shively, late of Company D, Twelfth Kansas Volunteers, enlisted September 25, 1862, and was discharged August 6, 1864. He made application for pension March 24, 1881, alleging in his declaration—

"That in January, 1863, while in command of a squad in pursuit of guerrillas in Missouri, he incurred enlargement of testicles and scrotum, caused by his horse throwing him forward on the horn of his saddle; also contracted pains in his shoulder and neck."

The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground of "no record of the alleged injury and the inability to prove origin in the service and line of duty." The claimant testifies—

"That soon after the organization of the regiment he was detailed as scout, with a posse of men (mounted) to watch the Missouri border, and while in the discharge of duty he was thrown on the horn of his saddle, injuring his testicles, which were much swollen for some time, and the enlargement has never entirely disappeared. It was several days before they reached camp, and, having gotten better, said nothing about it to any one. He continued to perform post duty on the border, and as a result of the injury and the fatigue and exposure, riding day and night over the prairie, his manhood gave way, and he became generally debilitated until his discharge. Never was in the hospital. Upon his arrival home (November 1, 1864), his right testicle began to grow worse, and was treated by Dr. Hower. Afterward the left one did the same, and he was treated by Dr. Merrill."

Thomas R. Wilkinson, C. L. Robbins, and Alfred Johnson testify to soundness prior to enlistment.

Captain Ashby testifies—

"That for the first six or seven months of service no officer of the regiment performed more arduous duty than the claimant; that he was often detailed and served as a scout. In the winter of 1862 and 1863 his health began to fail, and he resigned in the summer of 1864. Claimant was an able-bodied man prior to his enlistment."

W. L. Seville testifies—

"That in October, 1864, he accompanied claimant home from Fort Smith, Ark., to Fort Scott, Kans., and that claimant was sick and grew worse."

Dr. Lindsay, regimental surgeon, testifies—

"That he treated claimant at Fort Scott, Kans., in December, 1863, and at Fort Smith in July, 1864, for liver disease and general debility, and in July, 1864, recommended his discharge for said diseases. From July to October he was weak and debilitated, and had a yellow or jaundiced appearance. Did not see him again until 1881, when he finds his testicle enlarged and tender."

R. H. Kirkland, comrade, testifies—

"That in January, 1863, in Cass County, Missouri, while scouting, claimant was disabled by being thrown on the horn of his saddle, hurting his testicles, and causing a permanent enlargement of the same."

Dr. Hewer testifies to treatment for enlargement of the testicle.

Dr. Merrill, his family physician, testifies to treatment for spinal disease and disease of testicle since 1869. Orrin R. Hoag and John N. Powell testify to continuous disability from 1865 to 1881.

Dr. J. T. Paxmere, examining surgeon at Ottawa, Kans., under date of January 10, 1883, reports:

"Claimant has hypertrophy of both testicles, the left fully as large as a goose egg, the right about the size of a hen egg. Has to wear bandages to support the weight, and enable him to get around. Rates his disability at third grade or $12 per month, and certifies that in his belief, from his examination, it was received in the service and in line of duty."

Your committee think the claim should be allowed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. W. GOODING.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call up the bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to J. W. Gooding.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. W. Gooding, late a private in John Berin's company of Arkansas Rangers in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will explain this case.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We may as well have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to J. W. Gooding, submit the following report:

Claimant was a member of Capt. John W. Blivens's company of Arkansas Rangers, enlisting February 23, 1864, and in May, 1867, filed a declaration for pension, alleging that in an engagement with the enemy near Kingston, Ark., March, 1864, his hand was penetrated by the ramrod of his gun, from which wound amputation of the right hand became necessary. The organization to which this claimant belonged was never regularly mustered into the United States service, but it appears from the evidence that they were under the direct orders of a United States Army officer, and were engaged in active service.

Col. Thomas J. Hunt testifies:

"I was well acquainted with Capt. J. W. Blivens, who commanded a company of Arkansas Rangers. They were organized and mustered into service as Arkansas Rangers, and not into the United States service, by order of Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding department. Said company rendered valuable service to the United States Government by doing constant scouting duty in the counties of Madison, Carroll, Newton, Boone, Franklin, and Johnson, reporting to Col. La Rue Harrison, colonel commanding at Fayetteville."

Capt. J. W. Blivens testifies:

"On the 22d of March, 1861, I being in command of the company near Kingston, Ark., the company was engaged in a fight with rebels. The said James W. Gooding, while in the line of his duty, being engaged in the fight, while loading his gun, plunged the end of his ramrod through the palm of his right hand, from which wound his hand and arm inflamed to such an extent as to render amputation necessary to save his life; that the above facts are derived from my personal knowledge of the service and cause of the disability."

Captain Blivens further testifies that he was at the time acting under orders from Col. La Rue Harrison, commanding the First Arkansas Volunteers. Himself and company were sworn into the United States service as independent rangers, were furnished arms, ammunition, and rations by the United States Government.

Bennett K. Henderson, lieutenant of the company, testifies to the same facts as Captain Blivens.

Captain Blivens further testifies that his company were discharged from duty June 11, 1865, by order of the War Department. In 1868 the Commissioner of Pensions rejected the case on the ground that there was no record evidence. It could hardly be expected that a company of that kind would keep a careful record of all their casualties. It seems to be clearly established that the company were acting under the orders of a military officer of the United States; that the wound was received while in battle, and that he lost his right hand from the effects of it a few days after. It would seem that this soldier was entitled to a pension from the time he received his disability, and it seems to have been from no neglect on his part to make the proper application that he has not received it. To place him on the pension-roll now seems but partial justice, but your committee, believing that he is justly entitled to this recognition, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether this man was regularly mustered into the United States service by a regular mustering officer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will state to the gentleman that I called this bill up by request. The man is not a citizen of my district, and personally I know nothing about the case. But the report is clear and conclusive on all these points; and I have faith in its veracity. It states that this man enlisted in a company of Arkansas rangers, who were organized and mustered into service by order of Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding the department; that while serving under Federal officers, though not regularly mustered into the Federal service, this man received a wound in the hand which rendered amputation necessary, the wound being caused by the ramrod penetrating his hand while he was in the act of loading his gun. This is the statement of the report. To my mind the case is a meritorious one.

Mr. BRADY. There are a number of precedents of this kind. A bill of the same character has been passed this evening. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPOONER. What does the gentleman from Arkansas mean by stating that this man was mustered in, but not regularly?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have stated that I know nothing of this case except what is in the report.

Mr. SPOONER. I was unable to hear the whole of the report as read.

Mr. BRADY. A similar bill was passed only two or three minutes ago.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I certainly would not ask for the passage of this bill if I did not think the case meritorious. I have not a particle of personal interest in the case. The report states:

The organization to which this claimant belonged was never regularly mustered into the United States service, but it appears from the evidence that they were under the direct orders of a United States Army officer, and were engaged in active service.

Col. Thomas J. Hunt testifies:

"I was well acquainted with Capt. J. W. Blivens, who commanded a company of Arkansas rangers. They were organized and mustered into service as Arkansas rangers, and not into the United States service, by order of Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding department."

That is the statement of the report. Gentlemen must judge for themselves whether the case presented is entitled to their support. The report goes on further to state the nature of the injury suffered by this man, which I think members understand.

Mr. SOWDEN. It seems to me the passage of this bill would be a new departure and would establish a dangerous precedent. If the party seeking to be pensioned was not regularly mustered into the service, a new field may be opened in respect to pensions. There are hundreds, nay thousands, of men who were in the service, but not regularly mustered, and who might, if we establish a precedent of this kind, come in and claim pensions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This man was in service under a Federal commander and received a wound in battle. It seems to me that should be sufficient to entitle him to a pension.

Mr. SOWDEN. But it appears this wound was inflicted by himself. Was that in the line of duty.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If it be true this is a new departure, and if there be no precedent to warrant it, I do not think the bill should be allowed to pass.

Mr. MORRILL. In answer to my friend from Louisiana, I will say that up to the 4th of July, 1874, if this man had completed his case he would have been granted a pension at the Pension Office. There was a limitation which we tried the other day to repeal but without success, and the bill is now upon the Calendar. The invariable rule has been to allow cases of this character to pass.

The gentleman asked whether this man was regularly mustered into the service. He was regularly mustered in as a militiaman from the State of Arkansas, and was under the command of a United States officer, as clearly appears by the evidence on file in this case.

As I have already stated, if he had completed his case before 1874 he would have received a pension from the Pension Office. The law was passed in 1873 and was only for one year. Perhaps he did not know of the limitation expiring in 1874; at all events, he failed to complete his case in time. We have passed a great number of just such cases. It is no new departure.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRIGGS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had instructed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Senate bill 670, to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven, is an adverse report, and is reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the understanding the vote on it shall be taken in a full House.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. In accordance with the understanding, I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill, as I understand that will carry the bill over to be voted on to-morrow morning in a full House.

The previous question was ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 22, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to correct the Journal, Mr. Speaker. Upon the bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Ways and Means, in relation to the mackerel fisheries, I voted in the negative upon the second call. I am recorded as not having voted upon that question.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal was then approved.

FEES OF WITNESSES AND JURORS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the First Comptroller of the Treasury relative to the resolution for an appropriation to pay the fees of witnesses and jurors for 1883 and prior years, reported on May 20 adversely by the Committee on Appropriations; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONSOLIDATION OF CUSTOMS DISTRICTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, referring to his letter of the 12th instant in reply to a resolution in regard to customs districts, and recommending the discontinuance of additional districts; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

POSTMASTERS' ACCOUNTS FOR STATIONERY.

The SPEAKLR also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a statement of amounts disallowed postmasters for stationery for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, on account of inadequate appropriations, and recommending legislation authorizing their allowance; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, with amendments of the Senate, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, with the request on the part of the Senate for a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the request for a committee of conference will be agreed to, and the Chair will during the day appoint the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, with amendments of the Senate; which (on motion of Mr. HOLMAN) was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the Senate amendments, ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, under the rule, the bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GERIAH COLLINS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 891) granting a pension to Geriah Collins; returned from the Senate by request of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the bill be allowed to lie over informally for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ARNOT, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WAIT, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HEWITT, until Tuesday next, in consequence of sickness.

To Mr. CONGER, until Tuesday next.

To Mr. DIBBLE, for ten days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. RIGGS to print further remarks on the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 91) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes."

Perhaps it is proper for me to state, in making this request, that the same or a similar request was submitted to the House a day or two ago, but the consideration was then objected to. I am now authorized, however, to state that the objection is not insisted upon.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes," approved August 2, 1882, which requires that "within one year from the date of the acceptance of this act by said company, as herein provided, the said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map showing the definite location of its line of road and telegraph as designated in the first section of this act, and shall complete the said road and telegraph through the lands of said nations within the further period of one year," shall be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which said road and telegraph line is required to be completed shall be extended two years from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. BEACH. I do not think that this bill will accomplish the objects which its promoters have in view. The act of 1882 provided that this Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company should have the right to cross this Indian reservation, provided that a map of definite location of the road should be filed within one year, and provided further that the road itself should be built within one year. By section 10 of that act there was a provision that in case this particular road should not build its line within the year, then the privileges of the act should inure to the Chicaco, Texas and some other railroad corporation, and they had under that tenth section a year within which to build the road, and if they did not build it within that time, then the privileges of the act should devolve upon such corporation as the President of the United States might approve.

The report from the committee is silent upon this question. I would like to know from the gentleman from Texas whether the privileges of this act have not devolved by operation of the tenth section upon some other corporation?

Mr. WELLBORN. The whole thing has practically expired. This bill simply extends the time within which the road is required to be completed two years from the passage of the act.

Mr. BEACH. I think the gentleman from Texas does not seize the point I was endeavoring to make. Under the tenth section of the act of 1882 these privileges, unless this railroad should construct its line within a year, are vested in another corporation.

Mr. WELLBORN. Yes, sir; and the time that other corporation had for completing the road has also expired.

Mr. BEACH. If that other corporation did not avail itself of the privileges of the act the tenth section says the provisions shall apply to any other company that shall have first obtained the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. WELLBORN. That section will be made virtually inoperative by the passage of this amendment.

Mr. BEACH. I do not think it will have that effect unless that tenth section is repealed.

Mr. PERKINS. The President of the United States did not make the designation.

Mr. WELLBORN. That is true; no designation has ever been made by the President, and hence the passage of this bill will extend the privileges of the original act to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad two years.

Mr. BEACH. I do not think the gentleman from Texas will gain what he wants unless he repeals that tenth section.

Mr. WELLBORN. This bill is a Senate bill; and those who are promoting this enterprise and interested in it are satisfied with the amendment. We are simply wanting the operation of the original act extended two years.

Mr. BEACH. The reason I made the objection was because it did not seem right to cut some other company out of the rights to which it was entitled under the tenth section of that act.

Mr. BLAND. This is a road that is being extended in the South and Southwest, and is a very important road.

Mr. BEACH. I have no objection to the merits of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELLBORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I beg leave to state that the Committee on Appropriations will ask the House next Monday to take up for consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I believe this day is set apart by special order for the consideration of the free-ship bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana demand the special order?

Mr. HOLMAN. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], does not seem to be present, and I will not insist upon the regular order at this moment.

Mr. COX. It was my desire to call up this morning the privileged report on the Warder case; but I have been informed the special order will prevent that. I desire the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that by an order of the House made on the 23d of February each Saturday thereafter during the session, until further order, was set apart for general debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, no other business to be transacted. Subsequently the House has made several special orders for Saturdays, which, so far as they go, are exceptions to this general order. Among them is the order made for to-day for the consideration of what is known as the free-ship bill. If that bill is not taken up the general order made on the 23d of February, setting aside Saturdays for general debate, will be in force, and no other business can be transacted except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I desire to give notice that I will call this matter up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. DUNN. I supposed the committees would be called for reports and also that the hour for the consideration of bills was excepted in the order for the consideration of the free-ship bill. That is the reason I was not in my place earlier. I shall ask to take up the special order.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Last evening a bill to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander Craven was ordered to a third reading, and the previous question was ordered on its passage. I understand under the previous ruling of the Chair that can not come up to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not under the order of the House for Saturdays, but it will come up on Monday morning. It can not come up now because this day is specially dedicated to other matters.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, by unanimous consent, reported back the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Does the bill make an appropriation or require an appropriation to be made? If so, it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REAGAN. I think not. The bill does not require an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Does not the bill create a commission?

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment does not.

The SPEAKER. But the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. The bill does.

The SPEAKER. Then it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendment, ordered to be printed.

LAFAYETTE FOWLER.

Mr. CABELL. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8676) for the relief of Lafayette Fowler, and that the same be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to demand the special order.

Mr. DUNN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia on the understanding that the bill he calls up will not lead to debate.

The bill (H. R. 8676) for the relief of Lafayette Fowler was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $130.50, being the amount of revenue tax imposed by law upon Lafayette Fowler, of Carroll County, Virginia, for the manufacture, &c., of 145 gallons of distilled spirits which were destroyed by fire in the store-house of said Fowler, in said county, on the 22d day of February, 1886, without fault or negligence on his part, and the interest and penalties imposed for the non-payment of said tax be, and the same are hereby, released and remitted to him; and if, prior to the passage of this act, the whole or any part of said tax, interest, or penalties shall have been paid by him, then the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to refund and repay to the said Lafayette Fowler the sum or sums of money so paid by him by reason of the liabilities hereinbefore mentioned.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAVID W. LOW.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Private Calendar and consider at this time the bill (H. R. 5651) for the relief of David W. Low.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to David W. Low, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $303.90, to indemnify him for loss of postal funds sustained by him and caused by robbery of the post-office in October, 1883.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I would like to know why this claim could not have been filed in the Post-Office Department and allowed under the general law upon this subject passed a year or two ago.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. In reply to that, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this is a claim for loss of postal funds, and under the law passed two years ago postal funds are not payable by the Postmaster-General. The law limits the payment to stamps and envelopes and postal property of that kind. Moneys have to be passed upon and allowed by Congress.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is correct, I believe. I remember that in the general discussion upon the question in this House it was thought that it would be very dangerous indeed to incorporate into the general law the privilege or right on the part of the Post-Office authorities to adjudicate claims for losses covering postal funds; and if it was a dangerous thing to be injected into a general statute I do not see why it is not equally dangerous to put it in a special act.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have to say, simply, that if losses of this kind which occur through burglary, or from other causes for which the postmaster is not at all responsible, can not be considered or allowed by Congress, then the postmaster in such a case is in a bad predicament. I have to say, further, that a bill is now pending before this House to qualify the law, and I submit that the law ought to be amended, and that its amendment may be well justified by considerations of public policy. This, however, is a case of loss by burglary, as will appear clearly from the report, if the gentleman desires to have it read, and the Postmaster-General says he knows no reason why the claim should not be allowed, except that he can not allow it under the law.

Mr. BEACH. Let me ask my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] whether we had not better lay aside these special bills and amend the general law. When we passed the general law in the Forty-seventh Congress we thought we had avoided the necessity for this special legislation, and I think it would be a good thing now to stop considering these bills, of which we have passed a good many within the last few days, and amend the general law so as to take in all these cases.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FISHWAYS AT THE GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That can be done to-day only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 17, 1886.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the House what progress, if any, has been made in the erection of the fishways directed to be placed at the Great Falls of the Potomac under the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," and the act amendatory of said act, approved February 26, 1885; also what amount of the sum appropriated for said fishways has been expended and how much is reported available for their erection, and whether the sum heretofore appropriated is sufficient for such erection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the order made on the 7th day of April, from which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] will see that the bill is made a special order for the whole of this day, not excepting the morning hour, but that on the 25th and 26th of this month the morning hour and the hour for the consideration of bills are excepted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 22d day of May next, be set apart for general debate on House bill 7219, commonly known as the "free-ship bill," and that the following Tuesday and Wednesday, the 25th and 26th days of May, after the morning hours for the call of committees for reports and for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the further consideration and disposal of said bill, the previous question on which, and all amendments thereto then pending, shall be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock on said last-named day.

CAPT. HOLLISTER E. GOODWIN.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider at this time the bill (H. R. 7773) for the relief of Capt. Hollister E. Goodwin and his sureties.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That David S. Biggs and the heirs, next of kin, and personal representatives of Joseph Biggs be, and the same hereby are, released and discharged from any and all liability or payment of money upon a bond executed in the year 1863 by Hollister E. Goodwin as principal and David S. Biggs and Joseph Biggs as sureties, conditioned as required by law for the performance by the said Hollister E. Goodwin of the duties of assistant quartermaster of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on War Claims, inserting the word "three" after the word "sixty," in the seventh line of the bill, so as to make the clause read, "A bond executed in the year 1863," &c., was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT STRACHAN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan, and that the House now proceed to consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, try, and determine, according to the rules and practice now in force in said court, any claim for damage which Robert Strachan may have against the District of Columbia by reason of the said District of Columbia, or its agents, servants, or employés having changed the grade of New Hampshire avenue between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, and having turned the water upon the premises of the said Strachan and into his dwelling-house, and by means of an embankment having been erected and continued thereon for a long time, in said District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the judgment rendered in said action, if any shall be rendered for the claimant, shall be paid in the same manner as judgments are paid in said court as now provided by law; and one-half of the amount of said judgment shall be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the Government hereby waives all rights under the statute of limitations as to this claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of this bill and proceeding to consider it in the House at this time?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to inquire whether the bill has been referred to any committee of the House?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Committee on Claims has made a unanimous report in favor of this bill. It has already passed the Senate. It simply allows a poor man to go to the Court of Claims and establish his claim if he can.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let us hear the report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be read, subject to the right to object afterward to the consideration of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for the relief of Robert Strachan and others was pending before the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress. A report was made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, a copy of which may be found in the appendix to this report, recommending the passage of said bill for the relief of Robert Strachan only, but the bill was not reached by the Senate, and in view of the fact that it could not be so reached, it was sent to the Court of Claims under the first clause of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes. This clause gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction over "all claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress." The Court of Claims, however, upon the motion of the Attorney-General to dismiss, held that they could not take jurisdiction of the claim, for the reason that, in the opinion of the court, that clause does not give to the separate Houses of Congress the power to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims against the District of Columbia, but only upon claims against the United States.

In the present Congress bills for the relief of Robert Strachan were presented in both Houses, giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction and waiving any right under the statute of limitations. The Senate bill has passed that body, and is now before this committee.

Your committee therefore recommend that the House bill lie upon the table, and they report back the Senate bill with a recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendments: At the beginning of line 8, section 1, strike out the word "and" and insert the words "or by reason of their;" in line 9, strike out the word "and," between the words "dwelling-house" and "by," and in line 10 insert the words "by them" between the words "continued" and "thereon."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill in the House?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to inquire whether this bill was properly sent to the Committee on Claims—whether it ought not to have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The SPEAKER. It might have gone to either committee, because it involves a claim against the District of Columbia, and also a claim against the United States. Of course a claim against the District of Columbia alone would go properly to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and a claim against the United States would go properly to the Committee on Claims. The claims embraced in this bill belong to both classes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The Committee of the Whole House is discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Claims, and just read as a part of the same.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the bill as amended to a third reading.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I did not like to object to the consideration of this bill——

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. No objection has been made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. If there is to be debate I shall have to make objection.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair asked for objection, and none was made. The House has entered upon the consideration of the bill and adopted the amendments.

Mr. DUNN. But the Chair will remember that I only agreed to yield the floor for the consideration of such measures as might be passed without debate.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair could not tell in advance what measures would give rise to debate; and after the House has given consent to the consideration of a bill it is before the House, subject to debate under the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel sure that this bill will not give rise to much debate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desired only to say that after a unanimous report by the Committee on Claims I did not like to object to the consideration of this measure; but I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the passage of this bill will probably establish a precedent which may involve the Government and the District of Columbia in the payment of a very large sum of money. One of the provisions of this bill, and the main provision, is that this claimant shall have the right to sue in the Court of Claims for any damage which he may have suffered by reason of a change in the grade of the streets of this city. There are some other provisions in the bill, but I believe that is the principal one. Now, it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that a municipal corporation such as the city of Washington has the right to change the grade of the streets whenever it sees proper to do so.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I think it is the rule in every court in the United States that the common council of a city or town has plenary power to change the grade of any street, and that such change does not work any damage.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is exactly what I am contending for. Therefore I say that if this man be permitted to go into the Court of Claims and recover damages for the supposed wrong which has been done him in this matter, every other citizen in this community who may suppose himself to have suffered damage on account of a change of grade will under this precedent have the same right to go into court and sue the District of Columbia or the United States Government for the damage he may believe himself to have suffered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether there are not a great many cases of this sort.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes, sir; a great many.

Mr. BLOUNT. So that the amount of the liability in which the Government may be involved is very large.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no doubt about that.

I will say, without meaning to reflect in any way upon the Committee on Claims—because I know that any committee is liable to make mistakes—that this same committee has reported to this House another bill providing payment to a claimant who, as I believe, has no earthly claim for damages, and whose claim, whatever may be its merit, is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States on a case carried up from the Court of Claims. And before the court has decided whether he has any right to any money at all we are called upon by a report from this same committee to vote him $50,000 or $60,000. As I have said, I disclaim any desire to reflect upon the Committee on Claims, because it is impossible for them, as it is for all of us in many cases, to get at all the facts connected with these matters.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, in one moment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What case do you refer to?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a large number of people in this District who feel it to be their duty to take every dollar they can out of the Treasury by right or by wrong. Therefore I say it is of the utmost consequence to this District and to the United States Government the House should consider well before they lay down a precedent, by the passage of this bill, even if the man is a poor man, which is liable to do us great damage in the future.

Now I submit to the gentleman's question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What case do you refer to?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I refer to the claim of the Ballard Pavement Company.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As a member of that committee I desire to say I have no knowledge of that case whatever.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I disclaim reflection on anybody whatever. It is likely to have been reported by any committee under the same circumstances.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; I will yield to a question from the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman from South Carolina state the case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to which he referred?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not remember the case; but it was a case which grew out of change of grade in this city.

Mr. FINDLAY. The tendency of modern decisions is to relax the strictness with which the old doctrine of damnum absque injuria was enforced. While, therefore, the gentleman from South Carolina is correct as to the general current of the decisions upon this subject, the gentleman from Indiana is wrong when he states that the non-liability of municipal corporations for damages incident to a change of grade is the universal rule in all the courts. The Supreme Court has so held in the old case of Gozler vs. The City of Georgetown (6 Wheaton, 593), but has modified the doctrine in Pumpelly vs. The Green Bay Company (13 Wallace, 166). The courts in Ohio hold outright that injury to an individual by cutting down a street or otherwise for the good of all should in justice and good morals be shared by all (McCombs vs. Akron, 15 Ohio, 474). So Kentucky has made a long stride in the same direction (Louisville vs. Rolling Mill Company, 3 Bush, 416). And I defy any one to give a reason why an injury against the individual worked by the State or under its authority should not be compensated in the same way, in the same right, and to the same extent as injuries by the individual against the individual are compensated. I have been compelled to hold otherwise as a practitioner, but have never done so without a feeling that I was engaged in an act of robbery and spoliation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not let my friend decide this question of law. I only yielded to him for a question. I agree it is the general, if not the universal, rule. If there is any exception I do not know of it. The opinion I referred to was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall. It has been the rule established since that time down. It was in a case where the grade was changed after express agreement by ordinance of the city of Georgetown or Washington it should not be changed at all. The court decided, notwithstanding that had been done, the city council had the right to change it.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is true in that case. All I have to say is that it has been my fortune to try a great many of these cases of condemnation as the representative of the city of Baltimore, where I was compelled to take the same ground my friend from South Carolina has taken this morning, that this was an injury without damage, as the books say, and yet I felt in every one of them I was robbing some honest man out of his rights. I should like to know why when damage is done it should not be paid for. There is no reason when it has been done by the Government it should not be paid for. The question is, has damage been done? And if it has been done it should be compensated for.

Mr. HEMPHILL There is this about that: Every man who buys property in the city buys it with the expectation it shall be governed by the rules and regulations of the city council. He has no right to put up a wooden building in certain portions of the city, because he knows when he buys the property that is one of the provisions of law. Therefore when he buys a lot which may have a street in front of it he knows it at the time he buys it and makes his bargain accordingly.

Mr. FINDLAY. He buys his property according to grade.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose; for debate?

Mr. HEMPHILL. For debate or a motion if he wishes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident instead of this being a claim for a poor individual it involves a proposition of law, a general proposition of right as to the conduct of the board of public works many years ago. It has been before Congress time and again for revision. It is too large a question for us to dispose of in this manner, when, under the color of justice to an individual, we are setting perhaps a precedent which will involve this Government in millions of dollars, and when we are doing it unwittingly without examination. If it had been known this was the character of this claim I imagine consent would not have been given to take it up. I therefore, with the view of giving the House a better opportunty to consider it under other circumstances, move to recommit the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. A single remark before that motion is made.

The SPEAKER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I only yield the floor for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a motion and that terminates the debate as far as the bill itself is concerned. The motion to recommit is debatable, however.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman from South Carolina as well as the gentleman from Georgia seems to be laboring under a misapprehension as to the facts involved in this case. It is not a question merely as to damages for the change of grade of a street. The facts are, and they have been abundantly established, that the District of Columbia, ostensibly for the purpose of grading a street, built up an embankment of sand almost as high as a man's house and allowed it to remain I think two or three years, whereby the premises of the applicant in this case were absolutely destroyed. It is no question, therefore, of a change of grade, but a question of criminal neglect on the part of the authorities of the District of Columbia, whereby a poor man's residence was wiped out of existence practically.

This was before the Senate at the last session of Congress, and the Senate sent it to the Court of Claims, believing it should adjudicate the question involved. That court decided, however, that one House of Congress could not submit a question to the court involving a claim against the District of Columbia, which required the action of both Houses.

The Senate has again passed the bill, and the Committee on Claims of this House have examined it thoroughly. They believe the applicant has rights which the court should act upon; and if true, as the gentleman from South Carolina says, that the law is all against him, the court will so find and settle the matter for all time to come, so that we will have no further trouble with reference to such cases.

I wish to state upon my honor as a man, and after as diligent an investigation of the case as I was capable of, that I believe there never was a fairer case offered for the adjudication of this House, and I trust that no technical objections will be interposed here to induce the House to vote against submitting the question to this court for adjudication.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question upon the motion.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let me ask, first, whether there is any report from the commissioners of the District of Columbia upon the bill?

Mr. DUNN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 70, noes 0.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the motion to recommit to the Committee on Claims, the House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 63.

Mr. GALLINGER. I demand tellers.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the yeas and nays at once.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will not call for the yeas and nays on this motion, but, if necessary, take it on the passage of the bill if this motion shall fail. I want to save this day, if possible, for the Committee on Shipping.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. DUNHAM. In order to save time I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 83.

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the third reading of the bill, the House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 51.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it

Mr. PERKINS. Is a motion to amend in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. It would have been before the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; but it can only be done now by either a reconsideration of the vote just taken, or unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that a motion be allowed to strike out after the word "employés" down to and including the word "or," in line 10.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to a motion to amend.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I move to recommit with instructions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Kansas moves to recommit with instructions. The instructions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "employés," in line 8, down to and including the word "or," in line 10, as follows: "By reason of the said District of Columbia, or its agents, servants, or employés having changed the grade of New Hampshire avenue between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, or."

Mr. PERKINS. This will take from the Court of Claims jurisdiction over the question of damages resulting from the change of grade.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Court of Claims is already competent to settle that question.

Mr. PERKINS. But this will take from them the question involved in the change of grade.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill and the House never lays a Senate bill upon the table, but always acts upon it in such a way as to send the bill back to the Senate after such action as the House may have taken upon it.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand now that the gentleman from New Hampshire is willing to accept the amendment; and, if so, I will not insist upon the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment at this time proposed by the gentleman from Kansas as an instruction to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the question recurs on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 71, noes 54.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I regret having taken so much time of the House, and will make no further opposition.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the special order fixed for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

FREE SHIPS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7219) to amend sections 4132 and 2513 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States and to permit the same to be registered as vessels of the United States, and to admit certain materials to be used in the construction of vessels free of duty.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, this I believe is the first time in the history of our legislation when a bill has been brought before this House directly proposing to repeal, amend, and change our shipping laws in regard to the registration of American vessels since the passage of the original shipping act in 1792. I fully realize and appreciate the importance and character of the change proposed to be made. I realize and understand fully the urgent, earnest, and determined opposition that has always been and always will be made to such a change of our shipping laws.

The bill reported by the committee was matured after deliberate consideration and discussion by a majority of the committee. Under the existing laws regulating our shipping interests no vessel can be registered as a vessel of the United States unless it was built within the United States or was captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may have been adjudged to have been forfeited for breach of the laws of the United States, and which in each case shall belong wholly to citizens of the United States or to a company incorporated by the United States or a State or Territory thereof.

The bill reported by the committee amends section 4132 of the Revised Statutes so that it shall read as follows:

SEC. 4132. All vessels owned wholly by citizens of the United States, or by a company incorporated by the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, may be registered as directed in this title; and it shall hereafter be lawful for all citizens of the United States to buy vessels built in whole or in part in any foreign country, import them free of duty or other charges, and have them registered as vessels of the United States; and when so registered such vessels so bought shall be entitled to all the rights and subjected only to the same regulations as are now provided by law for the government and management of vessels built wholly within the United States and owned and controlled by citizens thereof.

Under existing laws imposing import duties taxes ranging from 18 to 69 per cent. ad valorem are imposed on the chief articles of imported materials used in the construction of vessels engaged in the foreign and coastwise trades, subject to the modifications contained in section 2513 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for certain rebates on imported materials used in the construction of vessels for the foreign trade. The bill reported by the committee amends that section so as to make it read as follows:

SEC. 2513. All or any part of the materials, whether wood, steel, or iron, copper, yellow-metal, bolts, spikes, sheathing, trenails, canvas for sails, whether flax or cotton, rigging and cordage, whether hemp, manila-hemp, or iron wire, anchors and cables, iron plates, castings and forgings, angle-irons, beams, masts, yards, rivets, bolts, nuts, screws, boiler plates and tubes, and all other materials which may be necessary for the construction and equipment in whole or in part of vessels to be built and furnished in the United States after the 1st day of January, 1887, may be imported in bond, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose no duties shall be collected or paid thereon.

This radical and positive change in the shipping laws, Mr. Chairman, proposes to bring this Government directly abreast with the leading commercial and maritime powers in the world, and to advance its policy to that position and to that basis which was assumed more than a quarter of a century ago by all the maritime powers of the world, and which alone has been conceived necessary to make possible not only a revival, but a maintenance, of our equal and fair participation in the foreign and carrying trade of the world. We are now practically excluded. The following tables, taken from the report of the majority of the committee, exhibit fairly our present condition. We have come to this condition under a protective policy.

The following table and statement show how fatal was this blight, and how completely we have lost our carrying trade. It is taken from the minority report of the joint select committee of the Senate and House to the Forty-seventh Congress:

OUR MARINE DEGRADATION.

In conclusion, it is certain that the prominent feature of this country is, or was before bad counsels ruled, our marine. The breezes are still ours. The waters are ours. The coast is still ours. Lumber and timber we have. Iron we have in abundance. Steel, by the refinement of science and the Bessemer process, has been cheapened, and would be still cheaper were not protection its fatality. Our shipping and our commerce in our earlier days were our profit at home, our pride abroad. Now what are they? The percentages of exports and imports carried in the vessels of the United States from 1855 to 1882 demonstrate. They are as follows:

Year.	Per cent.	Year.	Per cent.
1856	75.2	1870	35.6
1857	70.5	1872	28.5
1859	66.9	1874	26.7
1861	65.2	1878	25.9
1863	41.4	1879	22.6
1865	37.7	1880	17.6
1867	33.9	1881	16.2

American vessels transported during the fiscal year 1881 16.2 per cent.; foreign vessels 83.8 per cent. These figures show more than useless rhetoric the degradation of this once proud and profitable employment.

The following table, from the report of the majority of that committee, is more complete and yet stronger:

The following figures for each semi-decennial year since 1840 will present at a glance the facts relating to the past and present condition of American shipping:

Years.	Tonnage in foreign trade.	Tonnage in coastwise trade.	Value of exports and imports.	Per cent. carried in American vessels.	Per cent. carried in foreign vessels.
1840	762,838	2,176,694	$231,227,465	82.9	17.1
1845	904,476	1,223,218	231,901,170	81.7	18.3
1850	1,439,694	1,797,825	330,037,038	72.5	17.5
1855	2,348,358	2,543,255	536,625,366	75.6	14.4
1860	2,379,396	2,644,867	762,288,550	66.5	33.5
1865	1,518,350	3,381,522	604,412,996	27.7	62.3
1870	1,448,846	2,638,247	991,896,889	35.6	64.4
1875	1,515,598	3,219,698	1,219,434,544	25.8	74.2
1880	1,314,402	2,637,686	1,613,770,633	17.4	82.6
1881	1,297,035	2,646,011	1,675,024,318	16.0	84.0
1882	1,259,492	2,873,638	1,567,071,700	15.5	84.5

It is a remarkable thing that this great Government, which has accomplished so much in so short a time in human progress and development, in the accumulation of wealth, and the establishment of power, should be the only civilized government remaining on the face of the earth which has seen proper to adhere to the old restrictive policy of a century ago. It may be well to advert to that policy to show the existing conditions at that time, their changes since, and the modifications of the policies and legislation of the civilized and maritime powers of the earth. When our shipping act of 1792 became a law all the governments of the world were yet under the influence of the old restrictive, prohibitive policy of the seventeenth century, a policy which grew up and sprang out of a perpetual and almost never-ending system of European wars. This continent had not developed power. It had no considerable population. The existing conditions then involved nothing except the European system of politics with this system of never-ending and successive wars, and the struggle for power, and the establishment of a balance of power on the European continent.

The shipping act of England of 1650 and subsequent acts during the eigtheenth century were the product of a war policy rather than of a commercial policy. That government led then in restrictive and prohibitive measures, and England, unlike our prohibitionists and protectionists in this country, went direct to the vitals of the subject and did not mince matters. They met the question fairly and boldly, and absolutely prohibited competition by prohibitory and restrictive measures. Her shipping laws prohibited, in the first place, all commerce whatever by other countries with her colonies.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a question of order. I ask that order may be preserved in the House so that we may have an opportunity of listening to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. My remarks will be printed, and the conversations of the gentlemen who are making this interruption will not; so I will be content. I would be glad, of course, to have the attention of the House, and I will appeal to the chairman to do what he may to give me that attention. If I do not say anything interesting, I may read something interesting before I quit.

Mr. PETTIBONE. On the question of order I desire to say that while the gentleman from Arkansas is content to speak we have a right to hear, and upon that right I insist.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Gentlemen who desire to converse will retire to the cloak-room.

Mr. DUNN. That old shipping act of England prohibited all intercourse with her colonies and plantations absolutely; and that was one of the great factors which produced the discontent that led to the war by the colonies on this continent for independence. Those laws also imposed numerous other restrictions, burdens, and charges upon the shipping of foreign countries. Goods were not permitted to be imported unless brought in British vessels or the vessels of the country where produced, &c. All other maritime countries in the world retaliated upon England by enacting similar legislation. The lex talionis became the rule of that era. That period of protection and of prohibitory war measures resembled very much the struggle we have had for the last half century in this Government for the maintenance of a protective tariff system—that being bold, undisguised, and certain to every intent, while this is sinister, insidious, and under the false pretense of taxation for fiscal needs of the Government.

It was contended that it was necessary in order to maintain the naval and military power of England. It was contended that it was necessary to preserve and perpetuate the English commerce and the English carrying trade, and they adhered to it for nearly two hundred and fifty years. That resulted, as I have said, in retaliatory measures by all the other governments. They enacted similar laws, prohibiting the importation of anything unless it was brought in their own vessels or the vessels of the countries from which the imported goods might come. The logical consequence of that long-continued contest was, of course, general obstruction of commerce throughout the civilized world.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Are you speaking of the effect of the act of 1751?

Mr. DUNN. I am speaking of the act of 1650 and subsequent similar acts—that whole policy—the old shipping laws of England.

The example of England was followed by the other nations, and the necessary result was general obstruction of intercourse and commerce throughout the world, so much so, that somebody had to quit it, and England wisely took the lead in abandoning that policy of restriction and obstruction. Mr. Huskisson, the president of the English board of trade under Lord Liverpool's administration, between 1819 and 1825, brought the existing condition of obstruction to the attention of Parliament, and said in substance: "We are assailed and confronted on all sides by these retaliatory and countervailing measures." The Prussian minister has said: "Prussia has not exceeded the restrictions imposed by England, but she will equal them and go further." In this condition of things Mr. Huskisson asked, What is left for England to do but to take the lead in a more liberal policy, in the abandonment of the restrictive policy which has led to this condition of obstruction throughout the world? And the reciprocity laws of 1822, 1823, 1825, and 1826 were the result.

The English protectionists rushed frantically to Parliament with their private and individual grievances. Mr. Huskisson and the English ministry were presenting a great national policy, which was necessary for the general good of England and of the commerce of the whole world. The protectionists came forward with pleas of private interests in opposition to the general interest and the general good. The ship-owners said: "Our business of freighting will fall off if you admit the vessels of the balance of the world to compete with us." The ship-builders said: "Our business of building ships will go down if you allow ships to be bought elsewhere in the world and admit them to registration." But to these pleas of individual and private business interests that ministry of statesmen wisely opposed the argument of the general good, and laws were passed by which reciprocity was established and commerce was unfettered everywhere. The colonies had previously revolted against the policy which denied them commercial intercourse with the balance of the world. American liberty had been established. A new and now powerful nation had been born and had taken its place in the family of nations. England learned a lesson from the obstructions and revolts which her previous policy had created and provoked. Then succeeded the era of protective tariffs, prohibition upon the use by their citizens of any ships except those built in their own ship-yards, prohibition of participation in the coastwise and internal carrying trade of the several countries, especially the coastwise trade. England adhered to that much of the restrictive policy for a while, but twenty-five years more of tariff protection and of modified restriction taught her the lesson which begot the total abolition of the shipping and tariff laws by the enactments of 1848, 1850, and 1855, when she opened her ship-yards and all her ports, her coastwise trade included, to the full participation of the whole world. Ship-building, ship-owning, freighting, commerce, everything was declared free, in open competition with all other countries. No other nation went so far.

But let me go back now and bring up another fact of history. When England enacted her shipping laws of 1651 and subsequently, the Dutch held the supremacy in the carrying trade of the world. How had Holland obtained that supremacy? And here is a valuable historical lesson. The only two instances in which any nation has ever gained a complete supremacy in the commerce and carrying trade of the world over all others are that of Holland, under a free trade and free commercial system at that early day, and England to-day, under her laws enacted from 1846 to 1855. No nation ever went to the front in the world's commerce and carrying trade except under conditions of unrestricted trade, free commerce, free ships, free ship-building, and without subsidies, absolutely without subsidies; and history shows no evidence of anything to the contrary. England's law of 1651 was the offspring of her jealousy of Holland, and was enacted to strike down the supremacy of Holland, as you gentlemen on that side of the House now ask us to tighten the bands of restriction and protection in order to strike down England's supremacy. What has our present deplorable condition in that behalf been born of? In 1792, and from that day all the way down to the present time, we have adhered to a policy of restriction, of prohibition. We have denied to our people the privilege to purchase cheap ships. We competed successfully with England and the leading commercial nations of the earth only when we could build ships cheaper than they could.

Up to that time and under that policy we had gone to the rank of the second nation in the world's carrying trade; and England abolished her shipping laws because under the laws prohibiting her people from purchasing foreign-built ships and giving them British registration the United States was outstripping her. Why? Because we could build and had been selling ships cheaper than England could. That was all. England did not ask for more protection, for more prohibition; she did not enact new tariff laws, but abolished existing prohibitions. She set her commerce and her ship-yards free. She told her people to rely upon their courage, their pluck, their national pride. She unfettered her merchants. She put upon them the law of necessity. Necessity is not alone "the mother of invention;" it is the mother of the world's success, the world's advancement in progress, in civilization, in wealth, in development, in all that constitutes national greatness. This brought the nations down to competition conducted upon that principle.

Who has ever met England with free ships and free trade? We are told that England can not be competed with because wages are lower in England than in the United States. We are not the only competitors England has in the world. All Europe competes with England. Wages are lower on the continent by 40 per cent., if statistics are to be believed, than they are in England; yet England holds her supremacy.

Now, I may be told that England, with the old shipping act of 1651, struck down Dutch supremacy; that thereby she took the lead of Holland. That is not true. The historian of German commerce says that Holland's commerce and supremacy in the carrying trade were not overcome by the English shipping laws, but by the funding acts and the excessive and oppressive taxation imposed after the treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht and Aix la Chapelle, which settled the peace of Europe and left a great debt upon those nations. It was the outrageous funding laws and the excessive taxation imposed in consequence of those war debts which struck down Dutch supremacy in the commerce and carrying trade of the world. Her people were so taxed, all the necessaries of life were made so expensive, all her industries were so loaded with taxes, that she was not able longer to fight the battle of competition with the more liberal policy of other nations which followed. Germany has risen from the ashes of that disaster imposed upon her by war and the war taxes which followed, and she has taken her stand to-day as one of the most powerful rivals of England, and she has attained this position under a system freer than that of any other nation except Great Britain herself.

Now, I have seen it stated in protectionist publications that Adam Smith—and our protectionist friends never roll any morsel under their tongues with such unction as any little morsel they may get from Adam Smith—I have seen it stated and repeated that Adam Smith said that the old restrictive navigation laws of England were beneficial to her commerce and resulted in great good to England. Now let us see what Adam Smith did say. I read from page 912 of McCulloch's Dictionary of Commerce and Commercial Navigation a quotation from Adam Smith:

> National animosity at that time aimed at the very same object which the most deliberate wisdom might have recommended, the diminution of the naval power of Holland, the only naval power which could endanger the security of England.

He said it was as a war measure a wise blow at the naval power, not at the commercial power, of Holland. We are in no war; we have not been for a long time; God forbid we ever should be again. We are not trying to strike down the armies and navies of other nations. What did he say about commerce?

> The act of navigation is not favorable to foreign commerce or to the growth of that opulence which can arise from it.

It was a war measure, damaging to English commerce and to Holland's naval power.

> The interest of a nation in its commercial relations to foreign nations is like that of a merchant with regard to the different people with whom he deals, buying where he can buy cheapest and selling where he can sell dearest.

Adam Smith is not the only contemporaneous historian of that period who recorded the same fact. Sir Roger Coke, in his treatise on trade, published in 1671, said that "the act, by lessening the resort of strangers to our ports, had a most injurious effect upon our commerce." Sir Josiah Child, whose treatise was published in 1691, corroborated Coke's statement; and Mr. Richardson, a merchant of extensive business, and extremely well informed, "condemned the whole principle of the navigation act and contended that instead of increasing our shipping and our seamen it had diminished both."

So that the conditions existing at that time had more of military significance as promoting the passage of such laws than of commercial significance—infinitely more. This historian says further:

> To have continued that policy, it may be easily shown, in the present state of the world, to enforce the provisions of the act (the navigation law) would have been amongst the most efficient means that could have been devised for the destruction of our commerce. The wealth and power to which Britain has attained have now inspired other nations with the same feeling of envy and jealousy that the wealth of Holland formerly generated in our minds. Instead of ascribing our commercial and manufacturing superiority to its true causes, that is, the comparative freedom of our constitution, the absence of oppressive feudal privileges, the security of property, the fairness of our system of taxation, our foreign rivals contended that it had been entirely owing to our exclusive system; and they appealed to our example to stimulate their respective governments to adopt retaliatory measures, of which I have already spoken.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. What you are now reading shows that the point was controverted.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, there have always existed persons who presented for legislative protection their private interests against the policy of all the statesmen of the world who insisted on adhering to the public interest. The great difficulty has always been to push aside and keep out of national legislation and administration private interests and private enterprises alleged to be for the public good—to separate private from public interests. That is the great, the sublime struggle that our present most excellent Chief Executive is so bravely maintaining—to serve the public as contradistinguished from private interests. He is trying to bring back this Government from a system of private jobbery to the service of the public interest.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The authority from which you read attributes another cause. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, certainly. It says other nations mistakenly and wrongfully assumed that British prosperity had come of prohibition, when in fact it had not come at all, and they had to abolish their restrictive laws to get to it and make it possible.

Now I will print tables to show that under those old restrictive measures no government ever attained what it expected, not one.

It is plain from this statement that the number of our ships, the amount of their tonnage, and the number of our sailors, have all been vastly increased since 1825.

The strides made by shipping during recent years have placed this industry in advance of the iron trade and the mines, and only subordinate to agriculture and railways in the capital invested. Up to within the last two or three years fabulous fortunes were made by ship-builders and ship-owners, and dividends were paid to shareholders in shipping ranging from 10 to 30 per cent. But 1884-'85 have been years of great depression—a depression which will probably continue until toward the close of the current year.

The subjoined tables will show the marvelous growth of British shipping. In 1830 the merchant navy under the British flag included 23,721 vessels, of 2,533,000 tons; in 1850 it had increased to 34,288 vessels, representing 4,233,000 tons; in 1860 the number of vessels was 29,469, representing 5,713,000 tons. By 1870 it had increased to 32,920 vessels, measuring 7,150,000 tons; in 1880 the vessels numbered 38,939, measuring 8,447,171 tons, and at the beginning of 1885 the total number of vessels under the British flag was 39,235 vessels, measuring 9,314,496 tons, and this tonnage is divided as follows: Sailing vessels under 50 tons, 14,463, measuring 420,927 tons; of 50 tons and upward, 16,034 vessels, measuring 4,644,127 tons; steam-vessels under 50 tons, 2,821, measuring 59,364 tons, and 5,917 vessels upward of 50 tons, measuring 4,190,078 tons; aggregating a tonnage of upward of 9,000,000 tons, as already stated.

These are extracts from the reports of our consuls.

It has been in vain that the governments of Europe have fought the battle with free England with protection. They have not had the courage to open their markets, to open their commerce, to open the carrying trade free and fight the battle with the world. But they have, with a half-protective policy—more liberal than ours, however—they have fought the battle with England until recently France was the first to strike her colors and resort to subsidies.

In 1881 the French ship-builders and the French ship-owners concluded they were not able to compete with England and other countries, and they adopted a system of subsidies which has imposed upon the French exchequer an annual tax of many millions of dollars, exceeding to-day annually by 20 per cent. the estimates upon which the acts themselves were passed—as all such measures always do.

Now, France had increased in her tonnage and in her commerce and in her carrying trade prior to the enactment of that law of 1881 more rapidly than she has since that time. That is shown by the reports of the consuls, extracts from which I will print.

Mr. Ford, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of State, makes this statement in Executive Document 172.

The first nation to adopt a bounty policy, pure and simple, was France, whose sailing marine was in fact decreasing rapidly. In 1873 it could count a sailing tonnage of 882,866, and in 1880 only 641,539, a decrease of 241,327 tons, or more than 27.3 per cent. As compared with its immediate neighbors and rivals this was an unfavorable showing, as the sailing marine of the United Kingdom had decreased in the same time about 5 per cent., that of Italy about 7 per cent., and that of Germany about 10 per cent. At the same time there was no cause for alarm, as the steam tonnage was increasing, and the more rapid was this substitution of steam for sail the more efficient was the French marine becoming, and the more speedily was it being placed in a condition to compete with greater effect against its rivals not only in its own commerce, but in the carrying trade of the world.

To recur to the period 1873-'80, the steam tonnage of France increased 50 per cent.; that of the United Kingdom, 58 per cent.; that of Germany less than 29 per cent., and that of Italy about 58 per cent.; and while France was relatively behind Italy, the two countries could hardly be placed in one category, where alone such a comparison would be just; for while France added 92,594 tons to her steam marine, Italy added only 28,477 and Germany 48,125 tons. Of course Great Britain far surpassed them, the addition being no less than 1,009,685 tons. As compared then with its neighbors, France was on no worse footing than they were, and, unless the rapid substitution of steam for sail must be counted as a disadvantage, was more prosperous and more advanced than either Germany or Italy.

The French carrying trade increased more rapidly before 1880 than after 1880, even allowing for the longer interval; and the German, while falling away in the previous years, more than regained what it had lost, and increased at a higher rate than did the French.

Though the bounty system was intended to favor French ship-yards, it has had a greater effect upon foreign ship-building, and while before the passage of the law the greater portion of the tonnage added each year was constructed in France, the relation was reversed after 1880, in which year there was great activity in expectation of the adoption of the law. The tonnage of vessels built in France, bought abroad and sold to foreigners, is shown in the following table:

Year.	Built.	Bought abroad.	Sold.
	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
1873	39,430	17,646	19,848
1874	34,917	17,404	27,092
1875	37,520	20,001	14,722
1876	32,707	15,581	16,148
1877	26,884	12,864	14,751
1878	21,367	19,677	12,851
1879	24,733	16,809	8,323
1880	12,629	34,201	12,939
1881	20,735	34,909	11,441
1882	56,594	78,612	17,407
1883	35,223	*49,387	14,681

*The figures of Consul Dufais give a much higher tonnage.

The bounties have succeeded in infusing life into neither ship-building nor ship navigation. France finds it cheaper to have her iron vessels built in Great Britain and a large share of her wooden ships in other countries. The lines of ships that were called into being through the liberal offers of the government are represented as being in a state of bankruptcy, and existing lines that participate in the bounties are either paying no dividends or very small amounts. The exports of France, reflecting as they did the slight reaction which ensued in 1879, have since declined and are still declining in value, and the decrease can not be explained by a fall in the prices of commodities, but rather by an absolute decrease in the foreign commerce of the nation. In fact, it may be asserted that the bounty policy of France, intended to bridge over a temporary depression, has aggravated the situation, and has proved itself to be a source of mischief and not of cure.

Respectfully,

WORTHINGTON C. FORD,
Chief of Bureau.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Department of State, April 7, 1886.

Says one of the consuls in response to the circular of the State Department:

With the decrease of the original bounty growing greater every year, and the yards already idle, it is not likely, if the results elsewhere are similar, that the law will be re-enacted, unless the sums are largely augmented and are made to extend to vessels doing the cabotage or coasting trade. The complaint now is that the bounty is insufficient.

Have we not heard that cry of insufficient protection or bounty continuously in this country also?

Another consul says:

The general opinion on the bounty question is that it has failed to produce the effect of serving the shipping trade, and has only resulted in creating a few large steamship companies, who have monopolized the whole of the carrying trade to the exclusion of sailing vessels.

These reports show, Mr. Chairman, the subsidies in substance have done this. The intention was to increase French commerce, to extend the markets for her productions and manufactures, to increase her carrying trade. They have resulted in the formation of a few monopolies. But these French subsidies were also for ship-building. They give subsidy not only to ships built in French yards, but to those built abroad and sailing under the French flag—half as much for the foreign-built ship as the ship built in the French yards. Her experience has shown that her commerce has dwindled. There was a spasmodic impulse given to ship-building, and for a time to the carrying trade, but the reports of her consuls show that has all disappeared.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If I understand your statement, then the French have free ships the same as before.

Mr. DUNN. No, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand from what you state they give subsidies to ships built abroad under their flag.

Mr. DUNN. Before the law of 1881 they allowed free ships and free material. When they enacted the subsidy law of 1881 they repealed the free-material act and gave subsidy in lieu of free-ship building.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understood you to say they gave a subsidy not only to ships built at home but to ships built abroad.

Mr. DUNN. Built abroad and registered as French vessels—so they do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, built abroad and registered.

Mr. DUNN. Double as much to the home-built ship as to the foreign-built ship. Still they register the foreign-built ship all the same.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is a free ship?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, yes; but they do not admit free ship-building material. They allow them to be purchased abroad, but they repealed the law for free ship-building material.

Mr. MILLIKEN. They allow foreign-built ships to come in free.

Mr. DUNN. Yes. The original free-ship law gave more prosperity to French commerce and the French carrying trade than the law of 1881 has done. That is true.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman from Arkansas, but I do wish to get this point clear. I understand the French admit free ships as before, and that the only difference now is they give a subsidy and admit free raw material.

Mr. DUNN. No, they do not admit free raw material; they repealed that law.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The only change is they now pay a subsidy.

Mr. DUNN. They pay a subsidy in lieu of the free-material clause of the law, which was repealed. I sincerely hope the gentleman now understands it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether the French do not also give a double navigation bounty. Do they not only give a subsidy but a double navigation bounty?

Mr. DUNN. They do, and that doubles the force of my argument that, notwithstanding that double bounty, French commerce and navigation are to-day prostrate.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that not true of all commerce?

Mr. DUNN. No; it is not true of the commerce of England. There is dullness in trade, reduction of freights and rates, but no bankruptcy, as in France and Italy. They are not as prosperous in England as they were heretofore.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do not English ship-owners complain that they are making no money?

Mr. DUNN. Yes; but the French ship-owners are bankrupt, the Italians are bankrupt; bankruptcy stalks abroad everywhere throughout Europe. The truth of the matter is that the subsidy policies of Europe and this country have produced their legitimate results.

Excess of protection has overstimulated and brought into existence more tonnage than the commerce of the world can employ. The industries of the world are suffering from dullness of trade, as a general rule. They have brought stagnation; they have enervated the energies of their people and brought the consequent result—stagnation; and to-day there is not a seaport on the face of this earth that has not its fleet of vessels, both sail and steam, anchored out to wait for the returning tide of prosperity; waiting for employment, waiting for business; and to-day freights are lower in the world than they have ever been in the world's history at any preceding time. This country is the gainer just now from this condition of things. Under the bounty system other governments are taxing their people to enable them to give us the benefit of the lowest possible rates of freight for what we buy and sell.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What subsidies does the gentleman refer to upon ships built in this country?

Mr. DUNN. That incidental bounty which comes from prohibiting our people from purchasing cheap ships elsewhere; the monopoly that covers the coasting trade. No man can enter the coasting trade of this country unless he buys an American-built ship and at the price demanded by the builder. It is that or nothing. And so also of the foreign trade.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the coasting trade is prosperous, very prosperous, under the present conditions of trade.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; it is a monopoly. It is prospering at the expense of every private interest engaged outside of it and at the expense of the general prosperity of the country.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the gentleman's argument would imply that that also should be depressed, whereas it is prosperous all the time.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine, like many others in this country, is in favor of seizing upon the results of unjust restrictive laws as long as they will promote the ship-builder on the coast of Maine, although everybody else should suffer. I have no doubt that his interest is prospering.

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DUNN. I can not yield for further interruptions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman, since he has referred to me, that I am ready to protect an industry in Arkansas or anywhere else if it is for the benefit of the people of this country.

Mr. DUNN. I must decline to yield to a colloquy. It is of course easy to arrange a log-rolling system to plunder the tax-paying people.

These gentlemen would have done well to have studied the lessons of Daniel Webster a long time ago. I want the distinguished gentlemen here present to remember that every demand for protection, under the operation of the taxing laws of this country, is made for the purpose of promoting private and not public interests.

Daniel Webster animadverted upon this a long time ago. He said:

It is a fundamental axiom, it is interwoven with all my opinions, that the great interests of the country are united inseparably; that agriculture and commerce and manufactures will prosper together or languish together, and that all legislation is dangerous which proposes to benefit one of these without looking to the consequences which may fall on the others. Gentlemen tell us they are in favor of domestic industry. So am I. They would give it protection. So would I; but then domestic industry is not confined to manufactures.

And I will add that it is not confined to shipping or ship-building.

The employments of agriculture, commerce, and navigation are all branches of domestic industry. They all furnish employment to American capital and American labor, and when the question is whether new duties shall be laid for the purpose of giving further encouragement to particular manufactures, every reasonable man must ask himself both whether the proposed new encouragement be necessary and whether it can be given without injury to other branches of industry. Sir, the general sense of this age with one current is in favor of promoting commercial intercourse and unrestrained individual action. Men yield up their opinions of monopoly and restriction as they yield up their prejudices, slowly and reluctantly, but they can not withstand the general tide of opinion.

And I add they can not withstand the general tide of necessity, of the necessities of the public in all of the industries of this country.

Italy followed the example of France, and navigation and commerce are bankrupt and on crutches in Italy as well as in France. Germany alone has sought to fight the battle. But Germany became a convert to the colonial doctrine of new acquisitions over the world. Germany has also resorted to subsidies. With Germany it is an untried experiment, and its results as yet unseen.

Now, I said before that this wholesale policy, this trepidation which has seized upon Europe and which has always possessed this country as to the supremacy of England, has begotten and brought to pass the old struggle which started in 1651, modified or somewhat assimilated to the existing conditions of to-day. That was a period of almost perpetual, flagrant war in the struggle for the balance of power in Europe. This is an era when the civilized sentiment of the world will not permit wars to be made recklessly. It is a game that princes are not permitted to play at for mere sport or greater glory. The peace of the world is a subject of consideration with the world to-day, and the great powers will no longer permit wars to be recklessly declared. We saw the other day the little power of Greece arming herself, hot and reckless, and the king driven, by a public and apparently patriotic frenzy, against his better judgment to declare war. But the powers of Europe said to Greece, "You can not disturb the peace of Europe and possibly of the world," and her armed forces and her ships of war were not permitted to depart from her shores.

You can not make navigation laws to-day for war purposes. The necessities of mankind forbid it; the peace of the world forbids it; the interests of the nation forbid it. Therefore the reverse policy is resorted to, and nations are invited not so much to prohibit and restrict as to tax their people, to take out the money from the vaults of their treasuries and put it into these private enterprises. National powers are invited to lay their hand, in the exercise of that most dangerous of all powers granted to government, the taxing power—they are invited to lay their hand upon the property of the great mass of their people who pay the taxes, while with the other hand they bestow this money and this wealth taken from the tax-payer upon private corporations and associations of wealth to build up their private enterprises and to increase their private fortunes.

That policy adopted by one nation has stricken terror in other nations, and legislative assemblies and cabinet ministries and rulers are driven by the clamor of private interests crying out, "Help me, or I sink!" All are driven before that cry and that clamor, except that grandest and sturdiest of all the powers of this earth—save our own, I hope—England. Confident in a knowledge of her ability to pursue a policy that is for the best interests of the nation, she turns a deaf ear to private interests. All other nations of consequence, or the most of them, have succumbed to that cry. France first; her effort has failed. Italy next; hers is a state of failure. Germany; an untried problem. One single argument advanced in the German Reichstag is worthy of consideration and determined that government to adopt this policy. That was the fact that China was now entering upon a great system of railroad construction which would pour out upon the seacoast of China the vast product of her hundreds of millions of population and give it to the commerce of the world. Germany therefore has said: "We are willing to give these millions for a chance at that trade." England stands sturdy and confident and says: "We will fight the battle where we have always fought it since we learned wisdom, in a free, fair fight on free seas, free commerce, and free navigation."

Mr. JONES, of Texas. And free ships.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, free ships. Therefore that contest becomes what the original restrictive contest was, one of rivalry among the powers. Then the question was who could prohibit the most, who could inflict the most damage upon his neighbor, who could strike down more of his neighbor's commerce than his neighbor could of his.

The lex talionis was the law of that day; now the question is who can give the most of the people's money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN was recognized, and said: I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas as much of my time as he desires to use.

Mr. DUNN. I thank my colleague on the committee for the time he has given me, for, though I did not expect to use so much time as I have, I am not so far advanced in the argument as I had hoped to be at this stage of the discussion.

The contest to-day is, who can give the most bounty. It is a game of national poker. France bids some millions; Germany sees that, and goes better; Italy, out of money, had to go out of the game; and we are asked to see Germany and France, and go better. There will be no end; that contest will be fought as the original contest was fought to universal obstruction of commerce. This contest, if entered upon by all the nations, will be fought to universal bankruptcy of the tax-payers of the nations. We shall have a bounty-gatherer strapped upon the back of every tax-payer upon this continent and the other continents of the world to be carried through life. That policy must fail. The Secretary of State recognized the importance of the inauguration of this policy on the part of the continental governments of Europe, and called the attention of our consuls to it. Here is the report, showing that it has produced, as I have before stated, an abnormal stimulus of production of ships and navigation until the world is overstocked, and we are becoming the chief beneficiaries of this competition carried on at the expense of the tax-payers of those governments.

Let me tell you another thing. There has been another change going on during the last thirty years. Thirty years ago the world found out that ships could be run across the seas with steam and could be built of iron. America, unfortunately being in the throes of a great internecine struggle, was not able to enter that contest at the beginning with the other powers of the earth and they have distanced us. When we came out of that struggle if we had come out with freedom then to enter the contest we should have been far advanced in the race to-day, because American enterprise, American ingenuity, and American skill have never been outstripped in the world in any contest that they deliberately entered upon. All we lacked has been the courage to enter upon it. We have stood upon the shores of the stream, shivering, hesitating, doubting, with our protectionist friends standing in the way shaking their old well-worn scarecrow of foreign "pauper labor" in our face and telling us death stands before us if we go there. Their touch has been death in everything thus far to the interests of this nation. They clamor for alms at the door of the house they have robbed of its just share of the world's wealth.

The change from sail to steam has, because of one consideration which has not been taken into general account, overstocked the world with tonnage. One ton of steam-power in navigation is equal to three under sail. When Italy became alarmed at the decay and decline of her tonnage under sail her alarm was unnecessary. I will print an extract to show that although her tonnage under sail had diminished her tonnage under steam had increased, and hence was multiplied threefold. It shows at the end of that decade which alarmed her a general gain of more than 40,000 tons in effective capacity. Italy supposed that her navigation and carrying trade were gone, when in truth she had 40,000 tons more than she had at the beginning of that supposed period of decadence.

All the nations of the world have gained in steamships more than the United States. They have multiplied their tonnage converted from sail to steam by three. We have not. Why? Because we were not permitted to buy ships and because we could not build them on terms that anybody would or could accept. Everybody ought to know that railways, steamships, telegraphs, modern inventions and developments which have annihilated time and distance, which have belted the whole earth with lines of communication and transportation, have brought the peoples of the world face to face with each other. We have had the ghost of the "pauper labor" of the balance of the world shaken before us like the ghost of Banquo to frighten and stampede us. We have been told that we must protect American labor against the "pauper labor" of the rest of the world by restrictive legislation, prohibitive and protective tariffs.

If my voice can reach my countrymen, let me say to them that the days of protection have passed. You can not protect any longer. You are face to face, American laborer, with the laborers of the whole world. Your home market is insufficient. Destroy our commerce with other nations, strike down our exports by high taxation, making exports impossible, and perhaps one-fifth, at least more than 10 per cent., probably 20 per cent., of the present employment for American labor ceases to exist. The surplus production falls like a blight upon that which is needed, reducing and destroying its value, striking down enterprise, striking down industry, striking down commerce and all remunerative employment, and turning loose upon our country a mass of unemployed, dissatisfied, starving, and desperate labor, which will bear in one hand a torch and in the other a sword. That theory, that commercial policy, hangs over this country and over the labor of this country like a Damoclean sword. The wheat producer of the Northwest is standing face to face with the wheat producer of India. England and the Indian Government have built already more than 10,000 miles of railway in India. They are building 500 miles and more every year.

A few years ago India shipped 40,000 bushels of wheat; last year she put into the markets of consumption more than 40,000,000 bushels. Can you protect the Northwestern wheat-grower against that labor? I said, in a little debate which sprang up here unexpectedly the other day on the patent and tariff laws, that India could put wheat down in the markets of consumption in Europe cheaper than we can transport it from the fields of production to the markets of consumption.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, I will read you an authority on that point.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman what remedy he suggests for that?

Mr. DUNN. Cheaper necessaries of life, making cheaper production. Remove taxation from the producer and cheapen production. Reduce taxation, that canker-worm that is boring with fatal effect at the root of the tree of our national prosperity.

But to return to my mutton—wheat in India.

Mr. Chairman, I read an extract from a consular report of June, 1885:

The area of wheat lands in India is 26,000,000 acres under production. The cost of production in India is from 8 to 9 cents per bushel.

In Dakota the cost is 18 to 19 cents a bushel; and that is the minimum on this continent.

The cost of transportation by the Suez Canal from Bombay to Europe is 4½ cents per bushel.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman be good enough now to give us the price of labor in India and the price of labor in Dakota?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, yes; the price of labor in India is away down; and that is why wheat does not cost more than 8 or 9 cents a bushel. But that is the fact which you have got to confront; you are face to face with it. You can not fence the products of India out of Europe. They are there; and you can not keep them from getting there. You can keep them away from here; but our own product here is more than we can consume, and the "paupers" of India are taking away the market for our surplus.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman desire to reduce the price of labor in Dakota to what it is in India? That is the only question.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no. But whatever the price may be in India, we have got to face it. The gentleman did not attend to what I said. I said you could no longer protect against competition. You are face to face with it. The nations of the world stand commercially face to face with each other. The commerce of the world is brought together and intermingled. Statesmen must recognize that fact. We can not longer delude ourselves with the idea that we can fence these things out. The manufacturers of Europe are in our market and all the markets of the world. Our market is glutted with manufactures, glutted with agricultural productions and every other class of productions. The demand of the hour is for a market—a place in which to sell. Our capacity for production is indefinite. The only question with us is, where are we going to sell? How much can we sell, and how shall we secure a market for our productions? By increasing the cost of production? Is that logical? Shall we go on increasing the cost of production and of transportation, and at the same time expect to enter the race and fight the battle in the world's trade and commerce and business? We can not do it. We are beaten in the race before we start.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir; I yield for a question.

Mr. DUNHAM. The statement the gentleman just read shows, I believe, that the cost of raising wheat in India is about 8 cents a bushel.

Mr. DUNN. Eight to 9 cents, and transportation from Bombay to Europe 4½ cents.

Mr. DUNHAM. And the gentleman says the cost of raising a bushel of wheat in Dakota is about 18 cents?

Mr. DUNN. Eighteen to 19 cents; and that is the minimum on this continent.

Mr. DUNHAM. The difference being about 10 cents.

Mr. DUNN. The cost of the production and transportation of India wheat is from 6 to 8 cents below the cost of production here, and about as far below the cost of transporting it across the sea to Europe.

Mr. DUNHAM. The question I want to ask is this: Supposing that in India the cost of raising a bushel of wheat is 8 cents and in Dakota 18 cents, what has that to do with the question of free ships?

Mr. DUNN. Why, does not my friend understand——

Mr. DUNHAM. I am not taking into account the transportation question.

Mr. DUNN. I suppose I shall have to treat the gentleman's question seriously out of respect for him, because I have the highest respect for him. Does not the gentleman and the whole world understand that what we want is to reduce the cost of production and the cost of transportation to the markets of consumption from the fields of production? We must do that or we can not sell.

Mr. DUNHAM. That I concede.

Mr. DUNN. We must produce at a minimum; we must transport at a minimum. To do this, we must have the cheapest ships the world can give us. We have been driven from the commerce of the seas, from the carrying of our own commerce, by a policy which denied to our people ships as cheap as their competitors in all other countries of the world have. We are not only driven from the carrying trade, but, as shown by figures which I shall publish, we are driven from the markets of the world by this same policy and in the same way.

Mr. DUNHAM. Now, with the rates of freight on wheat from New York to Liverpool as they have been for two or three years past, wheat being transported sometimes as ballast and from that up to 3 cents a bushel, do you expect that free ships can make the rates lower?

Mr. DUNN. And from your city of Chicago to New York 12 to 14 cents a bushel. Take that into account, please.

Mr. DUNHAM. When was 12 to 14 cents a bushel paid?

Mr. DUNN. The last quotations I saw were 11½ cents for all-water transportation; 12¾ cents for water and rail; and 13½ cents for all-rail.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me say to the gentleman that last year all summer long wheat was carried from Chicago to New York by water for 5 cents a bushel.

Mr. DUNN. What has been the history of the preceding summers?

Mr. DUNHAM. When vessels were scarce rates were higher, of course. That is all.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, these are specious arguments based upon accidental and temporary conditions, which do not affect the general results as presented through the commercial statistics of the world. Gentlemen make a mistake in basing their statesmanship upon these accidental conditions which are not general, and upon the specious arguments of private interest which have little to do with the general public interests of the country and the world.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I should like to ask how free ships are going to make a difference in freights between Chicago and Boston?

Mr. DUNN. There are some lakes between Chicago and Boston upon which freights might be reduced. And, sir, I have already answered the question so thoroughly and completely it ought to satisfy all. The gentleman's argument stands in fact by these specious matters.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me say that the present rate of freights from Chicago to New York is about 9 cents a bushel. Thirty days from now it will be 6 cents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can only be interrupted by his consent.

Mr. DUNN. My statement made a few days ago will stand unanswered, and an accidental condition of things will amount to nothing.

Mr. DUNHAM. If you were to build ships and actually give them away you could not get freights lower.

Mr. DUNN. That is not based upon a general comprehensive knowledge of the subject, and has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DUNHAM. My opinion is based upon practical knowledge.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is exceedingly courteous, but he does not seem to know much. I will be obliged if he will not interrupt me unless he can inform me.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not think that can be done.

Mr. DUNN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will read a comprehensive statement of the great field of enterprise which lies before American industry and American capital. As I said before, all these Eastern empires and countries, where the great mass of the world's population is to be found, have by modern improvements and developments been brought into intercourse with the civilized nations of the earth, with the progressive and maritime nations of the earth. That field of commerce is as rich to-day as it was when Solomon sent one voyage there which returned him gold valued at $14,500,000. Augustus Cæsar obtained from that same India and the East values in excess of values exchanged $40,000,000.

I read from the printed argument of Mr. Elmer L. Corthell, chief engineer of the Tehuantepec Ship Railway, before the Committee of Commerce of this House the following admirable and instructive grouping of the populations and commercial importance of the countries adjacent to the Pacific Ocean, and to which, in my opinion, we must look chiefly for a market for our vast and rapidly increasing surplus products:

Oceanica	36,000,000	Hindostan	240,000,000
United States	55,000,000	Mexico	12,000,000
Japan	35,000,000
China	435,000,000	Total population	813,000,000

Not including the populations of Europeans and South American countries, many of whom are also largely interested in the isthmian question.

The over-sea commerce of the world is now increasing at the rate of 75 per cent. every ten years; cheaper transportation on shorter lines has developed it and the industries on which it depends. It now amounts in value to about $14,000,000,000 per annum. The commerce of the far Pacific countries is $2,000,000,000, and is increasing at the rate of 150 per cent. in five years.

The internal commerce of the United States by railroads alone amounts to $12,000,000,000 per annum, and a tonnage of 400,000,000, which, if loaded into one train, would encircle the earth seven times. We carry half as much more by river and lake. The commerce of the Mississippi Valley alone is $4,000,000,000. The manufactured products of the United States amount to $5,000,000,000, of which we export but 3 per cent. Of the vast trade of the Pacific we enjoy but 4 per cent., and yet these countries would be the best markets for our manufactures if we could reach them economically.

The diversified trade which we have with these eastern countries is very small in extent, but would be important if they could be reached by a short maritime route. Australia exports to this country gums, tin, and wool, and imports from us locomotives, machinery, iron manufactures, household furniture, agricultural implements, mineral oil, barley, carriages, drugs, sewing-machines, linen and cotton goods, bags, &c. The importance of Australasia as a market for us is seen from the following facts:

There are in Australia alone 76,000,000 sheep, the value of whose products is $75,000,000 per annum; and in Australasia, including Australia and New Zealand, its value is $100,000,000. Australasia exported in the year 1883-'84 4,400,785,449 pounds of wool; 14,863 bales were shipped to the United States from the port of Melbourne alone, of which 8,979 bales were shipped direct to Boston in sailing vessels going around Cape Horn; 3,315 bales went by steamer via the Suez Canal and London, and the remainder via San Francisco and the transcontinental railroads. This fact shows how circuitous and expensive are the routes by which these products reach us.

Australasia has 8,615 miles of railroad open and in construction, built at an expense of $467,000,000, with 57,174 miles of telegraph. The population in 1850 was 480,251; in 1880, 2,518,712. Its imports and exports in 1850 amounted to $45,139,520; in 1880, to $495,552,055.

From China we import tea, silk, rice, palm-leaf, jute, hemp, and export to that country cotton cloth, mineral oil, &c. The trade with Hong-Kong and Japan is similar to that with China; some of these products reach us via the Suez Canal, some via San Francisco, some via Panama, and some via Cape Horn.

In 1884 we imported from Japan goods valued at $14,200,000, and from China, in the same year, $20,460,000. From the Sandwich Islands we import brown sugar, rice, limes, and send them the same class of goods as to Australia. From Peru we import soda and guano, and export cereals, woods, machinery, mineral oil; and the trade with Chili is the same; and nearly all the traffic which goes to and comes from the western coast of South America goes around Cape Horn to Liverpool or France on its way to us.

The Suez Canal, which was opened in 1870, revolutionized not only the world's commerce, but many of its industries, and remarkably developed India, and promoted the commerce and industries of Siam, Australia, and China. The immense advantage which this route has given to Europe has injured our commerce and industries by practically excluding us from these important markets. It has become absolutely necessary, in order to hold our rank among the nations, that we should reach the Eastern markets of the world quickly and economically.

It is important to sketch briefly the history of the Suez Canal and its effect upon commerce.

Its length is 100 miles; its cost was $93,000,000. It saves about 4,500 miles over the route around the Cape of Good Hope. The charge per ton for freight is $2.80, though recently reduced at the urgent request of the British ship-owners to $1.90. The tonnage has increased from 436,609 tons in 1870, to 5,878,323 in 1883, or a gross tonnage of 8,051,307. The receipts in 1883 were 68,523,340 francs, or $13,704,670.

The cost of maintenance of the canal and working expenses during that year were $2,784,869, or about 20 per cent. of the gross receipts. From 1870 to 1874 the average receipts per annum was $2,037,376; in 1883, $13,707,670. The British bondholders confidently expect in 1888 a tonnage of ten millions. The dividend in 1883 was 17.3 per cent. The expected dividend in 1890 is 30 per cent.

The effect of the Suez Canal upon the cereal products and exports of India may be seen by the following facts:

In 1878-'79 India exported to Europe 4,098,360 bushels of wheat. In 1880-'81, 13,896,166 bushels; and in 1881-'82, 37,078,570 bushels. The area of wheat lands is 26,000,000 acres. The cost of production in India is from 8 to 9 cents per bushel, whereas in Dakota it is from 18 to 19 cents. The cost of transportation by the Suez Canal from Bombay to Europe is 4½ cents per bushel. (See consular report, June, 1885.) It has been the policy of the British Government to develop India by all possible means. In 1883 there were in operation in India 10,317 miles of railroad, with 2,333 miles under construction, at a total cost of $686,176,500. The Indian Government builds each year about 500 miles of railway.

The following is from the consular report of February, 1885:

"The Indian wheat trade has developed rapidly during the past ten or twelve years, and this surprising increase has been the result of the direct advantages which the Suez Canal provided in the way of quick and cheap freights from India." Previous to the opening of the Suez Canal a voyage of four months around the Cape of Good Hope in sailing vessels, or by steamers, was necessary to reach the Liverpool markets, and the wheat was often damaged by the heat. From 1873 to 1882 the wheat trade with Europe increased from about 15,000 tons to 3,000,000 tons. "This enormous increase in nine years has arisen from the increased price which new railroads and cheap freights to England have secured for the wheat-growers of India."

The Pacific coast.—Its cereal product increased from 3,617,659 bushels in 1874, to 97,750,157 bushels in 1884. There were exported in the latter year 33,178,577 bushels. While the gold and silver product of California was formerly its most important product and article of export, it is so no longer, for in 1884 the value of the cereal product was $44,270,861; whereas the gold and silver product was only $16,660,000. The wool product was $7,500,000, and the product in fruit, wine, and canned goods and butter equaled the gold and silver product in value. In 1870 the acreage of improved land in farms in California was 6,213,133; in 1880, 10,669,698. These facts are sufficient to show that it is of vital importance for the Pacific States to hold, for their cereal products, any and all advantages which they have hitherto possessed in the markets of the world. Oregon and Washington Territory will be as importantly benefited as California by an interoceanic transit way. Since the Suez Canal brought India 4,500 miles nearer to Liverpool our Pacific coast can no longer compete successfully in that market with India. It requires from four to five months to transport the wheat from San Francisco to Liverpool, at an average cost of $15 per ton. The 1,000,000 tons transported by the Cape Horn route in about 446 sailing vessels constitute the most important commercial business of the Pacific coast.

This vast and rich field of commerce is spread out before us, but hedged in, hampered, bound hand and foot, the American merchant stands helpless and powerless, manacled and fettered by restrictive, prohibitive, and protective laws, which increase the price of our commodities so high we can not send them there; make the cost of transportation so high as to forbid us. Standing in the midst of vast and rich fields of the world's commerce, we are, like Tantalus, "doomed to parch with thirst in the midst of waves, and viewing banquets to starve to death."

Denied participation by our laws, let us do what Adam Smith enjoins upon us and what other publicists have said. He says:

That the interests of the nation in its commercial relations with foreign nations is like that of a merchant with regard to the different people with whom he deals, to buy as cheap and to sell as dear as possible.

And transport as cheaply as possible, I will add. Let us unfetter our people, our industries, our commerce, and our navigation; put them upon an equal footing in the great race for a fair share of the world's commerce; give them a showing equal at least to that which is given by other countries.

There has never been in the history of our country as favorable a time to unfetter our shipping interests and to permit our merchants to buy ships as at the present time. I will read an extract from one of our consular reports. Consul Mason says.

From this distance even the present collapse of maritime interests is thought to bring to our country a fortuitous opportunity.

I have said before that the stimulant of subsidies and the change from sail to steam navigation has brought an overplus of ships into existence, and that every port of the world to-day has a fleet of idle ships anchored in its harbor waiting for business and profitable employment.

Consul Mason, after saying that this is a fortuitous opportunity to our country, goes on as follows:

"Ah!" said a marine broker of Marseilles, recently, "you Americans hold all the winning cards. While we in Europe are overburdened with costly armies, you have only a single army corps to guard your fortifications and watch the Indians; while we have been squandering millions upon iron-clad fleets, which are obsolete without ever having fought a battle, you can now build a navy that will include and surpass all that we have impoverished ourselves to learn; and as for a merchant marine, you have only to change a paragraph in your shipping laws and your merchants can buy everything they want, the best steam fleets that can be built, at any price from half their cost down to their value as old iron."

Let us, Mr. Chairman, take the manly and courageous course of unfettering our merchants, our capital, our enterprise, our labor, our producers, and bid them God speed in the great race. Give them a fleet at half price, and let them fight the battle as men worthy to share in the great heritage of man in the nineteenth century. [Applause.]

I maintain without fear of contradiction that the very essence of manufacturing industry and commercial industry is freedom from legislative interference and legislative protection. Attempt to resist its course by protective enactments, you arrest its progress, you destroy its vigor. Unbind the shackles in which your unwise tenderness has confined it; permit it to take unrestrained its own course; expose it to the wholesome breezes of competition; you give it new life, you restore its vigor.

Sir, industry has been well likened to the hardy Alpine plant; self-sown on the mountain side, exposed to the inclemency of the season, it gathers strength in its struggle for existence, it shoots forth in vigor and in beauty. Transplant it to the parterre, tended by the gardener, nursed in the artificial atmosphere of the forcing glass, it grows sickly and enervated, its shoots are vigorless, its flowers are inodorous. In one single word lies the soul of industry—competition. The answer of the statesman and the economist to his sovereign inquiring what he should do to assist the industry of his kingdom was, "Let it take its own course."

Sir, I can not better conclude this argument than by adopting the following eloquent language of a distinguished statesman of England, quoted in Leone Levi's History of British Commerce. Advocating the repeal of the restrictive shipping laws of England and the adoption of a more liberal policy, he said:

> Such, sir, is my prayer. Relieve us from the chains in which your indiscreet tenderness has shackled us; remove your oppressive protection; give us the fair field we ask, and we demand no more. The talent, the genius, the enterprise, the capital, and the industry of this great people will do the rest. And England, our country, will take a yet more forward place in the race for competition, for wealth, and improvement, which, by the nature of things, she is destined to run among the nations of the world.

There, and there alone, we will find security for our enterprise and reward for our labor. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time, asking leave to print in this connection such extracts as I have generally referred to to complete my argument.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to allow the importation and registry of foreign-built vessels free of duty. Inasmuch as the policy of the United States, adopted originally on recommendation of Washington and with the approval of Adams, Madison, and Jefferson, has always been to restrict the right of registry under our laws to vessels built in our own ship-yards, this bill contemplates so radical a change in our navigation laws that it should receive the most careful consideration. The fact that the policy which this bill proposes to overthrow was adopted by the founders of our Government, and has continued nearly a century without a suggestion of change until within a comparatively recent period, not only justifies great caution, but also demands the most conclusive reasons for taking the important step proposed.

It must be conceded that a bill which allows the importation of registry of foreign-built vessels free of duty discriminates most seriously and unjustly against the ship-building industry of the United States. If this bill and the revised tariff reported by my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] should become laws the only completed manufactured product placed on the free-list would be a fully equipped sailing vessel or steamship—the most marvelous device of human skill.

When Great Britain, whose legislation we are exhorted to follow by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] who has just addressed the committee, adopted the free-ship policy, she had already inaugurated a free-trade policy as to every other industry, and hence there was no discrimination against her ship-builders. Indeed, so vital to her security did she regard the maintenance of her ship-yards, that it was not until after she had applied the policy of free trade to every other business, not, indeed, until after the revolution in marine architecture from wood to iron and sails to steam had progressed far enough to make it clear that she had reached a point where she could defy the competition of the ship-builders of the world, that England's statesmen ventured to apply the policy of free trade to her ship-building industry.

But it is proposed by this bill to have the United States reverse the steps by which Great Britain applied free trade to all her industries and to commence here where England ended, namely with the ship-building industry.

It is said that the second section of this bill proposes to allow the ship-builders to import materials free of duty—in other words, to have part of the work done abroad—and that this privilege will compensate in part for the admission of the completed vessel free of duty. Tables of the duties imposed on imported iron plates, angles, beams, and other materials are presented to show how much can be saved by placing these on the free-list. These tables ignore the fact that the difference in cost between such forms of iron in this country and in England is the difference in the cost of the labor in them, and much less than the duty. They also lose sight of the fact that it would be impracticable to import a large proportion of the materials because of the necessity of having them forged or shaped where the vessel is built. In constructing an iron vessel from plates, angles, and bars more labor is required than was employed in making these materials from the iron ore. Thus if every pound of iron could be laid down in the shape of angles, bars, and plates in a ship-yard on our coast as cheaply as in a ship-yard on the Clyde, the higher wages of the labor required to construct the vessel from such materials would make the vessel now cost the builders about 10 per cent. more than if buit on the Tyne.

If this bill and the tariff bill reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] should become laws, there would be presented in our legislation the anomaly of a duty of from 30 to 40 per cent. on imported iron, while a completed ship, requiring more labor to construct from plates, angles, and beams than is required to make these forms of iron from the ore in the bed, would be placed on the free-list.

There would also be presented the anomaly of a completed steamship on the free-list, while cotton goods made from free materials would bear duties of from 20 to 40 per cent. when imported; the bituminous coal and iron ore, competing with that of Maryland, West Virginia, and Ohio, would bear a duty of 30 per cent.; sugar competing with the similar product of Louisiana, 65 per cent.; and rice, competing with that of South Carolina, 50 per cent.

I ask gentlemen from these and other States if they are prepared to vote for a bill which makes such unjust discrimination against the ship-building industry?

Mr. Chairman, the facts which I have presented conclusively show that if this bill shall pass, if fully equipped British-built iron sailing vessels and steamships shall be admitted to registry under our laws free of duty, then from that hour the ship-building industry in this country is doomed, and the owners of our ship-yards who carry on this business and the many thousand skilled workmen who support themselves and their families by means of it will be ultimately driven into other already crowded industries. It is the appreciation of this fact which has led the Knights of Labor, an organization representing 500,000 wage-workers of the United States, to protest against the adoption of the free-ship policy.

If it were proposed to place cotton goods, or imported iron, or imported machinery, or imported manufactured goods of any kind on the free-list, every member of the House and every business man would have no difficulty in seeing that such action would destroy the home industry brought into competition with the products of the cheaper labor of Europe. Yet more labor, and labor of a higher degree of skill, is required to construct a ship than is required to make cloth from cotton or wool, or iron bars from ore, or to produce sugar or rice.

Advocates of the admission of foreign-built ships free of duty cite the example of Germany, which, as they assert, developed ship-building at home by such a policy. But it should be remembered that Germany had as cheap labor as England, and that she bought ships abroad at first only because she had no ship-yards of her own; but as soon as these could be established she relied on her own yards. This country already has eleven iron-ship yards, and others will be established whenever there is encouragement. The tonnage of iron vessels built in this country last year was nearly as great as that built in Germany. To admit foreign-built ships free of duty at this juncture, just as we are beginning to build up iron-ship building, would inevitably not only prevent any extension of the ship-building industry, but would also eventually close the yards we now possess. For no one would think of investing a dollar in the necessary plant for ship-building in this country with the certainty that foreign-built vessels would be admitted to American registry free of duty. It would be useless for new iron-ship yards in this country to attempt to compete with the old and firmly established ship-yards of Great Britain. In time they would probably be able to do so, but they can not now.

Heretofore the advocates of free ships have proposed to extend this policy only to vessels for the foreign trade, although they have conceded that few persons would care to purchase and register a foreign-built vessel unless they were free to use it in both coastwise and foreign voyages. It has been so obvious that the purpose of those who proposed this limitation was only to use it as an entering-wedge, that all must concede that the proposition as made in this bill to authorize the purchase and registry of foreign-built vessels for any trade is the only practicable and frank form in which the question can be presented. This is, of course, the end which the free-ship advocates seek, and it is fairer and better to meet the issue without evasion or deception. Presented in this form there is no chance for deception. If it were proposed to limit the free-ship policy to vessels for the foreign trade, some persons might fail to see the impossibility of long excluding any American vessel from the coastwise trade, and might fail to recognize the certainty that the granting of free ships for the foreign trade would assuredly soon result in free ships for the coastwise trade.

But with the whole plan frankly presented no one will be deceived by the plea that the exclusion of foreign-built ships from the coastwise trade will make a demand for ships built in American yards, and thus preserve the art of ship-building in this country. The adoption of the free-ship policy is practically a confession not only that we must not attempt to build vessels now, because we can buy them more cheaply abroad, but also a confession that we must not expect to do so in the future. For if we are to discourage investments in the plants necessary to build up great iron-ship yards in this country by allowing the free registry of foreign-built vessels, it can not be expected that we shall be in a better condition to compete with long-established British ship-yards ten years hence than we are now.

Stripped of all disguises, the bill should be entitled "A bill to close American ship-yards and provide for the construction hereafter in British ship-yards of whatever vessels may be wanted for the American merchant marine."

The justification offered for such a policy as this is the alleged necessity which exists for purchasing our vessels where we can buy them the cheapest, in order to enable the capitalists of this country to invest their money in the business of transporting our exports and imports, and reap our proper share of the $150,000,000 annually paid for such transportation.

Gentlemen who present this as the argument for free ships forget that there are no laws now standing in the way of an investment of American capital in foreign-built ships and participation in the profits of the foreign carrying trade. American capitalists can now own all but seven shares of a British-built and British-registered steamship and reap almost every dollar of its profits. Indeed, Americans may simply charter a British-built vessel, which can be done at a less annual cost than to own one, and obtain all the profits of the carrying trade. If it be said that this necessitates the sailing of the vessel under a British register, I reply that it is cheaper to sail a vessel under a British than under an American register; and as the whole argument rests on the correctness of the policy of buying where we can buy cheapest, there is the same reason for sailing vessels under a British register as for buying British-built vessels. Indeed, the reason is stronger, because far more money can be saved by sailing a vessel under a British register and flag than in the purchase of a British-built vessel.

In other words, if the end sought is to secure our share of the profits of the foreign carrying trade, then the opportunity for this is best opened by an investment in ships sailing under a British register—an investment already permitted by the laws of the two countries. A prominent ship-owner of New York remarked in my hearing a few months ago, "When I divest myself of my patriotic instincts sufficiently to go to a British ship-yard to buy a ship in order to save a little money, I shall be likely to sail that ship under a British register in order to save much more money; for the difficulty in competing with British vessels is not in the difference in the first cost—which is but trifling—but in the increased expense of running them under our flag after they are built."

A gentleman having large interests in an American steamship line informs me that his company not long ago submitted plans for a new first-class steamship to American and English builders, and found that the ship could be built on the Clyde for from 10 to 12 per cent. less than in this country, which, distributed over the thirty or forty years' life of an iron vessel, is a small consideration. But he found that the difference in the cost of running a steamship under American and British auspices, growing out of higher wages of permanent employés and better food, &c., demanded on an American vessel, presented the really serious obstacle. Indeed within the past year the only American transatlantic steamship line has sold its American-built vessels, and they are now being sailed under a foreign flag because they can be run more cheaply.

To-day we can build first-class sailing vessels as cheaply as any of our competitors—vessels that are finer and better than any that sail the ocean notwithstanding they are built of wood; and yet while nearly two-fifths in bulk of our exports and imports are carried in sailing vessels, scarcely one-third of those two-fifths is carried in our vessels, and this proportion is diminishing.

Surely if the difference in the first cost of our vessels is the chief element in the problem of restoring our merchant marine to the position which they held on the ocean up to 1855, as the free-ship advocates assume, we should not find ourselves distanced so completely in the competition for the transportation of merchandise which is still carried by sailing vessels. In the face of such facts as these why do gentlemen continue to contend that if we had the privilege of importing foreign-built vessels and having them registered as vessels of the United States, free of duty, then we should be able to sail them in competition with foreign vessels? Nothing is clearer than that if we can devise a policy to enable our people to successfully sail vessels after they are built in competition with foreigners we shall have no difficulty in eventually building them as successfully and even as cheaply as the ship-yards of Great Britain.

The adoption of the free-ship policy would be practically an invitation not simply to buy foreign-built vessels but also to sail them under British registers after they are built. Such a policy would serve to extinguish the commendable and I may also say the indispensable patriotic instinct nurtured so sedulously by the founders of our Government, which leads an American to look upon an American-built and American-registered ship as "representing the power, the ambition, the wealth, the prestige, the prosperity, and the civilization" of the United States, as was so well said in another body a few days ago by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

This brings me, Mr. Chairman, to the consideration of a most serious objection to the free-ship policy, and that is that it not only would not increase the foreign carrying trade done under our flag, but also that there is reason to fear that it would have the reverse effect. When the people of this country are educated to look upon a ship as nothing but a wagon, to be bought abroad where it can be bought cheapest, they will also be educated to sail such a ship under the British register and the British flag, which will give an opportunity for the largest profits.

It should be borne in mind that ship-building and ship-using rise and fall together. In every maritime nation it is the ship-builders that inaugurate and participate in the establishment of maritime enterprises. Destroy ship-building in the United States by admitting foreign-built ships to our registry free of duty, and you will at the same time cripple the men upon whom our maritime enterprises must mainly rely. Gentlemen who inveigh against American ship-builders and charge them with standing in the way of a larger use of ships under a free-ship policy can not have investigated the facts, for it is to the indomitable energy and courage of these men that we mainly owe the maintenance of the large tonnage which we still possess.

Gentlemen must not forget that in spite of the disadvantages under which we labor in respect to shipping since the great revolution from wood to iron and sails to steam, yet to-day the tonnage of the United States is second only to that of Great Britain. Our tonnage is nearly four times as large as that of either Germany or France, and our tonnage in the foreign trade alone is considerably larger than that of either of these nations. Our steam tonnage alone is nearly double that of France and three times that of Germany. In the past five years the ship-builders of the United States have built more tons of shipping than France, Germany, and Italy put together have constructed. In 1884 Germany built only 54,727 tons of shipping, while there were built in the United States 225,514 tons, valued at over $12,000,000. Even in the past year, notwithstanding the unexampled depression in shipping all over the world, we built 159,050 tons, valued at $9,000,000, and over 30,000 tons were built for the foreign trade. And yet some gentlemen seem to have the impression that ship-building is already a lost art with us, and therefore that no ship-building industry remains to be destroyed by free ships.

History shows that no nation has ever been able to gain and maintain a maritime supremacy unless it built its own vessels. The Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the Greeks, the Italians, the Carthagenians, the Spaniards, and the Dutch held in turn the empire of the sea, but only so long as they could build their own vessels.

My friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] alleges that when England found that she could not build wooden vessels as cheaply as the Americans, at a time when wooden sailing vessels controlled the ocean carrying trade of the world, she repealed her navigation laws, gave her merchants free ships, and from that hour went on conquering and to conquer in the great contest for maritime supremacy.

That assertion has been often made, but never sustained by official facts. In the first place, Great Britain did not adopt the free-trade policy as to ships until after she had adopted that policy as to all other industries; and not until she believed it had been demonstrated that the iron steamship was to become the ocean carrier of the future, and that in the construction of such vessels, on account of the juxtaposition of abundant iron and coal mines near her sea-shore and the possession of cheap labor to work them, she could defy the competition of the world.

Indeed, the maritime history of Great Britain shows most conclusively that had it not been for the revolution in marine architecture from wood to iron and sails to steam, which enabled England to build her own vessels, the free-ship policy would have been disastrous to her merchant marine. The free-ship policy took effect at the beginning of 1850. Unexpected delay in the success of iron steamships put England for four or five years in the position of relying to some extent on Americans to build her vessels. Now, if the free-ship policy was wise, if it has built up British shipping, this result must have been manifest between 1850 and 1855, when it was doing its work on British shipping under far more favorable conditions than would now be afforded in this country.

Yet the official statistics show that it was during this period that American shipping made its greatest growth and British shipping had its slowest progress. In these five years the merchant marine of the United States increased 1,977,985 tons, while that of the United Kingdom increased only 894,828 tons, notwithstanding the largely increased demand for ships during this period. Mr. W. S. Lindsey, the most prominent promoter of the British legislation of 1849, concedes that if it had not been for the revolution in marine architecture, which made it practicable for England to build her own vessels under a free-ship policy, she would have been beaten in the contest for marine supremacy. In his History of Merchant Shipping, speaking of the first year's results of that policy, he says:

> Our [the British] ship-owners naturally viewed with great alarm the rapid strides made by American shipping. Nor were their fears allayed by a reference to the board of trade returns, wherein it appeared that while the increase of British shipping had in the year previous to repeal been 393,955 tons, there had been a decrease in the year after repeal of 180,576 tons. Our position appeared, therefore, critical; and had it not been for the resources we held within ourselves [referring to iron, coal, and cheap labor] and the indomitable energy of our people, foreign shipping might then and there have gained an ascendency which might not afterward have been easily overcome. * * * We had one advantage which our great American competitor did not possess. We had iron in abundance, and about this period we were specially directing our attention to the construction of iron ships to be propelled by the screw.

Speaking subsequently of the contest for supremacy of the seas between 1853 and 1854, the same distinguished English ship-builder says:

A very large amount of capital had been invested by Americans in the famous ships employed in the California trade; but even these before the close of 1854 were becoming unremunerative, owing to the competition of British iron and screw steamers, which were the main weapon whereby we bade defiance to the competition of all other nations in the general ocean race then just commenced.—Lindsey's Merchant Shipping, page 358.

The whole subject was carefully investigated by the Italian Government in 1883, which, notwithstanding Italy had enjoyed all the alleged benefits of a free-ship policy for twenty years, found that the Italian merchant marine had steadily declined for eight years, and that of 2,904,969 tons of merchandise landed at or shipped from Italian ports in the year 1882 only 293,883 tons were carried in Italian steamers. Referring to the views of Italian statesmen on the unsatisfactory results of the free-ship policy, United States Consul Crain, at Milan, in a report to the State Department under date of November 5, 1883, said:

Italians have been at liberty for more than twenty years to buy steamships on the Clyde or elsewhere, but this privilege has done nothing for the expansion of the steam marine. The policy of free ships has had a long trial in France, Germany, Austria, and other countries with no better result. History affords no example of a sea-going people who were not also a ship-building people. The industries of ship-building and navigation are so wedded by a community of interests that they can not be divorced without mutual destruction. Flourishing ship-yards levy a tribute upon the skill, labor, and resources of a country, and direct its attention and energies to sea-going enterprises as nothing else can. Even if this were not so, the difficulties of negotiating the purchase on favorable terms of costly steamships in distant countries, or of arranging credits, of securing the faithful construction of types required for particular services, and other apparent disadvantages, would be sure to bring disappointment to a people trusting to foreign ship-yards for its marine. This is the view universally taken in Italy, and the aim will be to infuse life and vigor into ship-building establishments.

Alarmed at the unsatisfactory results of the free-ship policy, by a decree dated December 6, 1885, the Italian Government practically superseded that policy by offering a bounty of $2.89 per ton for all new wooden sailing vessels and $11.58 per ton for all new iron vessels constructed in Italy, and 65 cents per net ton navigation bounty for every 1,000 miles sailed.

France also found her free-ship policy so unsatisfactory that in 1881 she practicalty set it aside by offering a special construction bounty of 60 francs per ton gross for all iron or steel vessels and 20 francs per ton for wooden vessels constructed in French ship-yards, and by tendering a bounty of 30 cents per ton (double that allowed to a vessel built abroad) for every thousand miles sailed by French-built vessels. The comparative results of the free-ship and of the new policy on the French steam marine are shown by the official statistics to have been as follows: Increase of French steam marine in the five years previous to 1881, 27 per cent.; increase in the five years since, 78 per cent. Considering that the last two years of the latter period were years of unexampled depression of shipping, the excellent results of the change from a free-ship policy to a policy of encouraging the home construction of vessels in France are certainly noteworthy.

The steam tonnage of Germany at the close of 1885 was 413,943 tons, but little more than half that of France, while the steam tonnage of the United States was 1,494,917 tons. Evidently the astute statesman who guides the destinies of Germany is not satisfied with the free-ship policy, notwithstanding the cheapness of German labor and abundance and cheapness of German iron would seem to make such a policy safe in that country; for, by a decree of the government, dated April 6, 1885, a subsidy of $1,125,000 per annum, to commence July 1, 1886, has been voted for the establishment of lines of German steamships to China, Japan, and Australia, with the condition that the new vessels of these lines shall be German built and the repairs done in German yards.

The statement, therefore, that all maritime nations except the United States have adopted the free-ship policy is incorrect so far as it conveys the impression that the other maritime nations with which we are in competition treat foreign-built vessels the same as vessels constructed in their own yards—England alone excepted. France pays a construction bounty to vessels built in her own yards and a double navigation bounty to such vessels. Italy pays a construction bounty for vessels built in her own yards. Germany in her latest subventions to German steamship lines insists that the vessels shall be constructed in her own yards. England alone maintains the free-ship policy in practice, and simply for the reason that her insular position, the fortunate juxtaposition of coal and iron mines near her sea-shore and her cheap labor to work them enable her to build her steam-vessels in competition with the world. But even England sees to it that British steamship lines receive the benefit of her large postal subsidies. Several years ago a contract for carrying British mails was given to a German line, but as soon as the fact became generally known a protest was made in the House of Commons and was responded to with loud cheers, and since that time the British authorities have not ventured to make a practical application of the free-ship policy in the distribution of postal subsidies.

The fact remains that every maritime nation has gained its position on the ocean by adopting such a policy as would enable them to build their own vessels; and that no nation has gained a commanding position on the ocean which has relied upon foreign ship-yards for the construction of her ships.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I protest against the pending bill as not only the confessed abandonment of the ship-building industry in this country, but also as the adoption of a policy which will lead to the gradual extinguishment of that maritime spirit which leads to the navigation of the ocean. We may rest assured that if we can not devise a policy which will enable us to build our own vessels we shall utterly fail to maintain maritime enterprises. Ship-building and ship-using are not antagonistic, as some free-ship advocates would have us believe, but in every nation rise and fall together.

My friend from Arkansas seems to look forward to the admission of foreign-built vessels into our coastwise trade as affording a compensation in breaking down what he calls a "monopoly" and reducing rates of freight to our people. He overlooks the fact that the protection which has been given our vessels in the coastwise and internal trade has given the American people the lowest freight rates by water afforded by the home fleet of any nation, and at the same time has so promoted the interests of that branch of our shipping that to-day it exhibits a tonnage three times as large as the home fleet of Great Britain.

Mr. Chairman, the most serious objection to the policy of relying upon Great Britain to build our vessels for us because she is able now to construct them more cheaply than we can, is that such a policy would tend to subvert our commercial and national independence, and place both our foreign trade and our means of naval defense in time of war at her mercy.

The nation which is dependent upon any foreign nation for the construction of its vessels must find its foreign trade jeopardized whenever the country upon which it thus relies becomes a belligerent. If the country to which we look for our supply of vessels should become involved in war with the United States, gentlemen who tell us that a ship is nothing but a wagon to be bought anywhere in the cheapest market would begin to see that no nation can be assured of the means of transportation of its exports and imports unless it builds its own vessels. The people of the West and of the South, whose products are exported so largely, would then clearly recognize the fact that no nation can be commercially independent unless it can build its own vessels.

More vital still is the fact that the possession of a merchant marine built in our own ship-yards—yards which can be made available at a day's notice for the construction of cruisers and transports in case of war—is essential to national defense and national independence.

In the discussion in the House of Representatives May 4, 1789, on a bill to promote our navigation interests and insure the construction of vessels in our own ship-yards, Mr. Madison enforced the views which I have endeavored to present at this time, and said:

We have maritime dangers to guard against, and we can be secured in no other way. * * * We must pay for the national security.

I commend to gentlemen who insist that a ship is only a wagon to be bought anywhere—on the Clyde or the Tyne, or wherever it can be bought cheapest—the statesmanship of Madison who insisted that we must build our own vessels in order to protect the nation even if it cost us more to build them than they could be purchased for in Europe.

I see before me gentlemen who claim to be Jeffersonian Democrats, and who profess to be admirers of Jeffersonian principles. To such gentlemen I desire to commend the views which Mr. Jefferson expressed in his celebrated report on commerce when Secretary of State, as follows:

Our navigation involves still higher considerations. As a branch of industry it is valuable, but as a resource of defense it is essential. The position and circumstances of the United States leave them nothing to fear from their landboard, and nothing to desire beyond their present rights. But on the seaboard they are open to injury; and they have then, too, a commerce which must be protected. This can only be done by possessing a respectable body of citizen seamen and artists, and establishments in readiness for ship-building.

It seemed clear to such patriots and statesmen as Washington, Madison, and Jefferson that an American merchant marine could be maintained only by building our vessels in home ship-yards, and that such ship-yards were essential for national safety and defense. It is impossible for any nation to maintain navy-yards of sufficient extent to do more than repair public vessels and to slowly construct a few naval vessels in time of peace.

Admiral Porter, in his testimony before the Senate Naval Committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, referring to the dependence of every nation on its private ship-yards, said:

As a matter of policy Great Britain encourages private ship-building yards. The salvation of the country in case of war would depend on these; and we should follow the example of Great Britain. * * * When war comes we should have these great ship-building places, with their plant accumulated during peace.

What would have been the result of the appearance of the confederate iron-clad Merrimac in Northern waters if the Government of the United States had been obliged to send to England to have an iron-clad built to cope with her? In all probability if there had not been private ship-yards in this country capable of building a monitor in a hundred days the Merrimac would have appeared in our unprotected harbors as a messenger of destruction, would have broken the blockade of Southern ports, and probably have secured the recognition of the confederacy by France and Great Britain. It is a fact recognized by history that the rebellion was dealt its most deadly blow by the blockading fleet, which cut off its supplies, and this fleet could not have been constructed if we had not possessed extensive private ship-yards. Nearly three hundred vessels, of over 160,000 tons burden, were built for our Navy in our private ship-yards during the civil war, and five hundred vessels were drawn in addition from our merchant marine.

The eyes of the country are turned to the defenseless condition of our coasts in consequence of the weakness of our Navy. But a powerful navy is the offspring of a great merchant marine built in a nation's own ship-yards. Look over the nations of the world and it will be found that navies rise and fall with their merchant marine, and that the merchant marines increase or decline with the growth or decay of the art of ship-building. Great navies are never built in navy-yards. The United States has eight navy-yards, but almost no navy. England has only three navy-yards and the strongest navy in the world. Four-fifths of her naval vessels and marine engines were built in private ship-yards. It has been her policy to give every possible assistance to the establishment and maintenance of great ship-yards, because she has recognized the fact that no nation could maintain its maritime prestige or successfully defend itself in time of war unless it built its own vessels and had in readiness the means of rapidly enlarging its fleet in time of need. Great Britain has taken care not to break down the wall of protection for her shipping until she was satisfied that she had secured a position which would enable her to build her own vessels in competition with the world. It would be well-nigh national suicide for the United States at the present juncture to abandon all efforts to establish and extend great iron-ship yards, and to adopt the policy of having our ships built in British establishments on the Clyde and Tyne.

Important as are many other questions before this Congress not one of them is of greater importance and of more far-reaching consequences than this. We are already a republic of nearly 58,000,000 people. In 1890 our population will exceed 65,000,000, and in twenty-five years it will reach 100,000,000. It can not be possible that such a nation as this intends to deliberately announce to the world that it proposes to give up all efforts to devise a policy whereby we may be able to build our own ships and to depend hereafter on Great Britain for whatever vessels we may need. Before we commit ourselves to this policy it will be wise for us to consider that all history teaches that no people can permanently maintain their prestige unless they strengthen their position on the ocean as well as on the land, and that no nation can gain and maintain maritime supremacy unless it builds its own vessels. [Great applause.]

Mr. ROMEIS. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take part in this debate. I had intended to leave any time that would be allotted to me to others more able than myself. But being the only member on the committee from the northern lakes, I believed it to be my duty to call the attention of the House to the great injury, in my opinion, that would result to ship-building on the chain of lakes should this bill become a law.

Mr. Chairman, there were upon the northern lakes on June 30, 1885, the following shipping: Sailing vessels, 1,322; steam vessels, 1,175; boats, 771; barges, 111; a total tonnage of 749,948.49. All of this, except about fifty vessels, were of wood. They were all built in the United States. There were built last year 30 sailing vessels, 64 steamers, 18 boats, and 5 barges, or a total tonnage of 22,294.24, showing that we are constantly building vessels of both steam and sail. It follows that the building of these one hundred and seventeen bottoms necessarily gives employment to many skilled mechanics and laborers of all kinds, not only in building the vessels, but also in fitting and furnishing the same.

The bill now before the House allows a citizen of the United States to go to a foreign country and buy or cause to be built steam or sailing vessels, all furnished and complete, and bring them to this country and have them registered as American vessels, to the great injury of American capital invested in ship-building, and depriving American labor of the benefit of the capital that should be employed in our own country.

Our people advocating free ships have heretofore confined their demands to the ocean-carrying trade, or in other words would have our people allowed to buy their ships for foreign commerce wherever they pleased. But this bill goes much farther. This bill proposes to sweep away all the protection we have had in the coastwise and inland trade as well.

I never learned the object of including the coastwise and inland shipping in this bill. We are constantly building vessels for that trade, without asking the Government for material assistance. Of course it will not discourage the building of steamboats on the rivers of the interior, remote from foreign countries, like the Ohio, the Mississippi, and all the Southern rivers.

Owing to the proximity of the Dominion of Canada, and the fact that our vessels are largely built of wood (and if of iron they no doubt would be sent from England in sections) ship-owners would naturally go to the Dominion of Canada for their vessels which they may want in the lake trade. Why? Because Canada can build them cheaper than we can build them here. I see by the Toledo papers that a company has been incorporated with a capital of $1,000,000 for the purpose of building a number of fast lake steamers to be run between Toledo and Buffalo. If this bill passes these steamers in all probability will be built and furnished in some port in Canada, and one million of American capital would go into Canadian coffers, to be lost to us with interest forever. Not only this, but the Dominion of Canada is full of old hulks, both steam and sail, which were built and used in the lake trade through Canada before the Erie Canal was free from toll, many of which are now out of service for want of employment.

Mr. Chairman, if we pass this bill many of these old hulks will be bought and put in the trade of our side to become coffins for American sailors. You may say, Mr. Chairman, that the United States has inspectors whose duty it is to "inspect" such vessels. Yes, that is true; we have some old politicians, but as when they are appointed they are not examined as to color blindness they often overlook great defects.

I am told, Mr. Chairman, that there are now lying in the river Saint Clair some of these hulks waiting for this bill to pass to be put under the American flag. What a pitiable spectacle would it be for Americans to see our capital go from Buffalo, Detroit, Port Huron, and other lake cities which have plants for ship-building and furnishing, while our mechanics stand idle on the docks and looking on. It is believed by our people on the northern lakes that this bill will destroy ship-building on the lakes and turn it into Canada, and that without increasing our shipping, because men will not buy ships for the reason that they get them cheaper, unless they are reasonably sure of employment for their vessels, for ships will not improve like "wine, with age."

What applies to the lakes will apply to the ocean. England, it is said, has a thousand ships idle, although she has free ships. Every old ship we would buy of her will put two new ones on the stocks and give employment to her mechanics. I take it that we were not sent here to legislate for English interest. England is the only nation that would be benefited by this bill.

Mr. Chairman, we must look to another source to build up our ship-building. We furnish the money for national banks to do business with, we have given millions of acres of land and secured the bonds of some railroads to aid them in building lines through new and sparsely settled portions of our country for the purpose of developing it. We are deepening rivers and harbors. Why should we not give aid in the same manner to encourage our shipping interests, and thus keep our capital at home and give employment to our mechanics and laborers?

The Government of the United States refuses to sustain its steamship lines even to the extent which third-class nations sustain theirs, and while expending millions of dollars on mail-routes on land which do not pay expenses refuses to apply the same principle to commerce on the sea.

Private citizens have patriotically endeavored to restore the American flag to the proud position it once occupied on the ocean, but have gone down before the competition of foreigners who were backed by their governments. I hold in my hand a pamphlet of the Maritime Association of the United States. It treats this question so fully and yet concisely that I will ask leave to print it with my remarks.

In speaking of the fine steamers a French company is building to run between Havre and New York, I will cite from the statistics, for example, one of the French steamers of 8,000 tons. France pays to the steamer for the round trip between Havre and New York $14,500.

The American steamers would receive from our Government nothing, besides being sailed at greater expense.

Neither free ships nor free material can surmount this disability.

Mr. Chairman, what condition would we be in in case of war? It has often been said that a merchant marine is the militia of the ocean, and it is no doubt true. We could get men to sail our ships in a short time, but it takes time to build the vessels.

Let us suppose that war should be declared between England and the United States, what condition would we be in on the northern lakes, cut off from the ocean, no water way on which we could bring gunboats or war ships; our plant for ship-building destroyed, our skilled mechanics scattered, perhaps gone to Oklahoma to raise wheat which England would not buy because she can buy it cheaper in India? Shall we say to England: "Hold on, we are not ready yet; we have no ships to fight you with; we have abandoned our ship-building to you; our plants have been destroyed, and our mechanics have turned farmers? We want you to build us ships first, to protect the shipping which you built for us and to protect our lake cities." Would England wait until we were ready? Or would she proceed to destroy our shipping and lake cities, where torpedoes could not be located in numbers sufficient to keep her ships from doing our ports great damage?

Mr. Chairman, are we to stand sponsors to England, or any other nation who may be involved in war, by allowing selfish men to put our flag on foreign vessels sailed by foreign crews and only the American flag on the masthead? The passage of this bill would render us liable to be put in that position and thereby, sooner or later, be involved in foreign complication.

Mr. Chairman, I have been a wage-worker for thirty-five years or more as a sailor and railroad man. I laid aside the lantern to take a seat in the Halls of Congress, and when I leave I expect to take up one of these vocations again. But while I have a voice and a vote in this House I shall not give it for a proposition that will in my opinion destroy capital invested in American industries, thereby throwing out of employment thousands of workingmen who are directly dependent upon that capital. For that reason I shall vote against this bill. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The article to which I have referred, from the Maritime Association of New York, is as follows:

The propriety of the Government assisting American shipping is urged, because its preservation is of vital importance to the nation. In presenting its claims for support, questions of free trade and tariff have unavoidably arisen, for while it is generally conceded that some measure of relief should be given, diversity of opinion exists as to method. Some advocate granting to the foreign-built ship, when purchased by an American, a United States registry; others, the admission free of duty of foreign materials needed for constructing the ship, so giving to American labor some share in its production; a few claim that free trade in all commodities is the sure way, and in proof cite our great progress in tonnage from 1848 to 1860. The more numerous class recommend the French mileage system as the most direct and certain remedy, as it preserves to us the art of building and sailing ships, furnishes employment to our laborers in producing the materials of construction and fashioning them into shapes of utility and beauty, assuring to the ship-owner reasonable return for the increased cost of his vessel and the greater expense he is at for its victualing and manning as compared with his competitors.

If the question is regarded as national, it may be considered independently of any relation to the tariff. We consider it as national, because this nation, with its 5,700 miles of seacoast bordering upon the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, has peculiar need of a navy. We maintain but a small army—absurdly small but for the fact that our militia system enables us to create an army as if by magic. The Navy should be in similar condition.

Our Navy is almost insignificant, and it is highly important that the country should have a merchant marine out of which it may, on occasion, quickly augment its naval force.

In the past it has contributed greatly to our success upon sea and land, notably in 1812-'15, in the war with Mexico, and in 1861-'65. England in the Crimean war used for transport and store-ships much of her merchant tonnage and some of ours; and again quite recently, when hostility threatened, she seized upon the best, largest, and fastest of these vessels to forward her troops, ammunition, and stores, notwithstanding her immense naval strength.

She has to-day in her merchant service over two hundred thousand men out of which to strengthen the navy. This country, if attacked at all, must be attacked from over-sea, just at the point of weakness in which it is daily growing more vulnerable. Why so much concern for coast defenses, so little interest in naval preparation? The coast defenses are to resist naval attack. Would it not be wise to meet naval attack with naval resistance?

In our own country we have demonstrated the weakness of modern coast defense, even against the hull of wood when that hull was fought by hearts of steel.

For peaceful purposes the foreign tonnage is also important for the country. We need more and enlarged markets for its various products and manufactures. Can we secure and supply them when we allow our rivals to monopolize all channels of communication with foreign lands, and the route to us is indirect and tortuous?

The great and prosperous shops in great cities do not thrive by locating in the by-ways and lanes, but on the great thoroughfares where access is easy, continuous, and rapid. It is the law of trade to move in such ways, and it is as true upon the sea as upon the land. England has recognized this, and paid liberally to open such means of communication. France sees its importance, and to reach such result has adopted a method similar to this for which we ask, and to-day under its stimulus there are being built for one French steamship company five of the most magnificent steamers ever constructed, to ply between Havre and New York, while this great country, four centuries after its discovery by Columbus, has not a single steamship line between here and Europe, and competition with the foreign lines already established under present conditions is simply impossible.

Take, for example, one of these French steamers of 8,000 tons. France pays to the steamer for the round trip between Havre and New York about $14,500. The American steamer would receive from our Government nothing, besides being sailed at a greater expense. Neither free ship nor free materials can surmount this disability.

A further gain to the nation by increasing our foreign tonnage would be that it would tend to increase the balance of trade in our favor. If the entire import and export trade were carried on in our own vessels, it is apparent that we should realize nearly the entire sale price of our exports at the foreign market, not, as now, the price at the shipping point; and for our imports we should pay out in the foreign market only the sale price there, because the most of the freight charges upon the articles would be returned to or retained among our own people.

In this way we should follow another sound law of trade, of selling at the highest price and buying at the lowest. To whatever extent, then, that we can control this trade shall we add to our receipts and diminish our outlay; and this item of freight must amount to many million dollars annually. We might appeal to the national pride, but that in some quarters is deemed sentiment and not business; that the nationality of the vessel on which one takes passage is a matter of utter indifference; still we confess to a feeling of sadness at the thought of our flag disappearing from three-fourths of the surface of the globe, and it seems to us that the ingulfing sea would seem less cruel if as our ship went down our eyes should behold the flag of our country still floating above us.

We will briefly state, not the theoretical, but the real and known causes of our rapid gain in the ocean tonnage from 1848 to about 1860, and its rapid and almost continuous decline since.

The causes for increase were: In 1846 the Mexican war, calling for a considerable transport fleet; 1846-'47, famine in Ireland, large demand for our cereals and enormous increase of emigration from Europe, causing high freight rates; 1848 discovery of gold in California, and 1851 discovery of gold in Australia—both points remote from England and our Atlantic coast—large numbers emigrating to the mines, requiring shelter, food, raiment, and all necessities of life having to be carried thousands of miles by sea; 1854 Crimean war, requiring an immense fleet of transports.

These were the stimulating causes, and the wooden ship then being the best, we, having the wood in greater abundance and cheaper than other maritime nations, built most tonnage, selling some to our rivals.

About 1860, the ship constructed of iron was gaining in favor, and rates of freight had so greatly declined, that the cost of sailing and victualing ships was beginning to excite much attention. Then followed the insecurity of cargo in American vessels, compelling them to accept lower freight rates than others, and the sale of much of our tonnage ensued, so that in 1865, when our flag was again secure upon the sea, we had lost about one-third (861,000 tons) of our foreign tonnage, while the tonnage of England had greatly increased.

The iron ship was preferred; we were without the plant for its construction, although we had the material, skill, and labor needed, but at too great cost to hope to compete with the English builders. The decline has continued until now, when the foreign trade tonnage of the country on the Atlantic coast is less than in 1810, and should present conditions continue it must soon disappear entirely.

We are aware that many of our countrymen of pronounced loyalty advocate the doctrine of "free ships" as the remedy. We can not concur in that view, believing it would be opening the way for the destruction of our coastwise tonnage. It certainly would be destructive of the art of ship-building among us, and we have our doubts increased as to the efficacy of this plan, by finding that the nation which has been most successful in driving us from the sea is especially desirous for us to adopt it.

Does it not occur to you that this nation, which expects perchance to sell us ships, is of the same tongue and kindred as ourselves, and that in case of her engaging in war, it would be most convenient and profitable to have us act as sponsors for her tonnage until the war should terminate?

The "free ship" presents for solution this economic problem:

One of the chief profits of money is its interest-earning capacity. Suppose we can purchase abroad for $800,000 a ship which will cost $1,000,000 if produced here. The question is, whether it is better that the purchaser should gain $200,000 and the nation lose the $800,000 and the interest thereon forever (the money going out of the country to employ foreign labor), or that the $1,000,000 should be retained at home and circulated among our own trades-people, giving work to many unemployed, gladdening many hearts—the nation assuring for a limited time to the merchant a fair return for the capital so invested? That is the problem. If it is not well to adopt the free-ship plan, that of "free materials" is unworthy of consideration.

The protection necessary to maintain this industry is of the same nature as affects any other. It is the product of the mine, the farm, the manufactory that is protected, not the plant. It is the freight or product of the ship which we can not produce or earn as cheaply as our rivals that needs protection, and this the mileage system accomplishes.

Our claim then is justified if you believe the nation requires foreign commerce; for naval defense in case of war, for extension of our intercourse and trade with other nations in time of peace, increasing the amount realized from our exports, and lessening the sum paid out for imports.

Objection to the free ship is, that it encourages foreign and discourages American ship-building, places us at great disadvantage in case of war, may burden us with protecting the commercial marine of a rival nation, and will be destructive of our coastwise tonnage. It is un-American, diverting the capital of the country by employing foreign labor, while our laborers stand idle in the market-place.

May it not be as wise to devote some portion of the surplus revenue of the country to building up this important industry as to deepen harbors and channels for the accommodation of the vessels of other nations?

NEW YORK, February, 1886.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes from the special committee appointed by the Speaker to take into consideration the subject of ship-building and ship-owning interests in the United States. The committee was appointed in January last, and on March 25 thereafter reported this bill.

What are the merits and demerits of the measure which they have reported after so long a time spent in consideration? The objects of the bill, as I understand them, are—first, to admit to an American registry free of duty ships built in any and every country; and, second, to admit likewise into this country free of duty all materials entering into the composition of ships. These materials as named in the bill are—

All or any part of the materials, whether wood, steel or iron, copper, yellow metal, bolts, spikes, sheathing, trenails, canvas for sails, whether flax or cotton, rigging and cordage, whether hemp, manila-hemp, or iron wire, anchors and cables, iron plates, castings and forgings, angle-irons, beams, masts, yards, rivets, bolts, nuts, screws, boiler plates and tubes, and all other materials which may be necessary for the construction and equipment in whole or in part of vessels.

This is a measure which vitally affects the interests of our whole seaboard and our lake front. Let us examine from whence the bill emanates. The members of this special committee as originally appointed were Messrs. DUNN of Arkansas, HOLMAN of Indiana, MILLS of Texas, KING of Louisiana, BLISS of New York, Rankin of Wisconsin, MCMILLIN of Tennessee, COMSTOCK of Michigan, DINGLEY of Maine, WADSWORTH of Kentucky, OSBORNE of Pennsylvania, FELTON of California, and ROMEIS of Ohio. Mr. MILLS afterward withdrew and Mr. CULBERSON, from the same State, took his place. Subsequently, upon the death of Mr. Rankin, Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

There have been presented in connection with the majority report the views of the minority, strongly opposing the passage of this bill and signed by six of the thirteen members of that committee, namely: Messrs. DINGLEY, WADSWORTH, OSBORNE, BLISS, FELTON, and ROMEIS. Of these six five are put down in the Congressional Directory as having been elected as Republicans, and one, Mr. BLISS, of New York, as a Democrat. This leaves as the members of the Committee voting in favor of reporting this bill Messrs. DUNN, HOLMAN, HAMMOND, KING, MCMILLIN, COMSTOCK, and CULBERSON—a bare majority of the committee. Each one of these gentlemen must have so voted, because united they form but a bare majority, and the vote of each one was necessary to order the report. I am reliably informed that, in fact, one was not present when the vote was taken, and his vote must have been cast by proxy. These seven are all entered in the Directory as having been elected upon the Democratic ticket.

Let us see—and I do it in no captious spirit; I do it with no desire except to inform the country as to the facts—let us see from what localities these gentlemen reporting in favor of this measure, which so vitally affects the interests of our whole Atlantic and Pacific seacoast and our lake front, come. I find that one is from Forest City, Ark.; another is from Aurora, Ind.; another from Atlanta, Ga.; another from Vidalia, La.; another from Jefferson, Tex.; another from Grand Rapids, Mich., and the seventh is from Carthage, Tenn. These places may be all large and growing seaport towns, but unfortunately they are not so laid down on any atlas which I have consulted. I understand that one or two, perhaps three, of these cities—I will not speak of them as villages; Atlanta is certainly a growing city—are situated by the sides of streams which afford fair navigation for young ducks at seasons of unusually high water.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not that policy concerning our foreign carrying trade which benefits one American citizen benefit every American citizen?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It ought to, and generally I believe it does.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then should we not seek to adopt that policy which will benefit every American citizen irrespective of where we live?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We ought, and therefore I am surprised at the majority report. The bill benefits nobody, but on your principle strikes a disastrous blow at the whole people. It is not to the discredit of these gentlemen that they come from these inland towns. No doubt they are honored in their respective localities. The fact that they are here gracing and honoring this House by their presence shows they are honored and respected where they are best known. But it does seem to me that this fact of their location is not necessarily a qualification for the wise performance of their duty as members of this committee. They certainly do not compose a "jury of the vicinage." I have given you the location of every one, and so far as I can find there is not a seacoast or lake-front town or port represented in that majority report. That may be a coincidence; I am bound to presume it is. But I find one or two further coincidences. The State of New York, whose principal port had last year a commerce of $724,592,509 of exports and imports, and paid 68.98 per cent. of all the duties collected in the United States, has but one member of the committee, while Texas, whose principal port, Galveston, had during the same period a commerce in exports and imports of $13,836,524, has equal representation. The port of Boston, Mass., which last year imported $53,445,929 and exported $62,000,103, has no representation. Neither has Baltimore, with her $11,849,696 of imports and $45,052,904 of exports.

Now what is it that these gentlemen have reported, and what great interest of this country is it that they would destroy? I use the words advisedly, "that they would destroy." For the year ending June 30, 1885, the total tonnage of the United States was 4,265,934 tons. Of this there was engaged in the foreign trade 1,262,814 tons; in the coasting trade 2,895,371 tons; in the whale fisheries, 25,184; and in the cod fisheries, 82,565 tons; making, as I have said before, an aggregate of 4,265,934 tons. This is slightly larger than at any time since 1876, except that in the year 1884 it was exceeded by 5,295 tons.

The changes are being constantly rung upon our "decaying commerce," yet we have the second largest tonnage in the world. As has just been remarked by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]:

> To-day the tonnage of the United States is second only to that of Great Britain. Our tonnage is nearly four times as large as that of either Germany or France, and our tonnage in the foreign trade alone is considerably larger than that of either of those nations.

If any one will study the tables contained in the last report on commerce and navigation he will be convinced that our tonnage is not decaying, but that it is simply stationary, or upon the whole slightly increasing in amount. We built for the year ending June 30, 1885, 920 vessels with a tonnage of 159,056 tons. This tonnage was composed of 5 ships, 3 barks, 3 barkentines, 379 schooners, and 143 sloops; this includes only sailing vessels. The previous year we built 225,514 tons of a value exceeding $12,000,000. Our commerce, at least for the past decade, has not been decaying, and yet I frankly admit that our ocean carrying trade is not in that condition in which any American with his heart in the right place would desire to have it. In the palmy days of the clippper ship we sent our sails to every known port. That ship has practically disappeared. There are reasons for it. The costly steamship, the "greyhound of the seas," has taken her place. England had the costly plant to produce it, and the ever-ready subsidy to run it. With the constant menace to enterprise of bills like the one under consideration capital here hesitates to erect such expensive plant, and with the discrimination against our vessels in carrying the mails, the Government hinders instead of helps.

Beside we have been developing this great country of ours. I never realized so fully until recently, as I spent day after day speeding across our Western prairies and through the far-reaching expanses of Texas, what a vast country we have and what an enormous amount of work remains to be done to subject it to the hand of man. We have been busily engaged in carving out homes for ourselves here upon this virgin soil and have been content that this ocean carrying trade should be done by other nations. The ocean freights have been so low that brain and enterprise and capital have sought employment and remuneration elsewhere, and particularly in constructing the thousands of miles of new railways and developing our enormous internal trade and domestic commerce.

There is another reason. Twenty-five years ago our ocean carrying trade was struck a blow from which it has not yet recovered. In looking over the figures I find that during the late war, because of reasons known to all, a large proportion of our vessels was put under other flags; thus in 1861 there were American vessels sold to foreigners aggregating 26,649 tons; in 1862, 117,756 tons; in 1863, 222,199 tons; in 1864, 300,865 tons; in 1865, 133,832 tons, or a total from the firing on Sumter to the surrender of Lee of 801,301 tons. I make no comment upon these figures. I leave them with the country. They tell their own tale. You can trace the history of those statistics in the light of burning vessels left by the Alabama and other rebel cruisers.

Many other vessels, chartered or seized or bought by the Government, yielded to the exigencies of war and were forever lost to commerce.

Can we increase our tonnage by the means proposed by this bill? We may buy ships, but they will not be American ships. They may fly the American flag, but they will still be a foreign production. No plank, or sail, or timber will tell of American enterprise or American labor; no swelling line or saucy rake of mast will tell of American brain and American skill. As well let a Caucasian father count among his sons the imported Asiatic who toils over his linen. As well send to the Clyde for a yacht to outsail the Genesta instead of depending upon our own Puritan.

Why should these gentlemen from the interior press this bill upon us? We do not want it. The Maritime Association of the Port of New York and the national board of steam navigation protest against it. These boards make the pertinent observation, "We have our doubts increased as to the efficacy of this plan by finding that the nation which has been most successful in driving us from the sea is especially desirous for us to adopt it."

What interest can this committee have in pressing this bill? It will not benefit the interior. It can not make freights lower. They are below, far below, a paying point now. The tonnage of the world is now open—freely so—to the carriage of your cotton, your corn, your wheat. What more can you ask? The bill will simply transfer the ownership of some of that tonnage. It will enable a few capitalists in our great seaboard cities to buy steamships, but it will not enable them to run those steamships at rates lower, in any degree, than those at which they are now run.

But this bill will destroy our ship-building. It will bring ruin to many an American home. It will transfer to the Clyde the work now done on the Delaware. It will transfer to English workshops and Norwegian ship-yards the work now done upon American shores. It will beggar the American shipwright for the benefit of the foreign artisan. It will fill our northern lakes with Canadian craft, while our own rot at our wharves. At best it may possibly advantage a few merchant princes, but the people at large will receive no benefit whatever.

But I rose, Mr. Chairman, to more particularly call attention to the effect that in my judgment this measure will have upon our coasting trade. As has been seen by the figures which I have submitted, more than two-thirds of our tonnage is engaged in the coastwise and lake trades; in exact figures 2,895,371 tons. Of the large number of schooners and sloops built each year the greater number are intended for that trade.

The bill proposes to admit foreign vessels to an American registry and then allow them after they are thus admitted to ply wherever the owners may desire. I asked the question of the chairman of the committee—at least I endeavored to get his attention during his remarks but he did not yield and I have since asked him in private—whether that is the purpose of the bill, and he informs me it is; and certainly the bill can bear no other construction.

At the present time this coasting trade is entirely in our own hands. In it we have no foreign competition. As long as the laws of the land remain as they are it must remain in our hands. As the law now stands, no vessel built in a foreign country, unless captured in war or forfeited by law, can be admitted to an American registry. The law further provides that no vessel that is not of American registry can engage in the coasting trade. The result of those two provisions is that to-day, with the exceptions noted, no vessel can engage in the coasting trade unless she has been built in the United States, in our own ship-yards, by our own labor. No foreigner, no foreign vessel can enter into that trade. The honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. DUNN] says that he desires to break down that restriction, and I, for one, thank him for taking such bold and aggressive ground upon this question. I thank him for coming out fearlessly and telling us precisely what he wishes to do. We now know where to find him. He desires to break that down and to have the coastwise trade carried not merely in American-built bottoms, but in bottoms built in any portion of the world.

He proposes to surrender the American vessel to the English, the German, the Canadian, and the Norwegian. He gives as his reason that freights are too high; that the American vessels are levying a tax upon commerce, and that these American vessels have an odious monopoly of this trade.

I want to say to the gentleman that he can not produce figures to substantiate any statement that these coastwise vessels are levying an unduly large tax upon commerce. The fact is that to-day the freights earned by the coasting vessels are lower in proportion to other things than they have ever been before in the history of this country. The fact is that all along the coast we have lines of railway that compete for that trade, and the vessels engaged in the coastwise and lake trade are carrying freights much cheaper than were ever known before, and at rates not remunerative to the capital employed. There is an old adage, a homely one, but one that it is sometimes well enough to observe and live up to. It is this: Leave well enough alone. These freights are being carried exclusively by American vessels, commanded by American masters and manned by American sailors; the freight-money goes exclusively to Americans, and the freighter gets his wares transported at almost nominal cost. What more, in the name of all that is fair and just, can be asked?

This coast trade is no monopoly. Too many thousands of vessels are engaged in it to allow that to be possible. They are largely owned, in whole or in part, by the men who sail them, and competition is sharp and keen between them. My own State, small in area as she is, has a large water-front, stretching from nearly opposite Hastings-on-the-Hudson down the Hudson River, through the Kills, past Sandy Hook, down the Atlantic coast to the Delaware Capes, and up Delaware Bay and River to the head of tide water at Trenton. Quite two-thirds of her boundary is tide water. She owns one thousand and seventy-eight vessels—the greater proportion of them engaged in the coastwise trade. Many of these vessels are sailed to-day without a profit, some of them at an actual loss, and others lie idly at their wharves. Turn loose upon them the English "tramp" steamer and the Nova Scotian and Norwegian sailing vessels and they will rot in our streams. But if it were different, how could it affect you, gentlemen from the interior, who are forcing this bill upon us? These coastwise vessels do not carry the products of your sections. You ship your corn and wheat and cattle and cotton by rail to the most accessible seaport, and there lie now your loved English steamers ready to receive them. These coasters carry the trade from port to port on the coast and lakes. We are the freighters; we are the carriers; we alone are the parties in interest. It is alone our concern; and we say to you that we have not asked your help, and in all courtesy we must protest against your interference.

I want to thank the honorable chairman [Mr. DUNN] for another very frank expression of his. He did not hesitate in his speech to affirm that this is a free-trade measure, and I sat and listened to him with interest as he rehearsed the beauties and advantages of free trade and free ships. I want to thank him for being so honest—for having the courage of his convictions—for telling us without circumlocution just what the passage of this bill will mean. It will mean to the labor of this country, it will mean to the capital of this country, it will mean to the manufacturer of this country, that the Forty-ninth Congress is in its lower House a free-trade Congress, and ready to surrender to England's wishes as to free trade and free ships.

The whole country will so interpret it. The people will know that every vote cast for this bill is a vote cast in the direction of free trade and in the direction of breaking down our system of protection. The gentleman has made the issue fairly and squarely, and I thank him for it and for one accept the issue. He informs us that no nation ever went to the front in the world's carrying trade except under the policy of free trade and free ships. It was my fortune very recently to travel entirely through the State which is in part represented, and ably represented, on this floor by the distinguished chairman of the committee, and as I looked at the grand possibilities of that State, as I saw what magnificent things the God of Nature has done for its inhabitants, I observed that there was yet one thing lacking. Fertile as is their soil, broad as are their acres, gigantic as are their forests, marvelous as are all the gifts of nature to them, they yet are dependent upon those of us who live farther East for the fabrication of everything that they use and of everything that they wear, and I thought, Oh! that these broad acres were filled up, not only with an agricultural people wresting a hard-earned subsistence from the soil, but that here and there along these magnificent water courses were erected great factories in which could be made those articles which the people require and must use! What an advantage it would be! What a valuable addition to the resources of that State; and I, sir, am a better friend to him and to his section than he wots of when I stand in my place in this House and protest against the passage of any measure which will militate in any way against the maintenance of the protective system which makes such factories possible.

The gentleman tells us that the days of protection are past. Sir, as long as Americans shall preserve their patriotism, as long as the American laborer shall be intelligent enough to demand a proper recompense for his toil, as long as labor shall be crushed to the earth in other lands whether those lands be Europe, Africa, or Asia, just so long the protective system will endure in these United States of America, and instead of being past I say to that gentleman that much as I wish him long life, health, and prosperity, much as I wish that his days may be extended far beyond the limit allotted by the Psalmist, yet the grass will be growing green over his grave for many a year before America abandons her protective system.

A word in conclusion. I am an American, born on American soil, and reared in American ideas. By the grace of a portion of the American people I occupy for the time being a seat in the American Congress. I am sent here to legislate for the best interests of the American people, native and naturalized. I could not be faithful to that trust and not oppose this bill. No American interest will be subserved, no spirit of patriotism will be awakened, by seeing the American flag flying over an English, Canadian, or Norwegian built ship. That spectacle may satisfy those who advocate this bill, but as for me, give me an American-built ship, with an American master, manned by American seamen, and flying the American flag at her fore. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, if there is no other gentleman desiring to speak to-day, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7219) to amend sections 4132 and 2513 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States and to permit the same to be registered as vessels of the United States and to admit certain materials to be used in the construction of vessels free of duty, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

CONFEREES ON POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. In connection with the message from the House of Representatives announcing the appointment of a conference committee on the Post-Office appropriation bill, I desire to say that an error was committed in the appointment of the conferees on the part of the Senate upon that bill on Friday last, for which I was responsible. A moment before I made the motion that the Senate insist on its amendments I was in consultation with a member of the subcommittee on the agricultural appropriation bill, and without any thought about the matter at all, when the presiding officer called on me to name the conferees on the part of the Senate upon the Post-Office appropriation bill I named the subcommittee on the agricultural appropriation bill, the membership being the same except as to one member, and the name of Mr. CALL was announced as a member of the conference committee in place of Mr. BECK. I ask that the name of Mr. BECK be substituted for that of Mr. CALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the error being an inadvertence on the part of the Senator, it will be corrected in the Journal of Friday last, and Mr. BECK will take the place of Mr. CALL on the conference committee.

SPECIAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is now in order.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the individual pension bills on the Calendar in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has submitted a motion which is not debatable.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Wisconsin yields to me for a moment, however.

Mr. SAWYER. If I can do so without losing the floor. I will yield if the matter will not lead to any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first inquire if unanimous consent is given to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONGER. Does that interfere with the regular order, the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It makes a new order. It takes up the individual pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the Senator from Wisconsin ask?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of pension bills reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the first case will be reported.

Mr. CONGER. That means that we are to go through with the unobjected cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unobjected cases.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me a moment?

Mr. SAWYER. I will, if it does not lead to debate.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that Order of Business 999, being the bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes, be made a special order for May 31, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SEWELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the order can not be entered.

Mr. DOLPH. I make the motion that the order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to submit a motion pending the unanimous consent to proceed to an order except by unanimous consent. It is not in order to change that except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAWYER. Of course I do not object to the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Wisconsin yielded the floor to me for the purpose of making the motion. I made the motion the other day under the head of "concurrent or other resolutions," and the Chair ruled that the motion could not then be entertained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is objection it can not be taken up against the unanimous consent of the Senate. The Chair will again submit it. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SEWELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it can not now be considered.

Mr. DOLPH. Is it in order to object to the bills moved by the Senator from Wisconsin?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order having been adopted by unanimous consent, it is too late for an objection to be interposed.

Mr. DOLPH. I think there are other bills as important as pension bills in this body. The bill I desire to have taken up is a general bill——

Mr. SAWYER. It does not seem to me that the Senator from Oregon would wish to antagonize the pension bills. I have given him all the chance I could. If he does so, of course he must take the responsibility.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be reported.

WILLIAM F. HARMON.

The bill (S. 1642) granting a pension to William F. Harmon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William F. Harmon, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1642) granting a pension to William F. Harmon, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant in this case was a private in Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Ohio National Guards, enlisted for one hundred days. He alleges that he had measles while in the service; that while sick he took cold, which resulted in pains and weakness in the chest; that it became permanent, and disabled him from performing manual labor.

His application for pension is rejected "on the ground that the evidence fails to connect alleged disease of chest with measles, or that it is otherwise due to the service."

Reputable witnesses testify that he was a sound man before he entered the service, and that he has not been well since his discharge. The Surgeon-General's report shows that he was sick at the Home of the Sanitary Commission, Washington, D. C., but the Surgeon-General furnishes no evidence on the subject.

The soldier has filed ample testimony from his physicians and acquaintances, but he is unable to produce evidence of the character required by the Pension Office.

There is sufficient ground for the conclusion that he was accepted as a sound man, and that he was otherwise when he was discharged, and that he continues to be in a condition that prevents him from engaging in labor for his support.

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant may properly be relieved to the extent he claims, and report the bill favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN D. FINCHER.

The bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John D. Fincher, late of Company H, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant was a private in Company H, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

He was discharged on the 24th day of February, 1863. Prior to his discharge he was in the United States general hospital at Philadelphia sixty days, and in his certificate the surgeon says: "The disease was contracted by exposure and fatigue while performing the duties of a soldier." The surgeon adds that he was discharged for "general debility, which will disable him from performing the duties of a soldier for a great length of time."

The report of the Surgeon-General says: "He entered Saint Aloysius hospital, Washington, D. C., November 16, 1862, with diarrhea;" that he entered general hospital, Race street, Philadelphia, December 18, 1862, with bronchitis, and was discharged from service February 25, 1863.

The Adjutant-General reports him in hospital at Warrenton, Va.; that he was left sick at Warrenton; that muster-roll of company, dated May 24, 1863 reports him discharged for disability at Race Street hospital, as above.

Comrade Francis M. Thomas testifies:

"That he knew said John D. Fincher since early boyhood; that for at least five years prior to his enlistment he had opportunities of seeing him daily, and that he had no reason to doubt his soundness of health; that he was a comrade of his in Company H, One hundred and twenty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he was taken sick at or near Warrenton, Va., in the fall of 1862, and from there sent to Washington to hospital; that he believes said John D. Fincher still suffers from the effect of his sickness and exposure."

This testimony was given on the 10th of March, 1884.

The claimant alleges that at Warrenton, Va., November 15, 1862, he contracted bilious fever, followed by chronic diarrhea and lung trouble.

The examining surgeon identifies chronic diarrhea, but not lung disease; but he says there may be some pleuritic adhesions. The examining board find nothing the matter with him; a circumstance so inconsistent with the whole record of the case as to be inexplicable to the committee. The proof of his former soundness, of his contracting disease, and of its present existence is so satisfactory as to justify the committee in reporting the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. Something ought to be done with that examining board. Here is a board specifically appointed for the purpose of examining applicants for pensions. It is presumed to be composed of competent men, skilled in their profession, experienced in the detection of diseases and disabilities for the performance of manual labor; and that board find nothing the matter with this applicant. The committee say that it is "a circumstance so inconsistent with the whole record of the case as to be inexplicable" to them. May it not be that this alleged disability is the inexplicable matter, in view of the finding of this board that this man has no physical disability for manual labor, the only ground upon which a pension can be granted.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to this important fact as set forth in their report. According to the report of the examining board this claimant is not entitled to a pension. If he is entitled to it he ought to have it, and if he is not he ought not to have it.

Mr. SAWYER. The whole record of the man shows that he was in hospital at Philadelphia and at various other points. I suppose that he came before the board and they could not see anything the matter with him, and simply said so. I put that in the report which I made, because I believe in telling both sides fully.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report is right; I have no doubt about that.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no question that the man deserves a pension.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better let the case go over for to-day, and let the Senator from Wisconsin make a little further examination.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to the case going over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

JOSEPH MAYS.

The bill (S. 1654) granting a pension to Joseph Mays was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Mays, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1654) granting a pension to Joseph Mays, have examined the same, and report:

That the records in this case show that claimant enlisted July 1, 1863, as a private in Company M, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, and was discharged July 17, 1865.

Declaration for pension filed June 22, 1880, alleging gunshot wound in left arm, shattering both bones.

Claim rejected April 23, 1885, on the ground that "records fail to show the circumstances under which alleged wound was received, and claimant has declared his inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing its receipt while in line of duty." The committee is unable to determine why this pension was not granted through the Pension Office, or what that office considers "satisfactory evidence."

In this case there is,

(1) Claimant's statement, which is corroborated by the records sent to the Pension Office from the War Department, in which occurs this statement:

"Regimental hospital register shows Joseph Mays admitted July 26, 1864, with gunshot wound, forearm."

(2) The affidavit of W. Wakefield, M. D., the regimental surgeon who dressed claimant's wound, and who describes minutely the circumstances attending it.

(3) The affidavit of Capt. John L. Price, Company M, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, that claimant was out on a foraging expedition, and was attacked by bushwhackers and wounded.

(4) The letter of John L. Price, late Captain Ninth Kansas Cavalry, corroborating claimant's statement, and that wound was received in the line of duty.

(5) The affidavits of comrades James Lansing and George R. Bowser, who were with claimant and near him when he was shot in a skirmish with bushwhackers.

(6) A letter written to John H. Osborn, and signed O. P. G. Clarke, of the Pension Office, asking about the circumstances of the wounding, and on the back of that letter Mr. John H. Osborn states that he knew Joseph Mays, and knew he was wounded in the left arm, and thinks he was foraging at the time.

(7) Testimony of John H. Osborn, corroborating above.

In addition to the above there is the certificate of Examining Surgeon E. I. Prothrow, as to the wounds and the effect.

It would appear that the evidence is abundant as to when, where, and how the wound was received, and that its consequences still incapacitate the claimant from performing full manual labor. Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I confess that this is a case which surprises me. Here is the Pension Office rejecting this claim on the 23d of April, 1885, on the ground that the records failed "to show the circumstances under which the alleged wound was received, and claimant has declared his inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing its receipt"—that is, the receipt of the wound—"while in the line of duty." There is the solemn affidavit of the claimant himself that he can not furnish satisfactory evidence that the wound was received in the service and in the line of duty; and yet we find here in this bundle of pension papers as set out in the report the affidavit of W. Wakefield, M. D., the regimental surgeon who dressed the claimant's wound and who described minutely the circumstances attending it. Then we find the affidavit of Capt. John L. Price, Company M, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, that the claimant was out on a foraging expedition and was attacked by bushwhackers and wounded; then the letter of John L. Price, late captain Ninth Kansas Cavalry, corroborating claimant's statement, and that the wound was received in the line of duty; and then the affidavit of two of his comrades, James Lansing and George R. Bowser, "who were with claimant and near him when he was shot in a skirmish with bushwhackers." Yet with that evidence the claimant says that he is unable to furnish satisfactory evidence that the wound was received while in the service and in the line of duty, and the Pension Office reject the claim because they have not any evidence that the wound was received in the service and in the line of duty.

I say this report is remarkable as well as is the action of the Pension Office. The evidence seems to have been discredited in toto in the Pension Office; that is, if this evidence was there at all. It seems impossible that the Pension Office should have received this evidence and rejected the claim upon it, and this is certainly a claim which ought to have been considered in the Pension Office.

Mr. SAWYER. That is what I thought. I have no doubt about it at all, but I thought it was a sort of oversight in some manner, I could not say why.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that the Pension Office with its employés has any right to treat cases in that way and send them here to Congress for relief. The Pension Office has ample power and it has ample machinery to make this investigation and to ascertain the truth. Here is a letter from the captain of the company. Whether that letter was written to the Pension Office or written to some other party, or whether it was considered as evidence or not, we do not know. The Pension Office has the power to send and have an examination made to ascertain the facts.

The chief of the division who permitted the case to be rejected upon such evidence as is set forth in the report ought to be discharged from that office and some competent man put in his place.

I think the case ought to be referred back to the Pension Office. I do not think Congress ought to take up and consider a case of that kind without calling the attention of the Pension Office to it.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. HOAR. Is not that rather hard on the petitioner?

Mr. SAWYER. It is a little hard on the petitioner.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not hard on the petitioner, because if the facts are as set forth, when the attention of the superior officer is called to it he will grant the application and he will get the pension then from the date of the application instead of the date of the passage of the bill, which is a very material circumstance.

Mr. HOAR. I think the observation of the Senator from Missouri will have the effect on the Pension Office that the sending of the case to them would have. His words undoubtedly will meet the eye of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. I presume by an examination of the report that the question at the Pension Office was whether the foraging expedition which the soldier was out in was an authorized or an unauthorized one. I presume that is the difficulty in the matter. It seems to have been a question as to whether he was in the line of duty, not whether he was actually wounded, and he admits that he has furnished all the evidence he can on that score. If the committee have examined the question as to whether he was in the line of duty or whether the foraging expedition was authorized, I should think we had better pass the bill.

Mr. SAWYER. I think we had better not send the case back. It would be pretty hard on him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the bill go over.

Mr. INGALLS. The reference of this bill or this claim to the Pension Office would be rather an extraordinary proceeding. I know of nothing to which it could be assimilated. The Pension Office is a branch of an Executive Department, and I am unable to see how, jurisdiction being vested in the Pension Office and they having acted adversely, rejecting the claim, we can say here that the measure shall be again referred to the Pension Commissioner or the Pension Bureau with directions, I suppose, to reverse the decision. Otherwise it would be idle to send it back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his suggestion, the Chair understands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not make any motion to refer the bill to the Pension Bureau. I think it is a case that the office ought to have acted upon, and I think their attention ought to be called to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARTOLO THEBANT.

The bill (S. 2151) to pension Bartola Thebant, a soldier in the Florida Seminole Indian war of 1849 and 1850, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE R. M'QUAIDE.

The bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide, mother of F. G. McQuaide, deceased, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISABELLA JESSUP.

The bill (S. 1853) granting a pension to Isabella Jessup was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Isabella Jessup, widow of Mahlon Jessup, deceased, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'KERNAN.

The bill (S. 1817) for the relief of John McKernan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of John McKernan, of the Soldiers' Home, Washington, on the pension-roll, on account of disability contracted while in the service of the United States as a second-class private of ordnance in the Ordnance Department of the Army, at Benicia arsenal, California.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1817) granting a pension to John McKernon, have examined the same, and report:

The soldier who sues for a pension in this case is sixty-four years of age, and has been in the military service continuously twenty years. He claims that he is a sufferer from a disease of the feet, the medical name of which he does not know. The Adjutant-General's report gives a history of his long service, and that of the Surgeon-General thus identifies his disability:

"Entered post hospital, Benicia Barracks (arsenal), California, December 9, 1884, from quarters, with eczema of both feet, originating in line of duty (report for April, 1885, shows chronic eczema of both feet), and was discharged from servfice May 27, 1885, on expiration of term of service; disease originating in line of duty; cure incomplete."

Thus it appears that he contracted the trouble from which he suffers in the line of his duty, and that the Army surgeons were unable to cure him.

At the bottom of the Surgeon-General's report there is this note:

"Attention is invited to indorsement of Maj. C. C. Bayne, surgeon United States Army."

This is what Surgeon Bayne says:

"The within-named man was admitted to the Soldiers' Home June 19, 1885, he having served over twenty years as a soldier. He underwent no physical examination on admission. He reported at sick call July 1, 1885, with chronic eczema of leg. He is now a patient in this hospital, suffering from the effects of habitual intemperance."

The committee are unable to determine whether intemperance has aggravated the disease or the disease has aggravated intemperance. Accepting the proof as it is furnished, both exist, and one is pensionable. The bill is therefore reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a remarkable case. The committee are unable to determine whether the intemperance has increased the disease or the disease has increased the intemperance. I think, as he is in the Soldiers' Home, the case had better be passed over.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2028) granting a pension to E. S. Bishop, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner was a private in Company A, Eleventh Missouri Volunteers. He enlisted July 6, 1861, and was discharged January 29, 1863. He applied for pension February 20, 1882, claiming disability from chronic diarrhea resulting from typhoid fever. The Commissioner of Pensions denied the claim on the ground that no pensionable disability has existed since discharge. It is in evidence that he was sick with typhoid fever and diarrhea while in the service, and that he is still so disabled that he can not labor. From a careful examination the committee are of the opinion that the soldier has established his claim by reliable evidence. The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY VON KUSSEROW.

The bill (S. 2254) granting an increase of pension to Mary von Kusserow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary von Kusserow, widow of the late Lieutenant Colonel Charles von Kuesserow, Second United States Veteran Volunteers, and to pay her a pension corresponding with the rank of a lieutenant-colonel, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary von Kusserow, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner is the widow of Charles von Kusserow, who was appointed first lieutenant Third Independent Battery, New York Light Artillery, in January, 1862, and in December of the same year was appointed captain. On the 4th of June, 1865, he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of United States Veteran Volunteers, and was mustered out March 30, 1866. The officer died of disabilities the incurrence of which was by competent proof connected with his service, and the widow was allowed $20 a month, the pension rating with the rank of captain. She has since applied for an increase of pension corresponding with her husband's rank as lieutenant-colonel, which was his rank at the time of his death, but it was denied by the Pension Office on the ground that the diseases of which the officer died originated while in the line of duty as captain.

During the protracted pendency of her case in the Pension Office, Major-General Hancock, to whose command Lieutenant-Colonel Kusserow belonged, repeatedly wrote to the Commissioner of Pensions, and in his letters referred to the worthiness of the officer, and urged action on the case. In November, 1880, the Commissioner wrote to the petitioner detailing the difficulties in the way of granting her request, but concluded by informing her that in view of the fact that "he received a sun-stroke in 1865, he failed thereafter to enjoy his usual health, I have deemed it proper to cause a reissue to be made in your case, and to allow you a pension as the widow of a lieutenant-colonel.

In consideration of these facts, the committee report a bill for the relief of the petitioner, giving her the pay corresponding with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, which was her husband's rank when he died, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. If she is now receiving, as is stated in the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, written in 1880, a pension according to the rank of her husband, that of a lieutenant-colonel, why pass this bill?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not understand that.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the report say?

In November, 1880, the Commissioner wrote to the petitioner detailing the difficulties in the way of granting her request, but concluded by informing her that in view of the fact that "he received a sunstroke in 1865, he failed thereafter to enjoy his usual health, I have deemed it proper to cause a reissue to be made in your case, and to allow you a pension as the widow of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. SAWYER. He wrote that, but the papers do not show that he did it. This bill is to carry that out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Who is it in the Pension Office that refuses to carry out the orders of the Commissioner?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not know.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has there been any application to the Commissioner of Pensions to carry out that order and to pay a pension to this woman according to the rank of her husband, a lieutenant-colonel?

Mr. SAWYER. I can only tell you from the report. I can not carry all the details in my head. I remember something about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the case go over that it may be looked into.

Mr. SAWYER. We only give her the same thing. I do not see why you should not let this bill go through.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think Congress ought to be called upon to perform departmental work. I do not believe that our time should be consumed in attending to pension details that the Pension Office have the right and the power to attend to.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection. I have no objection to sending it back to the committee if you desire.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the Departments to do their duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to recommit the bill?

Mr. SAWYER. No; I do not move it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can look into it and ascertain why the Pension Office has not attended to it.

PATRICK FINAGAN.

The bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Patrick Finagan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Patrick Finagan, late a private in Company A, First Battalion, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

The bill (S. 1493) for the relief of Col. Jesse H. Strickland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill in line 6, before the word "colonel" to insert "acting;" and in line 8, after the word "and," to strike out "that he be allowed," and insert "pay him;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse H. Strickland, formerly acting colonel of the Eighth Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case to know why an acting colonel is allowed a colonel's pension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully examined the facts set forth in the annexed petition and affidavits, showing that the claimant raised a regiment for service in the Army of the United States, but succumbed to disease before he was actually mustered in. His claim can not, therefore, be technically considered under the general law, but is a just and equitable one for relief by Congress.

We therefore report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendments: Strike out the word "colonel," in the title; also, the words "that he be allowed," in the eighth line, and insert in lieu thereof the words "pay him."

Brief of claim for invalid pension of Jesse H. Strickland:

This bill is to authorize the name of Col. Jesse H. Strickland to be placed on the pension-rolls of the Government.

The reason for asking a special act instead of proceeding by claim in the Pension Bureau is this:

During the civil war Mr. Strickland was a resident of the State of Tennessee, and was authorized by President Lincoln, through the War Office, to enlist a regiment of Tennessee troops for the United States service. Under this authority he did so proceed, and enlisted citizens and refugees of his State in numbers finally aggregating seven or eight hundred men. Many months of time and much money was spent in this work. It was performed under promise of being commissioned as colonel, and the regiment was first designated as the Fifth but afterward as the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry. As men were mustered in, companies were formed and officers appointed, captains, majors, and finally a lieutenant-colonel. During all this time Mr. Strickland was regarded as a colonel, so designated in official orders, so obeyed when he was in command. As colonel he was in command of Convalescent Camp, at Camp Nelson, Ky., and as such his name was signed and respected in the Quartermaster's and Medical Departments. But, unfortunately for him, before the work was complete and he mustered into service, he was taken sick, and for months was under medical treatment, and from the diseases thus contracted in the line of his duty in the service of the United States he has never recovered.

While thus sick and under medical care, in the fall and winter of 1863, the presence of troops at the front was urgent, so that Andrew Johnson, then military governor of Tennessee, feeling that the public interests must override private rights, consolidated with the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry some two hundred recruits obtained by S. V. K. Patten, appointed Patten to be colonel, thus completing the regiment, sending it to the field, and depriving the claimant of his right to be mustered as colonel.

Under these circumstances the Pension Office can not have jurisdiction of his pension claim, and he therefore asks pension by a special act of Congress. He herewith submits testimony to show his sickness in the service and continuously ever since. He is also asking of Congress a legal recognition of his right as colonel, and evidence of his service as such has been filed with the proper committee of the House of Representatives.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
County of Washington, ss:

In the matter of pension by special act, Jesse H. Strickland, late colonel Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers.

On the 30th day of January, 1863, authority was granted me by President Lincoln to recruit and organize a regiment of cavalry of loyal Tennesseeans for service in the Federal Army, and while recruiting and command of the said organization, and in the line of his duty at Camp Nelson, Ky., on or about the 1st of September, 1863, he contracted intermittent fever, and while convalescent went to Murfreesborough, Tenn., and thence to Nashville, Tenn., where he had a relapse of his disease, which terminated in typhoid fever and rheumatism, the former having resulted in lung complaint, hemorrhages, and general debility, and which, with rheumatism, have continually existed from time to time since leaving the service. The applicant has resided in Tennessee, and is now a resident of Brooklyn, Kings County, New York, where he has resided for the past twenty years. That prior to his entry into the United States service he was a man of good sound physical health, his weight at that time being 175 pounds, and his present weight being 141 pounds. That he is now disabled from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor, by reason of his injuries above described, received in the service of the United States, and he therefore makes this declaration for the purpose of being placed on the pension-rolls of the United States.

Personally came before me Francis W. Strickland, a citizen of the town of Brooklyn, county of Kings, State of New York, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I, Francis W. Strickland, late first lieutenant and commissary of subsistence Eight Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers, was with the said command at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, on or about May 12, 1863.

On or about November, 1863, on my return through Lexington, Ky., to Cincinnati, on furlough, I met the claimant, and he was suffering from the effects of an attack of typhoid fever and rheumatism and an injury sustained by his horse falling.

Previous to his entering the service he was a robust and healthy man, and ever since his discharge he has been in feeble health, and more or less disabled from the effects of the above diseases.

I have seen the claimant from time to time since his discharge from the military service, and the disability of rheumatism and the results of fever have continued from that time until the present, and he has been unable to perform manual labor.

Y., and I have never known him to be a well or sound, healthy man; I know of his having typhoid fever, rheumatism, and lung trouble when I first became acquainted with him.

It has always been my conviction and belief that his broken-down health was caused by exposure and hardships incurred during his military service to the United States.

And I further declare that I have no interest in said case, and am not concerned in its prosecution.

PHŒBE H. MEECH.

The bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Phœbe H. Meech, widow of Horace J. Meech, late a second lieutenant in the Second Regiment New York Volunteers, in the Mexican war, at the rate of $15 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read to see why the pension in this case is increased, for she seems to be already drawing a pension.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech, have examined the same, and report:

The facts in this case are set forth in the favorable report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended (House Report No. 314, Forty-sixth Congress, second session). Her present bill is to give her the pension of the widow of a second lieutenant, and a favorable report was made to that effect by this committee in 1880 (Senate Report No. 601, Forty-sixth Congress, second session), and passed the Senate May 25, 1880. We adopt the conclusions stated in said report and recommend the passage of the bill.

We find upon examination of papers originally filed in the case in the Pension Office that Horace J. Meech, whose widow the petitioner is, was a soldier in the Mexican war, serving faithfully therein, and was promoted second lieutenant in Second Regiment New York Volunteers, his commission from the governor of New York bearing date 19th February, 1848; that he was honorably discharged the service June 28, 1848; that his application for pension was filed July 9, 1851, on account of wounds received in the service, and that pending the adjustment of his claim he died, December 30, 1855. The petitioner prosecuted the claim to a successful issue in 1875, and has been paid pension only from that time. Her application to be paid arrears of pension due from the date of the soldier's application to the date of the commencement of her pension, 9th April, 1875, was rejected, as was also her claim to be pensioned as the widow of a lieutenant, she being only admitted to the rate of pension allowed to the widow of a soldier.

It seems clear to your committee that this petitioner is equitably entitled to relief asked for, which has not been accorded her, as under the laws the Pension Office was precluded from doing. We believe this to be a case in which Congress may properly interfere, inasmuch as it is shown by the evidence that the soldier died from disease engendered by his army life in the war with Mexico.

We therefore report favorably upon her petition, and recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. 172) for the relief of Phœbe Meech.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

The bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mrs. Almira Ambler, a volunteer nurse in the late war, on the pension-roll at $25 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR, April 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

Almira Ambler is the wife of Rev. Edward C. Ambler, who was chaplain of the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. Both husband and wife are now old, in feeble health, and poor.

Mrs. Ambler, visiting her husband at the camp of the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1861, found thirteen very sick soldiers; her sympathies being enlisted, she, at the solicitation of the surgeon, undertook to care for them. Quarters were assigned to her, and during that whole fall and winter she spent her whole time in caring for the sick of the regiment, sometimes numbering as many as thirty. In the spring the regiment was ordered to Annapolis, whither she went with it, and there, for the space of nearly three years, spent her whole time in the hospital, nursing the sick and caring for them in every way.

She received no compensation. She expended in her work of love and mercy as much as $500 of her own money. She visited Washington six times and obtained comforts for the sick and wounded, and in every way in which her sympathetic nature could suggest became the benefactor of sick and wounded soldiers.

Her labors were performed under the direction of Dr. Vanderleift, in charge of the hospitals at Annapolis.

Probably no more touching instance of self-denial and sacrifice is to be found among the whole list of noble women, who did so much to alleviate the sufferings and preserve the lives of soldiers in hospitals. All this is shown by the unsolicited letters written her by officers and privates to whom she administered.

In view of the precedents which have been established, paying pensions to volunteer nurses, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the husband of this lady now a pensioner?

Mr. PLATT. I know all about this case. The husband is not a pensioner. He is a clergyman, but he is old and very poor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE O'NEAL.

The bill (S. 859) granting a pension to Charlotte O'Neal was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charlotte O'Neal, widow of Col. Richard O'Neal, deceased, late colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the same rate the widows of colonels of volunteers are now paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS SIMPSON.

The bill (H. R. 3326) granting a pension to Thomas Simpson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Simpson, late a private in the Seventh Indiana Battery in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMON J. FOUGHT.

The bill (H. R. 1902) granting an increase of pension to Simon J. Fought was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Simon J. Fought, formerly a corporal of Company D of the Forty-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, to $30 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 28, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1902) granting an increase of pension to Simon Fought, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee, after a careful examination of the condition of this claimant, adopt the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions (House Report No. 1057), and report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The records and papers on file in the Pension Office show that Simon J. Fought, late corporal of Company D, Forty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, is now on the pension-rolls at $24 per month for disability resulting from gunshot wound received in action at Big Black River, Mississippi, July 5, 1863, described as follows by the medical examiners:

Gunshot wound above right groin, passing through bowels, its exit below umbilicus; cicatrix adherent to intestines (large on right side), which are contracted and require mechanical assistance in passing feces beyond the wound.

The rate allowed is that provided by law for a disability equal in degree to that resulting from the loss of a hand or foot.

The petitioner can not obtain a higher rate of pension under the general laws than $24 per month.

It is also made to appear to the committee that Fought's present condition is that of great weakness, precluding manual labor, owing to this fact and to a constant danger of rupture at the wounded part.

You committee consider the petitioner's prayer as entitled to consideration, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 6, and insert the words "to $30 per month," so that the bill will provide for a pension of $30 per month to the petitioner.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know if there is anything in this case that may not exist in nine out of every ten cases where the law now allows $24. Is there anything exceptional here?

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to the bill going over as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] who reported it is not here just now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

NANCY L. RIBBLE.

The bill (H. R. 16) granting a pension to Nancy L. Ribble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put the name of Nancy L. Ribble on the pension-roll as dependent mother of George W. Ribble, late a private in Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, who died in the service and in line of duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAILEY HASCALL.

The bill (H. R. 7118) for the relief of Bailey Hascall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Bailey Hascall, late an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GUYSE.

The bill (H. R. 3205) granting a pension to George W. Guyse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Guyse, late of Company L, First Regiment Alabama Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 1330) granting a pension to Martin Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martin Taylor, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARIA HUNTER.

The bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions propose to amend the bill, in line 8, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$600 per annum" and insert "$50 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Hunter, widow of David Hunter, late colonel of the Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry and major-general of United States Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 28, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7167) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hunter, have examined the same, and report:

The facts upon which the relief is asked are stated in the following report of the House Committee (House Report No. 1522), which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out in the eighth and ninth lines the words "six hundred dollars per annum" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty dollars per month."

The claimant is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. David Hunter, who died on the 2d day of February, 1886. General David Hunter was one of the most distinguished soldiers of the late war, as his military record, herewith attached and made part of this report, shows:

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

In view of this record, and the present condition of his widow, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask some Senator if that is not a much larger amount than has been allowed even by special law to the widows of colonels?

Mr. SAWYER. I can not say.

Mr. SEWELL. It has been customary to allow $50 a month to the widows of brigadier and major generals.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill says "widow of David Hunter, late colonel." He was a colonel in the regular Army.

Mr. SEWELL. But a major-general of volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not appear from the report that the death was from anything incident to the service. He was retired in 1866 at sixty-three years of age, and died in 1886, twenty years afterward, quite old at the time—eighty-three years old.

Mr. SEWELL. The officer had served forty years in the Army before he was put on the retired-list.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much would the law allow in this case in the Pension Office?

Mr. SEWELL. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. PLATT. I remember one instance at the present Congress which I think is a case in point. The widow of Colonel Benham, who was a brevet brigadier-general and during the war was a major-general of volunteers, was allowed $50 a month. The bill has passed both Houses of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELLEN M. BOGGS.

Mr. SEWELL. While I was absent on Friday the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs passed the Senate. There was a mistake in the name, and I ask unanimous consent to correct it. The initial R should be used in place of M in the printed bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having gone to the House of Representatives, a message will have to be sent to recall the bill for correction.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that that action be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. HAMPTON presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2457) for the relief of the State of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. EDNA ROBERTS.

The bill (H. R. 3193) granting a pension to Mrs. Edna Roberts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Edna Roberts, widow of Wright Roberts, late a private in Company F, Third Ohio Cavalry, who was killed during the war of 1861–1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN GARDNER.

The bill (H. R. 1184) granting a pension to Stephen Gardner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Stephen Gardner, late of Company D, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. RIPLEY.

The bill (H. R. 5127) granting a pension to Mary A. Ripley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mary A. Ripley, a nurse in the war of the rebellion, on the pension-roll of the United States, at twelve per month during the remainder of her life.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to call attention to the rate. Is twelve dollars in the bill?

The SECRETARY. "Twelve dollars per month during the remainder of her life."

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill I have says "pay her a pension of twelve per month."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is "twelve per month."

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see how the Secretary could read it "twelve dollars." It is to pay her "twelve per month." I do not know what it is. I do not know that the legal inference is that it means dollars. I move to amend by inserting "dollars" after the word "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. On that bill I ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I am very anxious the bill should become a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is absolutely necessary to have the amendment.

Mr. SAWYER. If we send it back, the House will concur at once, I have no doubt.

Mr. CONGER. Will they reach this bill?

Mr. SAWYER. Yes; they take up such cases right along. I simply want the House to concur in the amendment to correct an omission in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I know the case very well, and it is one that appeals very strongly to my sympathies. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is now informed that an examination of the House engrossed bill shows that the words "dollars" is there. The bill will therefore be considered as passed without amendment.

GEORGE ANNA LIPPE.

The bill (H. R. 6331) granting a pension to George Anna Lippe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George Anna Lippe, widow of Capt. Constantine Lippe, late of Company A, One hundred and eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN SADLER.

The bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, formerly of Company E, Sixty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 28, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1492) granting a pension to Ellen Sadler, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Ellen Sadler, is a sister of John Sadler, formerly of Company E, Sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. No claim was ever made before the Pension Department, because this case does not come within the provisions of any general law.

The following letter from the Adjutant-General's Office gives the service of the soldier:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington April 9, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter from the Senate Committee on Pensions, requesting the military record of John Sadler, as of Company E, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in compliance with instructions thereon to report that the records of this office show that John J. Sadler was enrolled August 13, 1862, at Philadelphia, Pa., and mustered into service September 1, 1862, to serve three years as a private in Company E, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers; that he served therein to January 13, 1863, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability at Camp Pitcher, Virginia, because of "inguinal hernia of right side, contracted about five days ago while on duty." In said certificate the company commander also certifies that "John J. Sadler has been a good and attentive soldier, and has had good health since his enlistment until the 30th December, 1862, when he was first attacked with this disease, supposed to have been brought on by wearing a cartridge box."

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. KELTON,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

It appears from the evidence before your committee that the soldier was discharged for disability contracted in the service, which disability continued until his death. The certificates of physicians are on file with the papers. The testimony of comrades and others corroborates the evidence as to the incurrence of the disability in the service and its continuance since. The evidence is that the soldier, after his discharge, was unable to do any work whatever, and that his mother and sister were compelled to support him: that after his mother's death the burden of such support fell on his sister, Ellen Sadler, and that she did her duty until disabled by partial paralysis. This paralysis still continues, and it further appears that this sister is left in the most destitute circumstances. The soldier died at the Pennsylvania Hospital.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier died from the result of disease contracted in the service, and that his sister who, it appears, is his only surviving relative and now utterly destitute, should receive from the Government some assistance which will in some measure take the place of that which the soldier would no doubt have contributed were he now alive and in good health. We therefore report back the bill, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL HANSON.

The bill (S. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel Hanson, late a private in Company D, Thirty-fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH MARSHALL.

The bill (S. 2046) granting a pension to Elizabeth Marshall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Marshall, widow of Dustin Marshall, late a private in Company C, Third New Hampshire Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET E. PIERCE.

The bill (S. 1181) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Pierce was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the pension of Margaret E. Pierce, widow of Capt. Henry Hubbard Pierce, late of the Twenty-first United States Infantry, who held the rank of major during the war of the rebellion, be increased to the amount now allowed by law to the widow of a major.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 29, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1181) granting a pension to Margaret E. Pierce, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Margaret E. Pierce, is the widow of Henry H. Pierce, late of the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry. She was pensioned, on account of the death of her husband, at the rate of $17 per month, beginning October 3, 1883, with an additional sum of $2 per month for each of three minor children. She now asks that this be increased to the rate allowed the widows of officers of the rank of major, on the ground that such was the real rank of said soldier.

The accompanying petition is presented in support of this claim; and after a review of all the evidence in the case, your committee report back the bill, and recommend that it do pass:

Petition of Mrs. Margaret E. Pierce for increase of pension.

My husband, Henry Hubbard Pierce, was, during the entire war, a member of the First Connecticut Artillery. He entered a stripling of a boy as private soldier, and rose to the full rank of major of one of the best regiments in the service.

During continuous service of four years and five months he was three times breveted. The first time was for "gallant and meritorious service in action at Petersburg mine," where he commanded a battery of ten 10-inch mortars, and where he was without intermission engaged from 4.45 a. m. till 10.30 p. m., and used for the first time the expedient of putting thirty 12-pound canister shot under the bursting charge of the 10-inch shells, which proved of great utility, keeping quiet the most dreaded flanking batteries of the enemy's line. (Page 49, Adjutant-General's Report.)

Another brevet was for "conspicuous gallantry," a very distinguished and distinguishing compliment, given to only ten officers during the entire war.

This was conferred for "service in action at Graveyard Bend, Va.," where, with his own battery of three 30-pounder Parrotts, and another of four 20-pounder Parrotts under his command, unaided by our Navy, he repulsed the rebel fleet in its efforts to pass the obstructions in the James River on the night of January 23. This fleet consisted of three rams, the wooden gunboat Drury, and a small torpedo-boat. The second shot from the battery struck the Drury, and the third exploded her magazine, completely destroying her.

In this engagement he was wounded, with eighteen of his men. Of this affair General Henry L. Abbott, colonel of First Connecticut Artillery, says: "Too much praise can not be given Captain Pierce, commanding the battery, for his excellent conduct."

After this, a vacancy occurring, Captain Pierce was promoted to be major of his regiment. During that year his nervous system was entirely broken down by the use of quinine, which was issued as a ration, and from the effects of the exposure, which made so heroic a remedy necessary, he never recovered.

Although my husband did not die upon the battlefield he is none the less a martyr to the cause, for it was to the labors and exposure undergone in the service that he owed his death.

As will be seen by accompanying "orders," he was engaged in an exploration which has opened up a hitherto unknown country. He laid down his life that others might find homes in the beautiful and fertile valleys of the Okanakin and Methow. The work imposed upon him, so peculiarly fitted for it in every other way than by physical strength, was more than his broken-down body could endure, and six days' march away from civilization he obeyed the last "order."

I have three children to rear and educate. The eldest will be sixteen in May, and will then forfeit her $2 per month, at a time when every cent is so important in her acquisition of an education.

My pension is, including that of my three children, $69 per quarter. I do most earnestly pray for an increase in this being granted, that I may be saved the struggle which confronts any woman left alone, without technical knowledge of any sort that might be applied to earning her own living.

MARGARET E. PIERCE.

[General Orders, No. 22.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLUMBIA,
Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory, July 25, 1883.

The Department commander announces with regret the death of First Lieut. and Bvt. Capt. Henry H. Pierce, Twenty-first Infantry, while on special duty in the field, engaged in important topographical explorations, under special instructions from these headquarters.

The record of this officer is one of marked character and distinction, and his decease suggests special mention.

Entering the service for the preservation of the Government as a sergeant in the Fourth Connecticut Volunteers in May, 1861, he was promoted to the rank of major, rendering valuable and distinguished services, for which he was three times brevetted, on one occasion for "conspicuous gallantry."

At the close of the war he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the First United States Infantry, and subsequently, being transferred to the Twenty-first Infantry, was promoted to first lieutenant in May, 1874.

He possessed not only those qualities which grace an officer of the Government, but as a scholar he had few equals, and as an author he held high rank. His literary attainments were of the first order. The excellence of his translations of the Latin classics and his own compositions have already received marked testimonials and strong commendations from some of the most eminent scholars of the age.

During the past eight years he has served a good portion of the time at remote frontier posts, and has also been engaged against hostile Indians in the Northwest. In the autumn of last year he was engaged in the military reconnaissance in an unexplored district of Washington Territory, and at the hour of his death was occupied in completing the work then begun.

The exposure and hardships of military life in the great civil war and on the frontier had undermined his physical strength, and disease fixed its fatal hand upon him. He died at his post, in the field, in the line of duty, and his remains now rest, buried near the Upper Columbia River, mid the wild scenes of nature, far from friends and kindred.

In the death of Lieutenant Pierce the service has lost a most earnest and valuable officer, and the sympathy of the department commander is extended to his bereaved family.

By order of Brigadier-General Miles.

O. D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Regimental Order No. 49.]

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY,
Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory, August 9, 1883.

The colonel announces to the regiment the death at Foster Creek, Washington Territory, on the 17th day of July, 1883, of First Lieut. Henry H. Pierce, brevet captain United States Army, and brevet major of volunteers.

Captain Pierce entered the military service in May, 1861, as a sergeant of Company A, Fourth Connecticut Infantry, afterward the First Connecticut Artillery, and rose through the several grades until he reached the rank of major in May, 1865. He was three times brevetted for gallantry on the field of battle, once for "conspicuous gallantry," while in command of a water battery on James River, Virginia, in 1865. His service in the field was continuous from May, 1861, to the surrender of the confederate army at Appomattox, Va., April, 1865. He served at various times as judge-advocate and inspector-general of brigades. His brevets, one of them the most distinguished that can be conferred upon a soldier, and the testimonials of his superior officers bear witness to his fidelity and courage; and frequent service in staff positions, requiring knowledge and tact, is evidence of his intellect and culture.

In October, 1867, Captain Pierce was appointed a second lieutenant in the United States Army, and assigned to the First Infantry, and while on duty in the State of Louisiana was appointed by Maj. Gen. O. O. Howard superintendent of education in that State. The duties of this important office he administered with integrity and intelligence. By direction of the President of the United States, he was detailed in the summer of 1869 on duty in the University of West Virginia, as professor of mathematics and military tactics, and remained in this position for a period of five years. On his promotion to the rank of first lieutenant in 1874, he joined his regiment and served with it at various frontier stations. He was in command of a company in the campaign of 1877, against the Nez Percé Indians, in the famous pursuit of Chief Joseph from the Lapwai to the Missouri River, and shares with his regiment the credit of having participated in one of the most remarkable marches recorded in modern warfare. In 1878–'79 he was professor of military science in the military school at Orchard Lake, Mich. October 1, 1880, Captain Pierce was appointed adjutant of the Twenty-first Infantry, and served in this capacity until October 14, 1882, when he resigned to accept the detail of professor of military science and tactics in Pacific University, Oregon, for which position he was recommended by the department commander.

While adjutant he was detailed by Brig. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding Department of the Columbia, to command a scientific exploring expedition from old Fort Colville to Puget Sound. This duty was discharged in a manner so satisfactory that his report of the exploration was published by order of the honorable Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the General of the Army. Family afflictions compelled Captain Pierce to resign his professorship and to return to his regiment in February last. At the time of his death he was in command of a second exploring expedition, having for its object the reconnaissance of the unexplored country between the Columbia River and Puget Sound, along a line south of the forty-ninth parallel. The estimation in which he was held by the department commander has been published to the world in the department order announcing his decease. Captain Pierce, though he was never actively engaged in that profession, was educated for law. He was an original writer of distinction, and made translations of the Æneid of Virgil and the Odes of Horace, productions of the highest literary merit. His life was one of honor and usefulness. The spirit which led him, amid the cares and annoyances of army routine life, to undertake literary labor was commendable in the highest degree, and is worthy of imitation.

As a mark of respect to the memory of Captain Pierce, the officers of the Twenty-first Infantry will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

By order of Col. H. A. Morrow.

DANIEL CORNMAN,
First Lieutenant and Adjutant Twenty-first Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. PENFIELD.

The bill (S. 898) granting a pension to William A. Penfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William A. Penfield, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Vermont Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSELLA E. HIBBERT.

The bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Rosella E. Hibbert was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rosella E. Hibbert, daughter of Franklin M. Hibbert, late of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at the rate of $20 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 29, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2098) granting a pension to Rosella E. Hibbert, have examined the same and report:

The claimant, Rosella E. Hibbert, is the daughter of Franklin M. Hibbert, late of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. It appears from the evidence that the soldier died on the 16th day of May, 1864. He was married, but his wife died February 2, 1863. Only one child survives, the present claimant, who was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month, commencing May 16, 1864, the date of the soldier's death, which pension was continued until she arrived at the age of sixteen years, to wit, February 1, 1879, since which time she has received no pension.

The present application proposes to put her on the pension-roll at the rate of $20 a month, and the reasons for such action are well set forth in the following affidavit of W. M. Pease, M. D., dated at Otis Center, Mass., March 26, 1886:

"This certifies that I. W. M. Pease, of Otis, have known Rosella E. Hibbert for about three years. She is a person between 3 and 3½ feet in height. She is twenty-three years of age, with the mental capacity of a child five or six years of age. There is no hope of any improvement. She is unable to help to support herself in the smallest degree."

From all the evidence in this case, your committee are of the opinion that this claimant still remains, to all intents and purposes, a helpless child. It appears that she is the only survivor of the family of the soldier, and we think that the pension asked for in this bill should be granted. We therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CYRUS VIGUS.

The bill (H. R. 5961) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Vigus was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, and to increase the pension to $50 per month, Cyrus Vigus, late a private in Captain Todd's company of Kentucky Mounted Infantry in the war of 1812.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5961) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Vigus, have examined the same, and report:

The facts in this case are fully stated in the annexed report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives.

In view thereof we recommend the passage of the bill.

Cyrus Vigus served in Captain Todd's company, First Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteers, in the war of 1812. He received an honorable discharge from said service on the 2d day of November, 1813. He served on the expedition to Upper Canada under the command of Governor Shelby.

The claimant is now receiving a pension at the rate of $8 per month, this being a service pension paid the veterans of said war of 1812. He has been an industrious business man, of good habits and economical expenses; but after the business age of his life was passed the competency so carefully husbanded had, with some misfortunes added to his unusual length of years, been consumed, and he now stands, at nearly ninety-three years of age, at that strait where charity must care for him, or the poor-house become his home, or his Government, in generous consideration, save him from such calamity by granting him a pension equal to the needs of his remaining years.

He was born on the 4th day of September, 1793, and the coming 4th of September will be his ninety-third year.

The petition filed with the bill for his relief is signed by the representative citizens of his home, Logansport, Ind.

This veteran, beginning his life in the wars for his country, has kept his patriotism, and has furnished four sons to the war with Mexico, one of whom, Captain Vigus, was the first man of Government troops to enter the conquered city of Mexico; and for the late war for the Union he furnished six sons, his entire family.

These sons are now all dead, save two, one of whom is a misfortune to his father, and the other, riddled with bullets, is a helpless cripple in the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio.

His family at home consists of his aged wife and the widow and daughter of one of his dead soldier sons.

In view of the foregoing facts, it is believed a pension of $50 per month should be granted the claimant.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY G. BALLINGER.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

The bill (H. R. 6136) granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator having this bill in charge what pension Farris will take under it? The bill is:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John W. Farris, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for disease of eyes, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

It seems on its face to be a bill the purpose of which is to give him some increase of pension, but I apprehend the effect of it will be not to give him any.

Mr. SAWYER. I can not say. It is a bill brought here from the House, and there might be some question about it.

Mr. PLATT. I think it had better lie over. If he is going to be pensioned "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" he will get no increase, I think, under this bill.

Mr. SAWYER. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

The bill (H. R. 1576) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Allcock, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Allcock, late a private in Company F, Third United States Artillery, during the Florida war, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1576) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock, have examined the same, and report that after examination they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

It appears that the petitioner is an invalid soldier of the Seminole war, having served as private, Company F, Third United States Artillery, and honorably discharged after three years' service. He applied for pension in 1852, and was informed that claim was not admissible on the proof under general law. On the 21st of June, 1872, there appears to have been an application filed by him, alleging "that he served in said Florida war three years; that he received a sunstroke while in said service, and while on duty as sentry on the 6th day of July, 1839; and that Thomas Haley, mentioned in the annexed affidavit, was present at the time; that in consequence of such sunstroke he was totally blind for six days, and has lost the sight of one eye entirely; that a written discharge was granted him by Maj. Thomas Childs, at Fort Pierce, Florida, which is in the Department at Washington, filed on application for bounty land."

The Adjutant-General's Office reports him sick in hospital at the time alleged by him; and there is ample proof in the case to show that it is a just and meritorious one, well worthy of consideration.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, reported favorably in the case as far back as February 4, 1858, and say then:

"For this permanent injury to his eyes, rendering them perfectly useless for the remainder of his life, received in the service of his country, the committee think he is justly entitled, in some degree, to the consideration of the Government."

It appears that an act was passed by the Forty-seventh Congress granting a pension to this soldier at the rate of $8 per month, dating from March 2, 1883, the date of the approval of the act therefor.

It appears that the man is now seventy-two years old, has a wife, and that they are in utterly dependent circumstances in consequence of his blindness, which is now total. He requires the attendance of some person at all times in going about, and has no means. It appears conclusively that the soldier contracted his disability in the Army and in the line of duty.

Your committee beg leave to refer to the petition of the said soldier hereto annexed, and to the affidavits of the claimant, and of Robert Y. McConnell, a reputable citizen of Rochester, annexed.

In conclusion, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioner, Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, in the State of New York, respectfully shows to your honorable body that he was a soldier of the United States Army in the Seminole war, having enlisted in December, 1836, and was discharged in December, 1839. That his honorable discharge from that service is now on file in the Pension Office at Washington. Your petitioner further shows that while in the service, and shortly before his discharge, he was prostrated by a sunstroke, from which he has never recovered. That in consequence of that sunstroke he was made blind, and has remained so up to the present time. That by reason of his blindness he has been unable to do anything for the support of himself and family, and much of the time has been supported at public expense. That he repeatedly applied for a pension, and none was ever granted him until, in the last session of the Forty-seventh Congress, an act was passed, which became a law, giving him a small pittance of $8 per month, from the date of the passage of that act. This sum is insufficient for his support, and considering the long period of time during which he should have been paid a pension he submits to this honorable Congress that he should either have an arrears of pension allowed him, or, if that can not be done, that the amount of his pension should be increased. His disability is total, and he is compelled to have the attendance of some person to feed him and take care of him. Under the rule of rating pensions in such cases, he is informed and believes that he could not have less than $24 per month at the lowest rate allowed for pensions to private soldiers. He has never had any gratuity from the Government except a bounty land-warrant for 160 acres of land, for which he got $110.

He therefore prays that Congress of the United States will increase his pension to at least $50 per month. He is now seventy-two years of age, and the time during which the Government will have the privilege of paying him a pension will in all human probability not be very great.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

MARY NORMAN.

The bill (H. R. 6192) granting a pension to Mary Norman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Norman, widow of Corporal Turner Norman, late of Company G, Thirty-fifth United States Colored Troops.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6192) granting a pension to Mary Norman, have examined the same, and report that after examination they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant, Mary Norman, is the widow of Turner Norman, late corporal Company G, Thirty-fifth United States Colored Troops, enrolled May 22, 1863, and who was wounded in battle at Olustee, Fla., February 20, 1864.

War Department records show soldier in hospital from said wound from February 22, 1864, to August, 1864; left with detachment at Jacksonville, Fla., sick since November 26, 1864; present for duty from February 28, 1865, to April 30, 1866.

Soldier was mustered out of service with his company at Charleston, S. C., June 1, 1866. Company was in action at battle at Olustee, Fla., February 20, 1864. Company or regimental records do not give the location of wound.

Surgeon-General's report shows that soldier was treated in general hospital at Jacksonville, Fla., for gunshot wound of head received in battle; also in general hospital at Beaufort, S. C., for gunshot wound of left side of head.

Soldier died December 22, 1869.

Soldier made application for a pension, but died before the same was granted.

Widow filed application for pension February 4, 1880. Rejected on the ground that the death cause, "drowning," was not due to the soldier's military service.

A number of soldier's comrades testify under oath that, although his right jaw-bone was broken, resulting in a running sore, producing great suffering and partial deafness, soldier, after his return from hospital, refused to leave his regiment, but remained, doing light duty, until his regiment was mustered out at the close of the war.

After his discharge he was a great sufferer, and to a great extent unable to perform manual labor.

Soldier was drowned in an accident while crossing the Roanoke River in North Carolina, the indirect result of the wound received while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. In crossing said river the boat sprung a leak; the ferryman called to him to save himself; a man who was also in the boat with soldier made his escape, but soldier, suffering from his wound and disabilities received in the service, was unable properly to care for himself, and was drowned as the boat sank. Soldier's widow is quite poor.

Your committee are of the opinion that soldier's death can be easily traced to the disability received in the service and in the line of duty, and believing this poor widow justly entitled to the pension asked, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC RANSOM.

The bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Isaac Ransom was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaac Ransom, late a private in Company C, Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for such diseases as now exist.

Mr. PLATT. Why should that language be used "for such diseases as now exist?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to strike out those words?"

Mr. PLATT. I should like some explanation of them. I do not know but that they are all right. I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2182) restoring a pension to Isaac Ransom, have examined the same, and report:

That the records in this case show that claimant was a private in Company C, Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and enlisted October 15, 1861, and was discharged September 13, 1865. It also appears that claimant was pensioned for rheumatism from September 14, 1865, to December 31, 1880, when the pension was discontinued on the ground that claimant had recovered from the disease. It was claimed originally that soldier was sunstruck four times while in the service, but the claim was not allowed, and he was pensioned for rheumatism.

The records show that claimant was a sound man prior to enlistment; that he was a good soldier. The fact of his having been sunstruck is testified to by his captain, John Nafius, by the assistant surgeon of the regiment, and also by Capt. John M. Williams; also by the regimental surgeon, who treated him for other diseases besides rheumatism contracted in the line of his duty.

There is also abundant testimony from claimant's neighbors, who knew him before enlistment and after his discharge, showing that he was a sound man when he enlisted; and since his return from the Army he has been unfitted by his disabilities from performing manual labor.

Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report a substitute for this bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MALITTY ROSE.

The bill (S. 2335) for the relief of the heirs of Malitty Rose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James E. Rose, Jane Godfrey, and Francis Patton, the only surviving children of Malitty Rose, deceased, the money due upon reissue certificate numbered 3269, issued to Malitty Rose three weeks prior to her death, as the widow of Elias Rose, late a private in Captain McCoy's company, United States infantry, of the Florida war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. MILES.

The bill (S. 2130) granting an increase of pension to John C. Miles was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John C. Miles, late of Company C, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the $4 per month heretofore allowed him.

Mr. COCKRELL. There ought to be some amendment there, so that it will not carry arrears of pension. That language is a little too broad. I move to amend after the word "month," where it reads "at the rate of $20 per month," by inserting "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. WILLS.

The bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to John W. Wills was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John W. Wills, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the $2 per month heretofore allowed him.

Mr. PLATT. There ought to be the same amendment in that bill.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I move to add "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. If it would be convenient for the Senate to adopt the usual rule in cases of bills of that length, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the effect of that suppose it should be agreed to?

Mr. HOAR. The effect of it is that the amendments to each section are offered as the section is read.

Mr. INGALLS. But when the reading is concluded if there are sections that any Senator desires to offer amendments to, the opportunity has passed until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Unquestionably.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall object to that, because the bill is of such length that it would be obviously unfair to those who desire to consider it in detail to cut off the opportunity to amend before the whole bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody would think—I should not certainly—of objecting to going back if any Senator desired at any time to propose anything. The convenience is that this course saves a reading, and it attracts the attention of the Senate and of gentlemen who have amendments to offer to each section as it is being read and discussed, so that we shall not be flying backward and forward. There can be no snap judgment taken, because you have the power of reconsideration and the power of moving amendments in the Senate if I attempted such a thing, which I would not.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not wish to be deprived of the opportunity of offering amendments in Committee of the Whole. With the understanding that after the bill has been thus read as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts amendments shall be in order to the bill as in Committee of the Whole in all parts thereof, I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I will agree to that. I will make my request with that understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be read through at length.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take up——

Mr. TELLER. As a question of order I want to find out what was the understanding come to as to amendments to the bankruptcy bill. We could not hear back here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be open to amendments moved by any Senator in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair allow me to make a request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that has already been given. The Chair put the question.

Mr. HOAR. There seems to be some misunderstanding. I desire now to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be read and amendments called for to each section as the reading proceeds, any Senator, however, to be at liberty to return to a section that has been passed to make an amendment if he desires.

Mr. INGALLS. After the reading of the bills shall have been concluded, as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOAR. At any time.

Mr. TELLER. Why should any special rule be made about it? Why not let this bill take the regular parliamentary course?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I will not object, but I do not see any propriety in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill shall be considered by sections and open to amendment, and when the reading is gone through with any section shall be still open to amendment. The Chair hears no objection to this arrangement.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas object to having that done by unanimous consent, laying the bankruptcy bill aside informally?

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill indicated by him.

Mr. HOAR. The bankruptcy bill being laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending order being laid aside informally. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator from Louisiana is recognized, I desire to have unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill at length be dispensed with, and that it be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be taken.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Louisiana desires to make a few remarks, and has asked me to yield to him for that purpose, and I do so.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RANDALL, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. MCCOMAS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 670) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 320) for the relief of Hiram W. Hubbard; and

A bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of James D. Wood.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. GIBSON. I have requested the Senator from Kansas to yield to me that I might ask the Senate to take up the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] regarding executive sessions, in order to make a few remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed informally to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Connecticut, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, submitted by Mr. PLATT January 29, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That executive nominations shall hereafter be considered and acted upon in open session, except when otherwise ordered by vote of the Senate, and so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, when we reflect upon the origin and growth of the institutions of representative or popular government, how they were created, not in the cabinets of kings, nor in the speculations of political philosophers, but by the sturdy efforts of freemen assembled to demand redress of actual grievances or to protect themselves against arbitrary power, and how entirely they draw their nourishment and support from the people, in fact constitute governments of the people and for the people, we can not fail to be astonished at the reluctance they who conduct them have ever exhibited to draw aside the curtain of concealment and to expose all their proceedings to the scrutiny and knowledge of the public; for however popular the origin of parliamentary or congressional government, all legislative assemblies are in theory and within a comparatively recent period were in fact closed against the public.

In both branches of the British Parliament the proceedings were conducted with closed doors from the earliest times down to less than one hundred years ago.

Judge Cooley, in his work on constitutional limitations, says:

Many matters the publication of which now seems important to the just, discreet, and harmonious workings of free institutions and the proper observation of public officers by those interested in the discharge of their duties were treated by the public authorities as offenses against good order and contempts of authority.

No official publication of the debates in Parliament was provided for and no other was allowed. The brief sketches which found their way into print were usually disguised under the garb of a fictitious parliament held in a foreign country. For such publication in 1747 the editor of the Gentleman's Magazine was brought to the bar of the house of commons for reprimand and only discharged on expressing his contrition. And in 1641 Sir Edward Deering was expelled and imprisoned for publishing a collection of his own speeches, and the book was ordered to be burned by the public hangman. Until about the period of the American Revolution, and even subsequent to that event, publication of proceedings was considered a breach of privilege. Freedom to report proceedings and debates was at last due to Wilkes, who became, notwithstanding his infamous private character, a public benefactor by his obstinate defense of the liberty of the press and security from arbitrary search and arrest.

The freedom of the press itself is of comparatively recent origin. No mention was made of it in the English petition of rights nor in the bill of rights. Even in America the magistrates of Massachusetts suffered the publication of the general laws under protest as a hazardous experiment, and for such publication in Virginia the printer was arrested and put under bonds until the king's pleasure was declared that no printing should be allowed in the colony. Books were adjudged to be given to the flames that advocated the general principles of popular freedom, and even as late as toward the close of the seventeenth century the governor of New York was expressly instructed to suffer no printing, and the governor of Virginia thanked God there were no free schools nor printing presses in that colony, and he trusted that these breeders of disobedience and heresy and sect would long be unknown.

Slow indeed were the approaches toward that freedom of the press and publicity in the proceedings of legislative bodies which prevail today. It was a steady growth, however, from generation to generation as these institutions caught the spirit of modern progress and embraced more and more the cause of the people.

While as a matter of right strangers may be excluded, yet in point of fact accommodations are now provided for reporters of newspapers and secrecy is unknown to the house of commons and lords. Their proceedings are as open as the day. Secret sessions in respect to any matter are not tolerated, and if an attempt were now made to exclude the public from the house of commons it would produce revolution.

If the commons, says Macaulay, were to suffer the lords even to originate money bills we doubt whether such a surrender of their constitutional rights would excite half so much dissatisfaction as the exclusion of strangers from a single important discussion.

The gallery in which the reporters sit has become a fourth estate of the realm.

The publication of the debates, a practice which seemed to the most liberal statesmen of the old school full of danger to the great safeguards of public liberty, is now regarded by many persons as a safeguard tantamount and more than tantamount to all the rest together.

Bagehot, in his admirable work on the English constitution, advises that treaties be made by Parliament. He says:

If we require that in some form the assent of Parliament shall be given to such treaties we should have a real discussion prior to the making of such treaties, we should have the reason for the treaty plainly stated and also the reasons against it. At present, as we have seen, the discussion is unreal. The thing is done and can not be altered, and what is said often ought not to be said because it is captious, and what is not said ought as often to be said because it is material. We should have a manlier and plainer way of dealing with foreign policy, for ministers should be obliged to explain their foreign contracts before they are valid, just as they are compelled to explain their domestic proposals before they can become laws.

I am disposed to deny entirely that there can be any treaty for which adequate reasons can not be given to the English people which the English people ought to make. A great deal of the reticency of diplomacy had, I think, better be spoken out. The worst families are those in which the members never speak their minds to each other.

It is the same with nations. The parties concerned would almost always be better for hearing the substantial reasons which induce the negotiators to make the treaty and the negotiators would do their work much better, for half the ambiguities in treaties are caused by the negotiators not taking the pains to put their own meaning distinctly before their own minds and they would have to make it plain if they had to argue on it before a great assembly.

Our American institutions follow closely the historical antecedents and characteristics which they inherited from those of the mother country. It must not be imagined that they sprang suddenly into existence, for not only in their organic structure but in their modes of procedure they retain the cast and lineaments of the institutions of the country whose loyal subjects their framers once had been.

All the provincial Legislatures sat with closed doors. But it may be said with truth that the first Legislature to make its proceedings public was the Legislature of Massachusetts. Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, in an address before the Maine Historical Society, says:

The earliest instance of authorized publicity being given to the deliberation of a legislative body in modern days was in the same house of representatives of Massachusetts, on the 3d day of June, 1766, when upon motion of James Otis a resolution was carried to open a gallery for such as wished to hear the debate.

But the proceedings of the old Confederation Congress were always in secret. The constitutional convention of 1787 sat with closed doors, and although imperfect reports of the debates have since been published, the injunction of secrecy upon its members was never removed.

Luther Martin, who was a member from Maryland, in a letter addressed to the house of delegates of Maryland in 1788 on the Federal convention of 1787, says:

By order the doors were to be shut and the whole proceedings were to be kept secret, and so far did this rule extend, that we were thereby prevented from corresponding with gentlemen in the different States upon the subject under our discussion, a circumstance which I confess I greatly regret. I had no idea that all the wisdom, integrity, and virtue of this State or of the others were centered in the convention. I wished to have corresponded freely and confidentially with the eminent political characters in my own and other States, not to be implicitly dictated to by them, but to give their sentiments due weight and consideration. So extremely solicitous were they that their proceedings should not transpire that the members were prohibited even from taking copies of resolutions on which the convention were deliberating or extracts of any kind from the journal without formally moving for and obtaining permission by vote of the convention for that purpose.

It is not, therefore, surprising that the Constitution contained no provision requiring that the debates or proceedings of Congress should be conducted in open session and none at all upon the subject except the following in Article I, section 5:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy, and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

The only purpose and effect of these clauses is to compel Congress to publish from time to time what has been actually done, to give to the world the acta diurna merely, such parts of its proceedings as the members themselves may deem proper. We shall be prepared, therefore, to find that the Senate of the United States sat with closed doors from April 21, 1789, until February 11, 1794. William Maclay, a Senator from Pennsylvania from 1789 to 1791, kept a journal, published a few years ago, in which may be found sketches of the debates. Maclay says, speaking of what occurred April 27, 1790:

No business was done in the Senate but consenting to nominations sent down on Saturday, and the Senator from Virginia laid a resolution on the table for opening the doors of the Senate on the discussion of legislative matters.

Again, on the 24th April, 1791:

This day nothing of moment engaged the attention of the Senate in the way of debate until the Virginia Senators moved that the doors of the Senate Chamber should be opened on the first day of the next session. I was happy that I had given my voice on a former occasion for it. The reasons I gave then operated with full force on my mind. The first was, that I knew of no reason for keeping the door of any legislative assembly open that did not apply with equal force to us. The second was, that I thought it a compliment due to the smallest States in the Union to indulge them in such a request.

According to him the objections to it were, namely:

That the members would make speeches for the galleries and for the public papers would be the fault of the members. If they waged war in words and oral combats, if they pitted themselves like cocks, or played the gladiator for the amusement of the idle and the curious the fault was theirs. That let who would fill the chair of the Senate I hoped discretion would mark their deportment. That they would rise to impart knowledge and listen to obtain information. That while this line of conduct marked their debates it was totally immaterial whether thousands attended or whether there were not a a single spectator.

The objections prevailed, and the resolutions were lost. It was not until 1794 that the doors of the Senate were opened and continued open during the discussion upon the contested election of Albert Gallatin, which was not concluded until April 28, with the decision that the election of Mr. Gallatin was void in consequence of his not having been a citizen of the United States for the constitutional period. The case being settled the doors of the Senate were closed against the public to the end of that session, when the legislative sessions were made public and have remained so, in conformity to the resolution of February 19, 1794—

That after the present session of Congress, and so soon as suitable galleries shall be provided for, the Senate Chamber and said galleries shall be permitted to be opened every morning so long as the Senate shall be engaged in their legislative capacity, unless in such cases as may in the opinion of the Senate require secrecy, after which the galleries shall be closed.

The fact is secrecy was until within a very recent time regarded as an indispensable element in the affairs of state, and reasons of state and state secrets were charmed and potent words, while in the hearts of the most enlightened and philosophical statesmen there dwelt a profound conviction that while the people should have a voice in their government, yet its administration should be removed from their direct control and immediate supervision as far as possible. They felt that concerns of such vast importance as the national honor and safety and fidelity to national obligations and the legislation essential to the general welfare should not be committed to the determination of influences springing from the popular judgment and popular conscience, but that the processes by which public opinion was passed over into the public will expressing itself in legislation should be intricate, remote, and secretive.

Even as late as 1840 John Quincy Adams regarded the political excitements and mass-meetings and the assembling of popular nominating conventions as full of peril to our institutions. He says:

From the organization of the Government under the present Constitution of the United States, the nominations of candidates for the office of President were made in caucuses by members of Congress and by members of the State Legislatures.

He declares that the Congressional caucuses signally failed, and that the State legislative nominations produced only cross-purposes and have been superseded by popular conventions. This has been followed by numerous assemblages in all the States where the opposition is of any strength, and not a week has passed within four months without a convocation of thousands of people to hear inflammatory harangues. "Here," says this accomplished statesman, who entered the public service of our country at an earlier age and continued in it longer than any other and always with matchless ability—is a revolution in the habits and manners of the people. Where will it end? These are party movements and must in the natural progress of things become antagonistical. These meetings can not be multiplied in number and frequency without resulting in yet deeper tragedies. Their manifest tendency is to civil war.

Here—

He says—

There is not a school-boy to-day in the land that would not laugh at these apprehensions of one of the most learned and gifted statesmen of whom our country can boast.

But at length it has become an axiom in this and all other countries where constitutional freedom prevails that political matters are not private matters but public matters, and that the surest remedy for all evils that afflict society is to be found in the widest publicity and in the resources which the wisdom and the conscience of the many may bring to bear upon the sufferings and wrongs of any one or of any portion of the people.

Dr. Francis Lieber, in his work on civil liberty and self-government, edited by Dr. Theodore D. Woolsey, in speaking of those guarantees of liberty which relate more especially to the government of a free country and the character of its policy, says:

The first of all we have to mention under this head is publicity of public business. This implies the publicity of Legislatures and judicial courts as well as of all minor transactions that can in their nature be transacted publicly, and also the publication of all important documents, and reports, and treaties, and whatever else can interest the people at large. It further implies perfect freedom with which reporters may publish the transactions of public bodies. Without the latter, the admission of the public would hardly amount to publicity at all. We do not assemble in the market as the people of antiquity did. The millions depending upon information in our national States could not meet in the assembly as it was possible in the ancient city states, even if we had not a representative government. The public journals are in some respects to modern freemen what the agora was to the Athenians and the forum to the Romans.

An ancient free city can be imagined without a public press; a modern free country can not. Publicity in connection with civil liberty means publicity in the transactions of the business of the public in all branches. In free countries political matters relate to the people, and therefore ought to be public. Publicity informs of public matters; it teaches and educates and it binds together. There is no patriotism without publicity, and though publicity can not always prevent mischief, it is at all events an alarm-bell which calls the public attention to the spot of danger."

There is not a man in America to-day who would not condemn any secret political society or organization as dangerous to political liberty and violative of the spirit of our institutions. There may possibly arise extraordinary circumstances during war or civil commotions when a resort to secret sessions might be justifiable; but why, I ask, as a general rule, should any part of the people's business be shrouded in mystery and concealed from them? It will be admitted that the opening of the doors of the legislative sessions of the Senate has wrought no harm to the Republic, but on the contrary has advanced every interest which under the Constitution has been committed to its charge, and enriched modern literature with specimens of oratory not surpassed in any age or country.

But it is insisted when the Senate comes to give its consent and advice respecting treaties its proceedings should be conducted with closed doors. This was important, perhaps necessary, in the early days of the Republic when European nations treated our country and its representatives with contumely and haughty disdain, and when, owing to our weakness we sought alliances and made concessions to obtain a genuine independence on land and sea and our territorial rights. No American can read the history of our early treaties and of the efforts of our diplomatists to secure respectful treatment and the unquestioned recognition of the rights of our countrymen without a sense of resentment. But that day is past forever. In the plenitude of our power we can afford to discuss all questions in open sessions and with entire frankness and moderation, and the very consciousness of national greatness will inspire Senators with kindness and generosity toward all weak nations and dignity and forbearance even toward the most powerful.

The very discussion of international questions in open session will stimulate the people to take more interest in the welfare of the country as a whole, inspire national sentiments and greater pride in our country's honor and standing among the nations of the earth. It will tend to lift the minds of our statesmen and of our people as well out of the jealousies and narrowness of this section or that into the contemplation and consideration of the vast imperial destinies which are before them. The principles of international law, the interpretation of treaties and their history, the sentiments and views of foreign governments, and the considerations of honor or of interest or policy which should determine our attitude, are all matters which should be brought more and more under popular observation and familiar discussion.

I have always insisted that no dangers are likely to result to our institutions or injuries to any interest by the cultivation of a healthy national spirit. The danger is in the perversion of the national attributes and faculties to advance special privileges or sectional power or interests, to compel unjust concessions from weak nations to false and fraudulent claims of individuals, or to engage the country in complications leading to war to satisfy personal ambitions or the greed and selfishness of particular local interests. The surest guarantees against such misdirection and misapplication is to be found in the widest publicity and appeals to the good sense and patriotism of the people.

But if there be any class of treaties that should be discussed in open session it is that involving the exertion of the revenue power, which under the Constitution was committed to the House of Representatives. By the recognized practice of the Government no longer questioned, such treaties, before they may be proclaimed and made operative and binding, must derive their legal force and validity from the necessary legislation adopted by the House of Representatives. How illogical and inconsistent with all our notions of propriety and good sense is it for the Senate to shroud its discussions of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands or Mexico in secrecy, while at the same time the House of Representatives may be considering both in the most open manner, and inviting the people whose interests may be sacrificed to a full and respectful hearing and the leading magazines of the country are full of elaborate dissertations upon them. I commend to the careful attention of Senators the interesting and instructive articles of Hon. David A. Wells in the latest numbers of the Popular Science Monthly of New York on the unilateral treaty with Mexico, entitled "An economic study of Mexico."

Let in the light upon these treaties. Let us know whether they are intended to advance the national welfare or those of individuals merely. Let us be informed when it is shown that about $23,000,000 of the hard earnings of the people of this country have been paid to syndicates in the Sandwich Islands without any compensating benefit under the guise of this so-called treaty which repealed the old treaty of 1850, projected by Daniel Webster and completed by John M. Clayton, under which every possible provision, right, and privilege were secured for our whaling fleets, our ships of commerce and of war, our trade and commerce, and for our citizens as fully and completely as if the islands had become a part of our territory. Under that treaty American influence and supremacy soon became undisputed, and the advancement of American interests and of the people of the islands in civilization was remarkable. I ask Senators to contrast articles 6 and 7 of the treaty of 1850 and its effects with the articles of the present subsidized convention or any proposed modification of it as the equivalent of the subsidy! Let us be informed not in secret but in the light of day why the treaty should be continued for one instant, a treaty that has condemned those islands to the baneful influences of coolie slavery and blasted their development as a rising commonwealth in the Pacific sea and an outpost for American institutions and civilization.

Let us if we intend to embark on the doctrine of manifest destiny, the urbi et orbi policy—let us proclaim it openly and boldly and buy the islands outright, but I protest against the continuance of a vulgar subsidy so large to aliens who can well afford to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to perpetuate a bounty so extravagant while so many of our own people are plunged in distress. No questions could be more safely discussed by and before the people than these, and every consideration of national welfare should induce us to open wide the doors when treaties that tax the people and take from their hard earnings are to become the laws of the land. It was but yesterday that a debate in open session was held upon a question that more than any other has perplexed our diplomacy. I mean, of course, the fisheries; and it will be admitted that the very publicity of the debate was productive of good results. Such discussions would expose to the country the principles and considerations that control Senators on all questions concerning not only the relations of our Government to all foreign governments, but also the intercourse and transactions between citizens of our own and of foreign nations, the nature and character of all disputes and the manner and method of their settlement.

The Senate would be spared those unseemly criticisms inspired by unworthy motives, or by ignorance, that secrecy invites and renders it impossible to answer, doing injustice to patriotic Senators and bringing odium upon our institutions and country in the eyes of the world.

But it is held that when the Senate comes to consider whether it will advise and consent to nominations and appointments the doors should be closed and the most rigid secrecy observed. Now, Mr. President, there are two methods for filling offices created by the Constitution and the laws, one by election and the other by appointment, and I submit that the reasons which compel and justify the utmost publicity in the discussion of the merits and qualifications in one case should prevail in the other.

The offices belong to the people, were created for their benefit, and not for the benefit of the office-holders, nor as personal or political perquisities, nor as official patronage, nor for the Senate, but wholly to do the necessary work of the nation; and the people pay their officers for such work out of their own pockets, and they have a right to know all about their qualifications when they come to be appointed or elected. If it were once understood that entire publicity were the rule respecting all appointments the chief difficulty in the way of the thorough reformation of the public service would be removed.

In the first place, unworthy men, knowing their own unfitness or misconduct, would not desire that their names should be exposed to a running fire from the press and their fellow-citizens when presented publicly for the consideration of the Senate. How many such men now insist upon being appointed and secure recommendations who would not venture to go before the people for election, counting upon the shield of secrecy to protect themselves against the condemnation of the public.

In the second place, it would impose greater circumspection and responsibility and better methods upon the appointing power. It is utterly impossible from the nature of things that the President should know the real character of the applicants for office, and he would realize that as the recommendations and considerations that control his selection were to be laid before the Senate, not in secret but in open session, which is tantamount to laying them before the country, it would behoove him to require testimonials from the highest sources, so that a complete record should be made up for the country constituting the credentials of the appointees; and Senators and Representatives and gentlemen in private life who now carelessly give their recommendations right and left without scrutiny would be more careful when it was well understood that the measure of their responsibility was likewise to be declared to the country and not hid away in the archives of the committee-rooms.

In the third place, it would relieve the Senate from the constant discussion of attacks upon private character which secrecy holds out as a temptation to those who would gratify personal malice or revenge by striking under cover or in the dark. The "lion's mouth" at Venice when the council of ten, the famous oligarchy, ruled the city by the sea was not a more appropriate device to invite the secret denunciation of particular persons than the immunity which secret sessions of the Senate affords.

> To him had Venice ceased to be
> Her ancient civic boast, "the free,"
> And in the palace of St. Mark
> Unnamed accusers, in the dark,
> Within the "lion's mouth" had placed
> A charge against him uneffaced.

With the disappearance of secrecy would also disappear those baseless charges that cause good men hesitate to have their names brought before the Senate. Just, fair, honorable criticism which publicity would beget no American would or could complain of. Indeed, he has a right to such trial and consideration if charges be made; but a secret inquisition conducted in behalf of men whose names are withheld from the accused is repulsive to every honorable mind. The duty to investigate in secret and by secret methods the character of the person assailed and the assailants is the most humiliating and disgusting work ever committed to gentlemen. Let us open the doors of the Senate, and we shall be no longer required to pass on charges springing from such motives.

Publicity is a process of purification, while secrecy breeds suspicions of intrigues and excites odium and discontent. No doubt the effects of this change would be to deprive the Senate of the opportunity of seeking party advantage in the matter of appointments by concealing what might be to the disadvantage of the party of the majority of the Senate and adroitly expose for public censure only what in their judgment might bring reproach upon the party of the minority.

It would also undoubtedly tend to relax the grasp which the Senate itself has taken upon the public patronage as one of its prerogatives and transfer the responsibility to the appointing power, where it properly belongs.

Since the form and structure and jurisdiction of these Federal institutions have been finally settled (so far as anything can be said to be settled in government) by nearly a hundred years of experience and precedents, by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the arbitrament of civil war, the leading question before the people about which they will concern themselves will be how to promote the honesty, economy, fidelity, and efficiency of the practical administration of the Government, and the party that shall identify itself with these beneficent ends will receive and deserve to receive power at their hands. Faithful to its principles and creed I believe this to be the aspiration of the President and the true mission of the Democratic party.

It may be said, perhaps, that I exaggerate the efficacy of publicity and the civic virtues and spirit of the people; that indifference to public affairs is the characteristic of the more intelligent and well-to-do of our fellow-citizens, and that on this account the more active and ignorant will control and determine the issues of the day and the fate of our Government.

A very brilliant writer, Sir Henry S. Maine, has observed that democracy is monarchy inverted; that the modes of addressing the multitudes are the same as the modes of addressing kings; that it is a form of government under which panegyrics to the multitudes may be easily understood.

This I confess, Mr. President, though intended somewhat as a reproach, is in a great measure a just criticism. This is the people's government. And they after all are the true king, not associated wealth or corporate power, nor combination, or special organizations of any kind, but the many, embracing all classes, greater and stronger than any one, spread all over the country, governing themselves by their industrious sobriety, their intelligent comprehension, their patriotic devotion, their determination to resist and suppress all attempts at violence and lawlessness or at injustice and oppression; they constitute the source of all power, and must and will assert their intelligent supremacy, their capacity for wise administration, for genuine and faithful kingship in respect to the conduct of their government in all its departments according to its appointed constitution and forms, or else the whole scheme must prove in the end to have been a mistake, and add another to the long list of the failures of mankind at self-government.

No public interests require that any of the proceedings of the Senate should be kept secret from them. Secret sessions are as much now out of place and date as the sword John Adams wore when presiding over this body would be upon the person of our President pro tempore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The resolution will retain its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Louisiana with reference to one expression in his speech, if he understands that there is on the part of this body or of any member of it on either side of the Chamber a claim to treat the public offices of this country or any of them as the patronage of the body.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not know that I can specify any individual member of the Senate who claims that as a part of the prerogative of the body.

Mr. HOAR. That is not my question, but whether there is any such a thing existing.

Mr. GIBSON. I think the history of the Senate will show that a great many of the leading Senators of this body have in times past regarded their wishes to the Executive as omnipotent to such an extent that when they were not complied with they felt so humiliated that some of them, not at a very remote period, have resigned their places on this floor as Senators.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. While his statement with the qualification he makes of it in times past may have some truth in it, I do not believe that for the last ten years, since the close of the second administration of President Grant, there has been any such claim made on the part of the Senate as a body collectively or on the part of any considerable number of individual Senators; and the whole notion in my belief, so far as my experience goes, is a pure myth, a figment of the imagination, such as prevails in some parts of the country. I think every member of this body on both sides of the Chamber would concur most emphatically in rejecting any such claim for himself or for the Senate, as I am sure my friend does.

Mr. GIBSON. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts did not infer that I intended to make any attack upon him or upon any Senator as abusing his position in the Senate with respect to patronage, but I had in my mind the history of the Senate in regard to the matter of appointments. I think every Senator is aware of the fact that in times past certainly the public patronage has been considered in a large measure as the political right of the Senators from the State in which the appointments were to be made, that they were not only entitled to be consulted, but that they were entitled to control the appointments in their respective States.

Mr. HOAR. I did not ask the question of my honorable friend from Louisiana, for whom I have the greatest respect, as understanding that he had made any attack on the Senate or still less that he had made any on me, for I suppose that nobody ever imputed to me any such claim at any time in my public life.

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. But I asked the question because I thought one sentence in the Senator's remarks might be misunderstood, and might make the foundation of such a claim elsewhere.

Mr. GIBSON. Such was not my intention.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to be permitted to say as a person who is a thorough believer in what is called civil-service reform, in divorcing the appointment to executive offices, except those which are political in their nature, from politics; and, having observed this thing pretty closely for the last ten or eleven years, that I do not believe there is a vestige of that claim or practice, if it ever existed, left in the Senate to-day, or has been for years.

Mr. GIBSON. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that in the last year there has been a rapid change in that respect.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the change has taken place in the last year.

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to continue this discussion at present; but I do not want to let this opportunity pass without affirming my belief that patronage has been the ruin of more men in the Senate politically than anything else.

Mr. HOAR. Of men now in the Senate, or men formerly in the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. With my limited knowledge of the history of the Senate I can cast my eye backward and see men strong in other respects who have been relegated to private life simply on account of their use of the patronage of the Government.

I wish to say one thing more, that since I have been in the Senate I have found it the general, if not the universal, custom of Senators to solicit nominations at the hands of the President, and then come here and act upon those nominations in secret session. If there be a more monstrous impropriety than that I do not know what it is.

Mr. HOAR. It is undoubtedly true that during the administration of Andrew Johnson, on account of the strife which grew up between him and the Senate and House of Representatives, in which the dominant majority in Congress supposed the very existence of the Republic itself was at stake, the Republican Senators, having a two-thirds majority, undertook to deal with the functions of government to some extent as if they had been a Continental Congress without any executive head of the Government whatever; and that in the early part of President Grant's administration there was a contest between the President and the Senate in regard to the limit of these so-called Senatorial prerogatives, in which contest President Grant to some extent yielded the position which he affirmed at the beginning of his administration. The nomination and election of President Hayes was, and was meant to be, by the Republican party a tramping out of that practice. It was effectually and thoroughly trampled out, and has not shown its head as far as I have been able to see for many years past in this body. I do not think my friend from Connecticut will affirm that any of the political ruins to which he has referred are now left in the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut when this subject is likely to be before the Senate again. Several speeches have been made upon it, and all in favor of the proposition. I desire at the earliest opportunity to say something, when it is in order, against the proposition, very briefly, but something on the subject.

Mr. PLATT. I shall move to take up the resolution for consideration immediately after the disposition of the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I must say that I am a little surprised at the charge made by the Senator from Louisiana. I can only understand it from the fact that he has been acting until very recently with a party out of power, and undoubtedly he has supposed that the Republican members of this body were making claims of the character he mentions. I am very confident that for the last ten years, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, no such claim has been made by any considerable portion of this body in theory, nor has there been any such practice.

I had some little opportunity to know what the claims have been by Senators during the last administration, and I say unhesitatingly that I never heard it suggested during that time by any Republican Senator that he was entitled to control the patronage of his State. I can say beyond any fear of controversy as to the correctness of it that that was not the practice of the administration. At least I will speak for the Department over which I presided. When a vacancy occurred it was more frequently the Member from the district where the vacancy occurred who was apt to be consulted than the Senator, and if anybody controlled the patronage of the Department it was the Member and not the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Did anybody control it?

Mr. TELLER. I would say that nobody controlled it. Suppose a land office should become vacant in the State of Kansas. It was necessary to appoint a successor. The Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it would be to present this matter to the President for his action, would have no idea who was a proper person. The practice was in such a case to go to the Member of Congress in whose district the land office was, and inquire as to the various candidates who had presented themselves for appointment. Always the files of the Department had a large number of applications of that kind. If there was any controversy about it, perhaps the Senators might have been also consulted. Nobody claimed and nobody was allowed to dictate the patronage of his State or of his district.

Of course I do not say that Senators did not come and recommend appointments, and Senators on that side of the Chamber will bear witness that in very many instances they came and were also heard, and in not a few instances their wishes were complied with, as they must remember. The Department simply endeavored to find who were competent.

There are two things to be considered when you are making appointments: First, is the man competent? Secondly, is he acceptable to the people? Recognizing the right of the people to have men not only competent, but men who were not objectionable, other qualities have been looked for beside the mere question of competency. A man might be very competent, and yet he might be very objectionable to the people of the country where he was holding office. Men have been recommended, I know, sometimes and have not been appointed, not because their qualifications were questioned, but because it was believed that for some reason there was personal or political hostility of such a character that it was not wise to make the appointment.

I wish to repeat that so far as I know neither the members of the House nor the members of the Senate during the time of which I speak made any claim to control the patronage in any branch of the public service; and if that is not the case now I do not think the change has occurred within the last year, as the Senator from Louisiana suggests, for certainly for the last five years that has been the rule. I can speak as a member of the Senate for nearly ten years, and certainly I never supposed as a member of the Senate that I was entitled to make applications and insist upon having appointments made.

In very many cases while I was a member of this body the appointments in the State which I in part represent were made contrary to my wishes. I never went to the President to complain. I never fought an appointment in my State, although some of the appointees were personally and politically obnoxious to me. If I was satisfied that they were competent, they passed through. I can say that I never made a controversy in the Senate, although many times they were not the men I should have selected. They were selected through other influences perhaps beside my own, and I had nothing to do with the matter.

I wish to repeat that that claim has been made in the public press until the people have come to believe it, and yet for many years at least it has not been true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be returned to the Calendar and hold its place under the eighth rule.

OREGON LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. PLUMB. I now call for the reading of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I appeal to the Senator from Kansas to allow his appropriation bill to be laid aside temporarily for a moment to permit me to call up a local bill to which there will be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is a bill reported from the committee of which the Senator is chairman, and it provides for the establishment of an additional land district in Oregon.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object, if it will lead to no debate.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I shall not insist on proceeding with the bill if it leads to any debate whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOAR. Having charge of the bankruptcy bill, which was laid aside informally, while I shall not object to this request, I wish to say that I have been notified by pretty high authority in the body that a general yielding to bills as they come up would be a violation of the understanding which has been had on both sides of the Chamber, and after my friend from Oregon has gotten through with his bill I shall object to any further yielding, except of course for the appropriation bills.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1999) to establish an additional land district in the State of Oregon.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

An act (S. 2188) granting a pension to Ann Smith.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 2185) for the relief of George Titus.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I now ask that the District appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it to be the order of the Senate that the bill shall be read by paragraphs as in Committee of the Whole for amendment. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for executive office," in line 16, after the word "clerk," to strike out "and assistant secretary;" so as to read:

One clerk, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk, $1,200," and insert "two clerks, at $1,200 each; one stenographer, $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 24, after the word "stationery," to strike out "livery;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, horseshoeing, and other necessary items, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 25, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for salaries and contingent expenses for executive office" from $21,244 to $23,644.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for assessor's office," in line 31, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 37, after the words "in all," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For assessor's office: For one assessor, $3,000; two assistant assessors, at $1,600 each; one clerk, $1,200; three clerks, at $1,000 each; one license clerk, $1,200; one inspector of licenses, $1,200; one assistant or clerk, $900; one clerk and messenger, $900; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, detection of frauds on the revenue, and other necessary items, $1,000; in all, $15,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for collector's office," in line 40, after the word "cashier," to insert:

Who shall in the absence or inability from any cause of the collector perform his duties without additional compensation.

So as to read:

For collector's office: For one collector, $4,000; one cashier, who shall in the absence or inability from any cause of the collector perform his duties without additional compensation, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 50, after the word "arrears," to strike out "eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

For services necessary for preparing an exhibit of all outstanding taxes in arrears, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 51, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for salaries and contingent expenses for collector's office" from $18,000 to $19,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for auditor's office," in line 54, before the word "absence," to strike out "necessary;" so as to read:

For auditor's office: For one auditor, $3,000; one chief clerk, who shall, in the absence or inability from any cause of the auditor, perform his duties, without additional compensation, $1,800, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for attorney's office," in line 67, to increase the appropriation for salary of "one special assistant attorney" from $960 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in line 68, to increase the appropriation for salary of "one law clerk" from $960 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 70, to increase the appropriation for salary of "one messenger" from $192 to $240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 73, to increase from $300 to $500 the appropriation "for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and other necessary items."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 73, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "salaries and contingent expenses for attorney's office" from $8,512 to $9,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 80, after the word "miscellaneous," to insert "items;" in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" and in line 81, after the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For sinking-fund office, under control of the Treasurer of the United States: For one clerk at $1,500; one clerk at $900; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items, $300; in all, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 85, after the word "inquests," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" and in line 86, after the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For coroner's office: For one coroner, $1,800; for contingent expenses, including jurors' fees, stationery, books, blanks, removal of deceased persons, making autopsies, and holding inquests, $700; in all, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses for engineer's office," in line 112, before the words "market-masters," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Two market-masters, at $1,200 each.

Mr. MILLER. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to. I see that all the old officers and inspectors of the District government have been retained, and certainly there is no greater necessity for any of the others than there is for the retention of the market-masters.

Mr. INGALLS. There are three principal markets in the city; the one on B street, what is known as the Northern Liberties, and the Center or Washington Market, between Seventh and Ninth, on the south side of the Avenue. Of course I am not aware of the information that was in the possession of the Committee on Appropriations, and should hesitate to make any suggestion in opposition to their recommendation; but if the Senator having charge of the bill would be willing to permit the number of market-masters to correspond with the number of markets which are maintained, until such time as legislation may be had, perhaps changing or consolidating them, I am inclined to think that the interests of justice might be promoted. I make that suggestion not in the nature of a motion to disagree, but rather in the hope that my colleague may see his way clear to waive the amendment for the present and allow the bill to pass without it.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee was advised somewhat late in its sittings that this office probably was not necessary, but in view of the suggestion which my colleague makes in regard to it, and on account of his familiarity with the affairs of the District, I have no objection to allowing the clause to remain as it came from the other House and to have the amendment disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 115, to add to the provision for "one harbor-master at $1,200" the following proviso:

Provided, That the fees collected by said harbor-master shall be paid to the collector, for payment into the Treasury, to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 119, before the word "rodmen," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four rodmen, at $780 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 120, before the word "axmen," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four axmen, at $650 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 134, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for salaries and contingent expenses for engineer's office" from $65,690 to $65,920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the necessity of a change in the total.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask that that amendment stand over, because the total will have to be readjusted to correspond with the enactment of the Senate a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will have to be increased $1,200, the Chair will observe.

Mr. PLUMB. It may be added just as well now. Sixty-seven thousand one hundred and twenty dollars would be the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 144, after the word "insurance," to insert "rebinding and repairing record-books;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, ice, gas, repairs, insurance, rebinding and repairing record-books, and general necessary expenses of District offices and markets, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "improvements and repairs," in line 149 to increase the item "for repairs to concrete pavements, with the same or other not inferior material," from $55,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 151, to increase the appropriation "for materials for permit work" from $50,000 to $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 151, after the word "and," to strike out "hereafter;" and in line 152, after the word "authorized," to insert "in their discretion;" so as to read:

And the commissioners of the District are authorized, in their discretion, to apply such material to, and pay from this appropriation, the cost of labor for the improvement and repair of alleys and sidewalks when, in their opinion, such course is necessary for the public health, safety, or comfort.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was in the same clause, line 157, before the word "labor," to insert "such;" and in line 160, after the word "taxes," to insert "and shall, when so collected, be credited to said appropriation; so as to read:"

Provided, That the costs of such labor shall be charged against and become a lien on the abutting property, and its collection shall be enforced in the same manner as the collection of general taxes, and shall, when so collected, be credited to said appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 168, to increase from $256,000 to $276,000 the appropriation "for work on sundry avenues and streets and replacement of pavements in localities named in Appendix Ff, annexed to the estimates of the commissioners of the District for 1887."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 169, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for improvements and repairs" from $410,000 to $470,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 303, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For opening and extending suburban streets in connection with existing streets within municipal limits, $40,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That seems to be put in the bill as an amendment. I should like to know of the Senator having charge of the bill what the intention of it is.

Mr. PLUMB. The object I think is to be fairly implied from the language, that it is designed to extend the streets within the city limits to the country beyond and open up suburban streets as they are extended.

Mr. LOGAN. I supposed that was the intention of it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is work which has been going on more or less for some time in the neighborhood of the place where I think the Senator now resides for the purpose of indicating where the streets are to be extended and improved as they shall be surveyed, and so on.

Mr. LOGAN. There have been several surveys made, and there is one certainly that I think the Senator would not desire to carry out at the expense of the people and the destruction of property that is considered very valuable. They have surveyed right through people's yards for the benefit of the city, with the result of destroying quite a number of people's property, as has been done in this city once before. I object to this amendment, for I think the intention of it is, as the Senator has said, to widen some of the streets. A bill of that kind has been introduced. Now, the subject seems to have got into the appropriation bill. Take the street where I live, Thirteenth street; if you widen that street as desired it will utterly ruin it.

Mr. PLUMB. This gives no authority to go on anybody's property. This can only be done in the event that the property-owners themselves agree to it.

Mr. LOGAN. I have seen that thing done heretofore without their agreeing to it. I desire to amend this, after the words "municipal limits," in line 305, by inserting:

But this shall not be understood to authorize the widening of any street now laid out and opened.

If the intention is to do no property any harm that amendment will not hurt it.

Mr. PLUMB. What is that?

Mr. LOGAN. It is to insert:

Provided, That this shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any street that is now opened.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not object to that. As the committee think, and as the commissioners themselves think, wherever the property-owners are willing to give the property for the purpose of having the streets which then or will in time connect with the streets in the municipal limits laid out, that property may be donated and the District then may make such improvements as will either establish the grade or at least indicate the grade and also the boundaries, in order that two things may be accomplished: first, that persons who desire to improve may know where to build, and, next, that the District itself may be in the position of obtaining this property for the purpose of the extension of the streets without having them clogged, broken up, and obstructed by buildings directly on the extension of the streets.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that part of it, but what will be the effect of this provision? I may as well state it now because it will come up again. I reside on the property that I purchased last fall, but unfortunately have not paid for yet; and there the engineers have made out now a survey that would take the whole frontage of my property and come within eight or ten feet of the house where I live and utterly destroy it, and open another street in the rear of it, taking off part of the rear. That is the plat, for I have examined it. It would be utterly destructive not only of what property I have, but of other people's property. This amendment will make it so that there will be no danger of anything of that kind. Then the clause would read:

For opening and extending suburban streets in connection with existing streets within municipal limits, $40,000; but this shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any street now laid out and opened.

If that amendment is put in I have no objection to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that. I quite agree with the Senator about the plat, if he refers to the one I do. The plan of laying out the whole District into rectangles is not one that I would approve if I lived in the District. There is no authority for that. The only design of this is that the work of opening streets the property for which shall be given by the property-holders may be going on in order that the present extension of the city may not be interrupted.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no doubt that is the intention of the committee, but the precaution I want to make is on account of what might be done.

Mr. PLUMB. I make no objection to the modification.

Mr. INGALLS. Would not the object of the Senator from Illinois be better subserved by striking out the words "in connection with existing streets" from the committee's amendment so as to leave it simply "for opening and extending suburban streets within municipal limits $40,000," leaving the question of the continuation of the existing street plan a matter for further consideration?

Mr. PLUMB. Would not those two words "suburban" and "municipal" be inconsistent?

Mr. INGALLS. "Municipal" refers to the District. That includes the limits of the District of Columbia.

As a matter of fact the population of this District has increased so rapidly that it has begun to overflow the corporate limits of the city of Washington; it has reached the Boundary, and is locating itself in various suburban additions to the city on the heights beyond; and the owners of that property, instead of accommodating and adjusting their additions to the existing plan of the city of Washington, have laid out their streets without any reference whatever to that, and the result is a bewildering network of streets of irregular width and uncertain direction; and if the population continues to increase at its present percentage, within a very short time outside the corporate limits a condition of affairs will exist that will be exceedingly embarrassing and will be entirely incompatible with the development of this District upon any symmetrical plan.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask if, when the Senator speaks of "the boundary" he means the boundary of the city?

Mr. INGALLS. What we call Boundary road, that runs up Rock Creek in the west and then continues to the foot of the ridge running eastward, passing the head of Fourteenth street, the car stables, and down by Le Droit Park, and so on toward the Eastern Branch.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is not the boundary of the District.

Mr. INGALLS. No; that is the boundary of the city of Washington, Boundary street.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then the land to which the Senator refers, the additions, will be within the control of Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. Entirely within the jurisdiction of Congress, because it is within the limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the committee taken into consideration directing the continuance of surveys and laying out symmetrical plans?

Mr. INGALLS. It is only within a very few years that has been a matter of the slightest practical consequence, because there has been abundant room within the corporate limits of the city for all the population that desired residence property. But now, if the Senator is familiar with the extension of population which has been rapidly toward the northwest and northward, it first began to ascend the heights beyond the Boundary road, and we have the Mount Pleasant addition and others whose names I do not know, and those suburban additions to the city of Washington have been laid out with entire disregard of the street plans of the city.

Mr. HAWLEY. My object in inquiring was that I might make another suggestion. I say to the Senator as representing the Committee on the District of Columbia that I think he would be supported in any immediate measure for preventing that sort of irregular and disagreeable extension.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the District of Columbia have reported, and there is already on the Calendar, a bill providing for an official map of the District that shall provide for the extension of the present avenue and street system to the territorial limits of the District, and that no subdivisions on suburban plots shall hereafter be filed and entitled to the advantages of registration unless they adapt themselves to that map. There is also another plan that has been submitted by property-holders very largely, providing that the Government and the District of Columbia shall provide for an immediate extension of these streets and avenues through the suburban property out to the District boundary by condemnation, the expenses to be paid for out of the Treasury and out of the District funds. My impression is that that would hardly be advisable, and that the amount which would be required would be so great as to be beyond the capacity of the people to pay and perhaps beyond the advantages that would result from it.

I have an idea that the development of the street system of the District ought to be controlled very largely by the topography of the land over which the roads run, and that the attempt to lay out this whole District beyond the boundary of Washington in a rectangular plan would perhaps be unadvisable; but that there should be some method provided by which additions to the city should be laid out to correspond with the existing streets and avenues of the city I am quite clear. I suppose, however, that the intention of the Committee on Appropriations was not to legislate on that subject in this amendment. I therefore suggest that the amendment be amended by omitting the words I have named, leaving this money to be appropriated in the improvement and development of suburban streets.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not object to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], provided the amendment I propose shall be added also.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear that read.

Mr. LOGAN. My amendment is—

Provided, That this section shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any street now laid out and opened.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to that. I do not suppose there is any existing power, without legislation, for the commissioners to proceed to condemn property for streets and avenues and widening existing streets. It requires legislation. I think the apprehensions of the Senator from Illinois are unfounded, but of course I see no objection to the amendment he proposes.

Mr. LOGAN. My apprehensions may be unfounded; but when I see bills introduced in the Senate and in the House by Senators and Representatives who certainly have interests in property here, that utterly destroy the property of others and benefit their own, I have apprehensions.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will see that if he has apprehensions based on actions such as he suggests this amendment will not interfere with that.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it will not, but that has not come up yet.

Mr. INGALLS. So I would suggest to the Senator that rather than load this bill with an amendment that does not concern it, it would be better to leave that until the subject to which he refers comes up, because I am very sure that under existing law there is no power in the commissioners to condemn property for widening streets or opening additional streets in the suburbs in accordance with the existing street plan or otherwise.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that there is no law now, but this will not hurt the bill. It does not encumber it; it does not appropriate any money; it just prohibits them from destroying people's property. That is all, and that is what I desire to have in it.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 305, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this paragraph shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any street now laid out and opened.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Now I suggest that the words "in connection with existing streets" ought to be stricken out; otherwise it would be an unfair inference that no portion of this money could be spent on any street that did not connect with existing streets in the city. I suppose the design is to allow the money to be expended generally, at the discretion of the commissioners, on suburban streets, whether they connect with existing streets or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 304, after the words "suburban streets," it is proposed to strike out "in connection with existing streets."

Mr. PLUMB. Strike out the words "within municipal limits" also.

Mr. INGALLS. The words "municipal limits" apply to the limits of the District of Columbia and not to the limits of the city of Washington; but it will make no difference if they go out.

Mr. PLUMB. Let those words go out, for they seem to imply a contradiction to the word "suburban." Of course there is no authority beyond the limits of the District anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated as now modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 304, after the words "suburban streets," it is proposed to strike out "in connection with existing streets within municipal limits;" so as to read:

For opening and extending suburban streets, $40,000: Provided, That this paragraph shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any street now laid out and opened.

One pumping-engine, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 406, to increase the total appropriations for the fire department from $114,600 to $118,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Before passing from this item in regard to the fire department, I wish to say that the committee were pressed very strongly to provide for a very large increase in the salaries paid to the force. On investigation the committee came to the conclusion that the fire department here is very well served and in every respect what it ought to be, but it was found impossible to give all the increases asked for. So the committee took up merely the pay of petty officers. On two occasions heretofore within the last two years the pay of the privates has been increased. While it is not yet as large as in some of the larger cities, it is the same as in Philadelphia and in Baltimore. It was thought advisable, in view of the fact that the pay of privates has been increased on two occasions heretofore, so as to make the salary the same as that of the petty officers, that the salary of these petty officers should be increased. That was the only feature of increase the committee entered upon for the reason which I have stated.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for "telegraph and telephone service," in line 412, before the word "repair-men," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 413, after the word "each," to strike out "two laborers, at $400 each," and insert "one laborer, at $400;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 421, after the words "extra labor," to insert "new boxes;" and in line 422, after the word "items," to strike out "$6,500" and insert "7,000;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 489, after the word "grounds," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" in line 491, after the word "insurance," to insert "tools and materials for industrial instruction;" and in line 493, after the words "in all," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "seventy-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For buildings for schools: For the purchase of sites, and the erection and completion of new buildings, and for furniture for new school buildings, $65,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I intended to propose an amendment to increase that appropriation still further. I am not sure that I can do it under the circumstances, but I wish to put on record here, not alone for the benefit of the Senate but as in some measure an appeal to the commissioners of this District themselves, that they shall pay more serious attention to this particular subject.

I see in the preceding paragraph that $6,000 is appropriated for the rent of school buildings, the principal of which you may call $125,000 or $150,000. I submit that that money ought to be expended for an extension of the schools of the District rather than to continue to pay rent. I perceive that the appropriation for the improvement of streets and avenues is $470,000. I make no objection; I presume that is necessary; but I do not believe that all of it is quite as necessary as money for schools for the children of the District.

It must be remembered that we have on the statute-book an act of Congress passed as long ago as June 25, 1864, making school attendance in the District compulsory. That act fines each parent or guardian who fails to send his child to school twelve weeks in the year $20 for each offense; yet there are now, I am assured by a responsible citizen of the District, thirteen thousand more children of school age in this District of Columbia than there are school seats in the District; and the District, it must be remembered, can not build a school-house except by permission of Congress; it can do nothing whatever.

I could make a very disagreeable record here if I were to read the facts concerning one section of the city alone. In the third school division one school is kept in an old stable with five or six other stables immediately adjoining, low and narrow, ill-ventilated, and ill-lighted rooms, with stairways up which two children can not go side by side. Another is kept over a tin and paint shop. The teachers complain of the noise made by the tin shop, and the parents complain of the smell caused by the paint below. Another of the schools is kept in an old engine-house.

These three are in absolutely unfit places. There are twenty-seven schools in this division called half-day schools. Children that go in the forenoon must gather up all their books, strap them, and carry them home for other children, strangers, to come and occupy the desks in the afternoon, or they will not be at all sure that they will see their books again. There are twenty-seven schools of that description.

I do not say whose fault it is, but it ought not to be allowed to continue.

The appropriations for school purposes in the District have not kept pace with the acknowledged and obvious rapid increase of population. I have a table of the appropriations: in 1881, $100,000; in 1882, $174,630; in 1883, $100,068; in 1884, 90,000; in 1885, $69,000—continually decreasing; in 1886, $60,000; and by this bill as it passed the House $40,000 only for 1887 against $470,000 for new streets for the benefit of property purchasers in the suburbs! It is a very bad record, Mr. President.

I am sorry that an effort was not made earlier in this matter, so that the appropriation for this coming year might be something reasonable. I thank the committee for making it $65,000, but it might be not only $65,000 but $165,000 or $200,000, for $200,000 expended for additional houses would not accommodate the number of children that will desire to go to school eighteen months from this time in this District.

I have conversed with the member of the Committee on Appropriations who conducts this bill. The committee, I am glad to say, strike out "forty" and insert "sixty-five," so that the total appropriation may be $65,000. This eastern division which is so badly off, having so many half-day schools and three in stables and engine-houses, says it ought to have two twelve-room buildings. They have a way of calculating here that I am not familiar with, but a school here is called sixty-five children. The people of the third division or East Washington want two buildings with eight school-rooms each and two with twelve. They are very modest. That would not put all the children in schools; that would not dispense with the half-day schools; that would not dispense with the stables and engine-houses; but they modestly say they would be content with that. I supposed that the bill gave them only one addition of an eight-room school building. But I understand from the member of the committee in charge of the bill—and I say this for the satisfaction of the people of that section—that the commissioners propose to use about $50,000 of the $65,000 in the third division; and a commissioner told me that they also desire liberty to sell certain play-grounds which are in excess of the quantity needed, and they will then do something at hiring better buildings and making a change in the buildings hired; but I beg the gentlemen who have these matters more especially under their charge to bring us a more liberal bill next year.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the amount provided in this bill is $20,000 in excess of the estimate and $25,000 in excess of the amount proposed to be appropriated by the other House for school buildings. The total amount appropriated for school purposes by this bill is $40,000 greater than last year and some $60,000 greater than the estimates for the present year.

So far as any action by the Committee on Appropriations is concerned either in the present year or in the years heretofore in which I have had to do with the bill, I can say that they have never failed to do all that was asked of them, and at the same time I think they have pretty generally done about what they thought ought to be done, not in the line, perhaps, of overrunning the estimates very largely, but fairly keeping pace with what the demands of the District seemed to require.

I do not take so much offense at the schooling in a stable as my friend from Connecticut does, because in the time when I went to school such a stable as these children are schooled in would have been a first-class school-house; and I remember about a somewhat celebrated personage having been born in a stable. So the word stable does not have any terror for me.

It has been a part of the policy of the District, and I think on the whole wisely, not to enlarge the school facilities in advance of the actual increase of school children; at the same time by degrees in such a way as to be able always to insure having the best possible buildings, that is to say, to avail themselves of all modern ideas in regard to school buildings.

In 1884 the amount appropriated was $90,000 for school buildings; in 1883 the amount was $100,000; in 1885 it was $69,500; and for the current year it was $60,000. This year it is proposed to make it $65,000. The committee heard with pleasure a very prominent citizen of the District who spoke of the needs of the sections of the city of which the Senator from Connecticut has especially spoken, and a certain amount which, by the concurrent testimony of that gentleman, who acted in a representative capacity, and the commissioners themselves agree was ample for the purpose which was in view, and we think that the appropriation in the bill will put things in a pretty fair shape in that district, and in another year at the outside there will be no possible occasion for any schools over tin-shops or schools in stables.

I have no doubt there are a large number of school children here who could not be accommodated if they would all go to the schools at once, but that is true of all communities, and I think that when we take into consideration the exceptional condition of things in this District the number here is no larger than elsewhere.

It must be borne in mind that many persons come into these schools in an unauthorized way, who are not proper to be admitted at all. When I speak of those I do not speak of the children of persons who are employed in the Departments, nor of the children of Senators and members of the other House; but the railroad facilities connecting this city with the adjoining country, and the general disposition to get away from the country schools of the contiguous portions of Maryland and Virginia have developed a tendency to bring children from those States into the District schools. I think on the whole that if the schools were pretty carefully weeded out of those children there will be room for a great many more District children than there are now.

My belief is that the building accommodations for the schools of the District of Columbia are not bad, all things considered; but whether bad or good they are constantly being made better. It seemed to the committee as though the amount named would fairly meet the requirements of the situation this year. At the same time there has been no disposition whatever to resist an application for even a larger sum if there had been such representations as would seem to make it perfectly certain that it was needed. No disposition exists, so far as I am aware of, not to provide an adequate appropriation for the schools.

The Senator will notice that on page 20 of the bill we have appropriated $2,500 for the purpose of aiding night schools, which will take in a large number of the children of whom he speaks, who are engaged in callings which prevent them from being instructed in the schools in daytime, and it is possible that that may become quite a feature of the school system of the District hereafter.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of course I did not censure the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator will remember, and there is force in some of his explanation. I admit—it had not occurred to me—that children who live out of the limits of the District come in easily upon the railroads and help to fill these schools, but after all he has said the fact remains that there are twenty-seven schools in this District where children are allowed to go but half a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Kansas, in line 491, after the word "tools," to put in the word "apparatus" so as to include the proper apparatus in the industrial instruction.

Mr. PLUMB. The language used in that clause was furnished by a member of the board of District commissioners who has this matter specially in charge.

That gives me the opportunity, if the Senator will permit me, to state just exactly what the plan is. Some months ago this member of the board of commissioners got the idea of using some of the vacant space in the basement of one of these school buildings for the purpose of enabling some of the children to have industrial education in a minor way; that is to say, to learn the use of tools in connection with work in wood, &c. That has been carried on in a modest way out of the contingent fund for schools. It is not designed yet, at all events no person suggests, to make it a special feature of teaching in the District, but to enlarge it by degrees as circumstances may seem to warrant, leaving it to take such a place in the school system of the District as may be necessary or as may prove to be valuable by the result of experiment.

It is only intended now to make use of a limited sum, comparatively speaking, for furnishing tools and materials, in order that the boys who attend other portions of the school may have the opportunity to accustom themselves to the ordinary handling of tools. The word "apparatus," while not objectionable in any special degree, would not at all events be necessary to the accomplishment of any purpose now in view.

Mr. HOAR. I have had a good deal of experience, possibly as much as the commissioner of the District referred to, in this particular matter in my time. There are many things which are used, even in very elementary instruction in industrial education, which the words "tools and materials" would not be sure to cover. I do not suggest an enlargement of the appropriation. Of course it would all be within the power of the board. I think it will be found necessary to include more than the words used do.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection at all. I only wanted to explain that there was to be no elaborate system of instruction of this kind.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert the word "apparatus" in line 491.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did intend to make a little reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas concerning the stable that I referred to.

Mr. HOAR. There is no objection to my amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; there is no objection to it.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the word "apparatus" will be inserted after the word "tools," in line 491.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is of course possible that a building which may have been once a stable may be so refitted as to make a good schoolhouse, but I will read a statement signed by the teachers who use that building at present concerning the condition of that stable:

We, the undersigned, teachers employed in the old stable now used as a school building, and known as Peabody Annex—

Which is a misuse of a very good name—

Peabody Annex, call your attention to the condition of the aforesaid building.

The ceilings are too low to admit of proper ventilation, those on the second floor being less than 9 feet, and no means of ventilation except by windows and doors, subjecting children and teachers to a constant draught. Even this is not fully under the control of the teachers owing to the defective window-pulleys and doors that will not shut.

The light is insufficient; owing to the low ceilings the windows are brought on a level with the pupils' eyes. No shades or single shutters permit any softening of the light. This is a four-room building, into which are crowded eight full schools.

Over five hundred children, if they are all there.

As there are neither play-rooms nor cloak-rooms, and only very narrow halls, afternoon pupils arriving before the morning schools are dismissed, either have to be exposed to the inclemency of the weather or crowd into the morning schools and disturb their closing exercises.

The stairway that leads to the upper floor is too narrow to admit of two pupils passing comfortably, and it is dangerously steep.

There is no water in the building.

The outhouses are not in a sanitary condition.

The building is out of repair generally, the ceiling leaks, plastering falling, blackboards peeling, window panes out, and door-locks broken, one outside door being kept closed by means of a spade, and furniture inadequate to size and number of pupils.

The state of the surroundings and proximity to a row of stables render it an undesirable location.

We invite an immediate investigation of these facts now presented.

Yours, very respectfully,

[Signed by teachers of the Annex.]

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator to whom that was addressed.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is addressed to Mr. Appleton P. Clark, trustee public schools, division 3.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to have been successfully concealed until the present moment, because it was not before the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was presented to the trustee of the public schools. How far he carried it I do not know. I do not say whose blame it was. These facts are asserted by all the teachers of that district.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the subcommittee listened to everybody who in any way wished to bring their desire to our attention in regard to this bill. We sat for days in its consideration, heard everybody with a great deal of patience, and never heard of that. I do not say the statements are not correct; but certainly it must have failed to impress those to whom it was addressed, or there is some other reason why in all the hearings on this very interesting subject those representations were not made to the committee. I do not question it at all. As I said, I know nothing about it; but the committee did not have a chance to act upon it at all events.

Mr. HAWLEY. I supposed that the responsible citizen who handed it to me had presented it to the subcommittee. He certainly should have done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "miscellaneous expenses," in line 507, to increase the item "for rent of District offices" from $3,600 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 510, after the word "damages," to insert "forage, care of horses, horseshoeing;" so as to read:

For books for register of wills, printing, checks, damages, forage, care of horses, horseshoeing, and other necessary items, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 512, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "miscellaneous expenses" from $9,600 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "health department," in line 521, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read

Two clerks, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 522, after the word "each," to insert:

One clerk, at $1,000; temporary clerk-hire, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 530, after the word "items," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" so as to read:

And for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, repairs to pound and vehicles, forage, meat for dogs, horseshoeing, maintenance of ambulance service, and other necessary items, $4,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by making that sum $4,500. That is done on the very urgent representation of all the commissioners and of the health officer, that a careful computation of what is absolutely necessary in view of present contingencies, that is to say nothing that is unforeseen, will require that amount of money. It is only $150 more than the amount appropriated last year. I move to amend the amendment by making the amount $4,500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 531, after the word "garbage," to strike out "and ashes twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Removal of garbage, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 533, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for "health department" from $46,480 to $43,180.

Mr. PLUMB. The sum should be $43,680 in place of $43,180.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "water department," in line 557, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one inspector, at $3 per day, $939" and to insert "four inspectors, at $3 per day each, $3,756."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 563, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "water department" from $11,939 to $14,756.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 569, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

For engineers and firemen, coal, material, and for high service in Washington and Georgetown, pipe-distribution to high and low service, including public hydrants, fire-plugs, material and labor, repairing and laying new mains, and lowering mains, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "revenues," to insert "including drawback certificates;" so as to read:

That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during the fiscal year 1887 than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues, including drawback certificates, of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 11, before the word "settlement," to insert the words "keeping and;" and in line 13, after the word "act," to insert "and credited to said District as such, together with all other revenues, as received upon the books of the Treasury;" so as to read:

And all the drawback certificates heretofore or hereafter received for general taxes under the acts of June 27, 1879, and July 5, 1884, and paid or deposited in the Treasury, shall be considered and treated as money in the keeping and settlement of accounts between the United States and the District of Columbia under this or any other act, and credited to said District as such, together with all other revenues, as received upon the books of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest the insertion of a comma after the word "received," in line 14 of section 2. Probably that will be understood, but it would be best to insert it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A comma will be inserted at the point indicated if there be no objection.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD some tables containing the summing up of the different items of appropriations in the bill by comparison with those of preceding years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The tables will be inserted in the RECORD unless objection be made.

LOUIS MELCHER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 2186, entitled "An act granting a pension to Louis Melcher."

This claimant enlisted on the 25th day of May, 1861, and was discharged for disability on the 16th day of August, 1861, having been in the service less than three months.

The certificate of the surgeon of his regiment, made at the time of his discharge, stated his disability to be "lameness, caused by previous repeated and extensive ulcerations of his legs, extending deeply among the muscles and impairing their powers and action by cicatrices, all existing before enlistment, and not mentioned to the mustering officers at the time."

Upon this certificate, given at the time of the claimant's discharge and while he was actually under the surgeon's observation, an application for a pension was rejected by the Pension Bureau.

In the absence of anything impeaching the ability and integrity of the surgeon of the regiment, his certificate should, in my opinion, be regarded as a true statement of the condition of the claimant at the time of his discharge, though the committee's report suggests that the surgeon's skill may have been at fault when he declared that the ulcers existed before enlistment. The cicatrices, showing beyond a doubt the previous existence of this difficulty, would be plainly apparent upon an examination by a surgeon, and their origin could hardly be mistaken. The term of the claimant's service was not sufficiently long to have developed and healed even imperfectly, in a location previously healthy, ulcers of the kind mentioned in the claimant's application.

My approval of this bill is therefore withheld upon the ground that I find nothing in my examination of the facts connected with the case which impeaches the value of the surgeon's certificate upon which the adverse action of the Pension Bureau was predicated.

EDWARD AYRES—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

A bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act granting a pension to Edward Ayres," and No. 363, is herewith returned without approval.

The person named in this bill enlisted October 3, 1861, in an Indiana regiment, and was mustered out of the service December 13, 1865. He represents that he was injured in the hip at the battle of Day's Gap, April 30, 1863, and for this a pension is provided for him by the bill under consideration. His application for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that it was proved on a special examination of the case that the claimant was injured by a fall when a boy, and that the injury complained of existed prior to his enlistment.

There is not a particle of proof or a fact stated either in the committee's report or the records in the Pension Bureau, so far as they are brought to my notice, tending to show that the claimant was in hospital or under medical care a single day during the whole term of his enlistment.

The report of the committee contains the following statement:

"The record evidence proves that he was in this engagement, but there is no proof from this source that he was wounded. By numerous comrades who were present it is proven that he was hurt by the explosion of a shell as claimed. It is also shown that he has been disabled ever since; and the examining surgeon specifically describes the wound, and twice verifies that he is permanently disabled. From the fact that a man was exceedingly liable to injury under the circumstances in which he was placed, and from the evidence of eye-witnesses, the committee are of opinion that he was wounded as alleged."

A wound from a shell causing the person injured to be "disabled ever since" usually results in hospital or medical treatment. Not only is there no such claim made in this case, but on the contrary it appears that the claimant served in his regiment two years and nearly eight months after the alleged injury, and until he was mustered out.

It is represented to me by a report from the Pension Bureau that after his alleged wound, and in May or June, 1863, the claimant deserted, and in July of that year was arrested in the State of Indiana and returned to duty without trial. If this report is correct, the party now seeking a pension at the hands of the Government, for disability incurred in the service, seems to have been capable of considerable physical exertion, though not very creditable, within a few weeks after he claims to have received the injury upon which his application is based.

DUDLEY B. BRANCH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 857, entitled "An act granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch."

This claim is based upon the allegation, as appears by the committee's report, that the person named in the bill has a hernia, and that on the 9th day of June, 1862, while in the military service and in the line of duty "in getting over a fence he fell heavily, striking a stone or hard substance, and received the hernia in his left side."

In December, 1875, thirteen and a half years thereafter, he filed an application for a pension, which was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that there was no record of the alleged hernia and the claimant was unable to furnish satisfactory evidence of its origin in the service.

The fact is stated in the committee's report that late in the year 1863 this soldier was transferred to the Invalid Corps; and the records show that he was thus transferred for a disability entirely different from that upon which he now bases his claim. He was mustered out in September, 1864, at the end of his term of service.

I am convinced that the rejection of this claim by the Pension Bureau was correct and think its action should not be reversed.

I suppose an injury of the description claimed, if caused by violence directly applied, is quite palpable, its effect usually immediate, and its existence easily proved. The long time which elapsed between the injury and the claimant's application for a pension may be fairly considered as bearing upon the merits of such application, while the fact that the claimant was transferred to the Invalid Corps more than a year after he alleges the injury occurred, for an entirely different disability, can not be overlooked. In the committee's report the statement is found that the beneficiary named in the bill was in two different hospitals during the year 1863, and yet it is not claimed that the history of his hospital treatment furnishes any proof of the injury upon which his claim is now based.

JAMES C. CHANDLER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1630, entitled "An act granting a pension to James C. Chandler."

It appears from the report of the committee to whom this bill was referred and from an examination of the official records, that the proposed beneficiary first enlisted on the 27th day of August, 1861, and about nine months thereafter, on the 1st day of June, 1862, was discharged on account of disability arising from chronic bronchitis.

Notwithstanding the chronic character of his alleged disability, he enlisted again on the 3d day of January, 1864, seventeen months after such discharge.

No statement is presented of the bounty received by him upon either enlistment.

He was finally mustered out on the 19th day of September, 1865.

He first applied for a pension under the general law in May, 1869, alleging that in April, 1862, he was run over by a wagon and injured in his ankle. This accident occurred during his first enlistment; but instead of the injury having been then regarded a disability, he was discharged from such enlistment less than two months thereafter on account of chronic bronchitis.

It appears from the committee's report that his application was rejected, and that another was afterward made, alleging that the claimant had been afflicted with typhoid fever contracted in May, 1862, resulting in "rheumatism and disease of the back in region of kidneys."

This application was also rejected on the ground that any disability that might have arisen from the cause alleged "had not existed in a pensionable degree since the date of filing the claim therefor," which was February 10, 1885.

There still remained an appeal to Congress; and probably there were not wanting those who found their interests in advising such an appeal and who had at hand Congressional precedents which promised a favorable result. That the parties interested did not miscalculate the chances of success is demonstrated by the bill now before me, which, in direct opposition to the action of the Pension Bureau, grants a pension to a man who, though discharged from enlistment for a certain alleged disability, made two applications for a pension based upon two distinct causes, both claimed to exist within two months prior to such discharge, and both different from the one upon which he accepted the same; and notwithstanding the fact that the proposed beneficiary, after all these disabilities had occurred, passed an examination as to his physical fitness for re-enlistment, actually did re-enlist, and served till finally mustered out at the close of the war.

If any money is to be given this man from the public Treasury it should not be done under the guise of a pension.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 24, 1886.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it was the order of the Senate that the bill should be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. HOAR. With the understanding that any Senator might return to any section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The understanding is, although it goes through that way, that any motion to go back is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it. The bill will be read in the manner indicated.

The Secretary read from section 1 to section 7, inclusive.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of the bill to section 7, which reads, beginning in line 16:

In districts which are not within any organized circuit of the United States the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court in bankruptcy may be exercised by the district judge.

I should like to inquire what portion of the country that refers to.

Mr. HOAR. It refers to the District of Columbia and, I suppose, the Territories, although the Territories are provided for expressly.

Mr. TELLER. I was under the impression that it might be intended to include the Territories, but it does not include the Territories, because the judge of a Territory is not a district judge within the meaning of the law, and if it was meant to refer to the District of Columbia it would be easy to say so.

Mr. HOAR. I was mistaken; it does not include the Territories.

Mr. TELLER. It does not refer to the Territories at all?

Mr. HOAR. That is true. The Senator is right. That was a hasty remark. I said it might include the Territories, although they were provided for in their own way.

Mr. TELLER. If this means the District of Columbia, why not make it definite?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will let it pass, we can come back to it.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to letting it pass, but I should like to know exactly to what it refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Before we go on, let me call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the word "district," in section 7. It ought to be better defined as to what territory or what division is meant than by the word "district." If it refers to the district court of the United States there is no difficulty about it; but if it refers to anything else the language ought to be changed.

Mr. TELLER. There are no districts which are not in circuits, unless it applies to the District of Columbia or the Territories. It can not apply to the Territories, because it speaks of the "district judge." It means a district judge in a United States district court. The Territories are not districts in the use of the term when so used.

Mr. HOAR. I think the clause beginning in line 16 should be stricken out. I think it is a remnant of a bill which did not contain the provision which was put afterward into this bill in section 2:

That the several district courts of the United States and of the Territories, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia, are constituted courts of bankruptcy within their several territorial limits.

When that was inserted, which was not in the original draught of Judge Lowell, these three lines in section 7 I think should have been stricken out. They may be stricken out, and if before the bill gets into the Senate I find any reason for retaining them I shall call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the language again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, line 16, it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "judge," at the end of the section, as follows:

In districts which are not within any organized circuit of the United States the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court in bankruptcy may be exercised by the district judge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section 8 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the final judgment, decree, or order of the circuit court having jurisdiction in all matters, questions, and controversies properly arising in the courts of bankruptcy as such, in whatever mode they may be tried, shall not be reviewed by the Supreme Court excepting upon a certificate of division of opinion between two of the judges of said circuit court.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that this section allows the Supreme Court to review the action of the circuit court, but not the action of the Territorial supreme court. It seems to me the Territorial supreme court of each Territory should be put in the same position with the circuit court, and if appeals lie or reviews are had in any shape upon certificate or otherwise to the Supreme Court from the circuit court, there is probably greater reason why the review should be had from the Territorial rather than from the circuit courts. It seems to me that the section should be amended so as to include the supreme court of each Territory as well as the circuit court.

Mr. HOAR. This only refers to a review, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Colorado to move an amendment to the bill?

Mr. TELLER. No; this is not my bill, and I have not any sympathy with it at all. I wish to see the bill, however, if it ever becomes a law, put upon the statute-book in such a way that it will mean something. Section 7 provides:

That the circuit court of each district and the supreme court of each Territory shall have a general superintendence and jurisdiction of all controversies and questions arising in the district court of such district or Territory, sitting in bankruptcy.

Then section 8 provides:

That the final judgment, decree, or order of the circuit court having jurisdiction in all matters, questions, and controversies properly arising in the courts of bankruptcy as such, in whatever mode they may be tried, shall not be reviewed by the Supreme Court excepting upon a certificate of division of opinion between two of the judges of said circuit court.

That provides for a review of the circuit court proceedings, but there is no provision at all for a review of the Territorial supreme court, which could not come up on a division of the judges, because there are three of them.

Mr. HOAR. It was not intended to apply to a full court as in a Territory, at least three or four, or I suppose in some five judges before long, on account of the great pressure for an increase. I understand it to apply to the review which comes up in a district from the circuit court on a division of opinion where the court is held by two judges.

It seems to me that on the whole, considering the infrequency of such cases and the crowded state of the docket of the Supreme Court it would not be well to enlarge their jurisdiction by carrying up from the Territorial supreme court, consisting of several judges, any question whatever of the final decree in a court of bankruptcy.

Mr. PLATT. Does the bill allow an appeal from the circuit court in questions where the amount involved is $5,000?

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that it does. On the question of the distribution of the estate, the decision of the court is final except where the two judges dissent. That is the policy of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me that whatever the rule would be, independent of section 8, as to the power of the Supreme Court to review any proceeding had in the supreme court of any Territory, it remains unaffected by section 8 of the bill. Section 8 is a limitation upon the power of the Supreme Court to review an order or decree of the circuit court, but it is not a limitation upon their power to review any decree or judgment of the supreme court of a Territory reviewing the proceeding of the associate judge of the Territory. So, if it was intended that there should be no appeal or no review in the Supreme Court of anything done by the supreme court of a Territory there should be some limitation in the bill, because it seems to me that in any case where an appeal lies generally from the decision of the supreme court of a Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States it would lie under this bill in bankruptcy, the limitation in the eighth section relating only to circuit courts and not limiting at all an appeal from the supreme court of a Territory. I do not know what the rule is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no amendment is offered to section 8, the Secretary will under the rule adopted by the Senate read the next section.

The Secretary read section 9 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 9. That any debt, demand, or property claimed by the trustee shall be sued for in such court, either State or Federal, as the bankrupt would have been entitled to resort to in enforcing the same claim: Provided, That the court of bankruptcy may in any case, where the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts is concurrent, direct that the suit shall be brought in the State court.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 5, I move to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

Provided, That the court of bankruptcy shall in any case, &c.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state that again?

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the word "may," in line 5, and to insert the word "shall," so that wherever the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts is concurrent the suit shall be brought in the State court.

Mr. HOAR. That was a subject of great consideration in the committee and in the subcommittee. It seemed to us that the law ought not to provide that the State court should in all cases have jurisdiction; in other words, that we should not take away in the case of bankruptcy all the powers of the United States court, all the right of a citizen of another State. For instance, where a citizen of another State happens to be traveling we did not think it right that he should be sued by an assignee in bankruptcy without his power to transfer the suit to the United States court. I doubt whether that would be constitutional, and it seems to me that it would not be reasonable or expedient; but the person having property or title which is in suit ought to have, if it be for the interest of the estate, the right to have the United States courts open to him, and if the court of bankruptcy shall direct it, may go either to the United States court or the State court.

Mr. PLUMB. How would the direction of the court in bankruptcy obviate the constitutional provision in the case the Senator has cited?

Mr. HOAR. I was speaking rather to the whole policy of this thing, not that particular case.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that if there is to be any discretion, there ought to be an entire discretion; or else it ought to be limited in such a way as to bring the discretion entirely within the constitutional provision.

Mr. HOAR. That matter was very fully discussed in the Senate. If I recollect aright, the proposition which the Senator now makes was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and after discussion the arrangement proposed here was inserted in the bill by the Senate in the last Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that it makes any special difference, for if we are to pass any bankrupt law, to use a common expression, the tail may as well go with the hide; for whatever is now left of the jurisdiction of the State courts will be wholly and entirely sucked up and taken away by this bill. So I do not know that I care to contend about the little remnant of jurisdiction which would be left to the State courts under the amendment which I have proposed.

I may as well say here and now as at any other time that I regard this bill as the most vicious that could possibly receive the sanction of Congress. It is not only to take away all the jurisdiction that is left to the State courts and put it into that great omnium gatherum, the Federal courts of the United States, but it is the compulsory adaptation to the system of business now prevailing in the seaboard cities of that of the small dealers and traders in the United States situated at interior and country points.

Under this bill there is not a local merchant in the State of Kansas who may not be adjudged a bankrupt every day of his life, however solvent he may be. It is an attempt to put into leading-strings under the absolute control of the great financial powers of Boston and New York all the great and all the minor affairs of the business of the interior portion of this country, to prescribe to them rules and regulations under penalty of the violation of which they can only do business—rules and regulations which are entirely foreign to the character of the business which they do, to the necessities of their situation, and to all that by which they are surrounded and which goes to make up what they call their business, minor, of course, in comparison with the princely merchants that the Senator from Massachusetts represents, and yet major in the sense that it affords them their livelihood, and not only that, but constitutes in addition the link which binds all the affairs of their neighborhood to the greater affairs of the community at large.

These people carrying on business ranging from a thousand to five and ten thousand dollars a year, modest, unpretending, solvent to the last degree, honest, making up the great middle class of this country in a trade way, are to have their business broken in upon, caught up, brought into this rude and jostling relation to the business of New York city and Boston for the purpose of enabling the men who sell goods in those places to reach out from their counting-houses and catch hold upon the unwary and at the penalty of involuntary bankruptcy compel them to submit to extortion.

This bill may be as perfect as human language can make it, and yet no one can tell until it is tried that it will not be the miracle of extortion and oppression which the bankrupt law was that was repealed in 1877. The repeal of that law was the beginning of prosperity for the people of the United States. In my humble judgment, it contributed as much as almost any other single thing to the revival of prosperity which immediately succeeded it.

Mr. HOAR. What is the present condition?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Massachusetts asks as to the present condition. If his question means anything, it means that the bankrupt law which preceded 1877 was the means of the lack of prosperity of that time. I have no doubt that as bad as things are to-day they can be aggravated by the passage of unwise laws, of which this is one.

There is no demand from any section of the country, except from the large cities, for this law. There is no man who is a minor trader, who is a small merchant, who lives in any town of 5,000, or from that to 50,000, inhabitants, who has ever asked for the passage of a bankrupt law. As I said before, there is not one of all those people who do not commit a multitude of acts of bankruptcy every year measured by the requirements of this act, and yet who are solvent far beyond the average of the merchants in the large cities.

This is an endeavor to experiment upon the great business body of this country for what purpose? For no good purpose; for, as I say, nobody has asked for this bill except the great merchants. There is not a petition, there is not a letter, there is not a report of any kind in favor of this bill from any one of that great constituency that makes up the trading public who buy goods to be sold at retail—not one. None of them want it, and it will be nothing but a sign of disaster to all of them.

Why the necessity to bring in a bill of this kind at this time? Is anybody particularly unable to pay his debts as compared with previous times? Are there any classes of men who are failing who want the advantages of going into bankruptcy for the purpose of discharging their obligations? I can say, after having had experience under the old bankrupt law, and many years' experience at the bar in my own State, that the men who compromised and settled with their creditors before the bankrupt law was adopted always got better settlements than they got under the bankrupt act, and more than that their creditors got more than they ever got under the bankrupt law. There never was but one case, I believe, under the bankrupt law as administered in Kansas, in which the creditors got anything. That I think was case number one. That was recognized at once as an example which should not be followed, and thereafter there was always a deficit.

However wise this form of words may be as compared with that, there are certain evils necessarily to result from the arbitrary practice that will be adopted and necessarily adopted under any bankrupt law which are bound to ensue. I remember very well a case where a merchant possessing a stock of goods valued at about $2,000, being in debt about $1,800 failed to pay at maturity and for thirty days afterward a note of $600, which he owed to one of his creditors. He was, upon the petition of that creditor, put into bankruptcy. His stock of goods of course was seized.

For the purpose of invoicing, the goods comprising his stock were thrown together, mixed up, so to speak, and while in that condition, being perishable property, boots and shoes, dry goods, groceries, &c., all the stock of a country store, the court was petitioned and ordered a sale of the property in gross, an order that was proper enough on its face, and an order of a kind that in nine cases out of ten would be granted as of course. The property was put up and sold at $800, and bought in by the creditor who had put the debtor into bankruptcy, and sold again by him for $1,800 at private sale the very day after he got it straightened out. So he made $1,200 by that transaction beyond the amount of his claim, and yet the result of the sale only sufficed to pay the costs of the suit, leaving the bankrupt with nothing except the beggarly account of debts he had left behind him.

Cases of that kind can not be prevented; they inhere in every possible system of bankruptcy that can be devised, as I think; and such cases as this are not infrequent, and their injustice is so gross that they are not to be justified on the ground that the act may in some other particular do justice. I never yet have known a case where a person had failed in business, if he could show to his creditors that he had failed honestly, that he had surrendered up or was prepared to surrender all the property which he had, that he could not get a favorable settlement in such a way as to be able to resume business fairly and honorably; and I never have known a case settled under the bankrupt law where the creditors themselves got as much as they got by these voluntary settlements.

The great city merchants doing business upon a plan that is totally inapplicable to the merchants of the country desire to reach out and subject to them and their violent processes and desires all the business of this great country and to hold in terrorem over every person with whom they deal the perils of bankruptcy if he does not yield to whatever they demand. This is the device of Wall street, of the active capital of the country, against its property and its prosperity.

In moving this amendment that some of these suits may be tried in the State courts, it is simply with a desire to save if possible some little jurisdiction to those honorable but fast becoming useless institutions, the courts of the States, whether they be district courts or circuit courts or supreme courts. Under the various statutes of the United States, from time to time enacted, nearly all their jurisdiction has been taken away. If this bill should be enacted, practically they will have nothing left except the settlement of the local disputes and troubles that may arise. All that which concerns the major transactions of life, all that which is material to their jurisdiction as affecting the transactions of those by whom they are surrounded, the merchants, the bankers, the dealers of different kinds, will be taken away. We might as well add another section and provide for the total abolition of the State courts and for the transfer of all causes pending and the bringing of all such causes hereafter in the Federal courts, and be done with it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, as to the particular amendment which is before the Senate, it is enough to say that the section as it now stands limits and does not extend anywhere the discretion or privilege that the bankrupt whom the assignee succeeds would have. If he had a choice between jurisdictions, the bill says that in such case, if the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts is concurrent, the court of bankruptcy may direct that the suit shall be brought in the State court. So it is wholly a step in the direction of preserving State jurisdiction where possible. It does not seem to the committee expedient to go further, and it did not seem to the Senate expedient to go further on full discussion during the last Congress.

Now, in regard to the general remarks of my honorable friend from Kansas——

Mr. PLATT. Before the Senator goes to that point, will he state what reason there is for not giving the trustee or assignee all the rights to collect the debts of the assignor or bankrupt that the assignor had before his bankruptcy?

Mr. HOAR. Because of the desire of the Senate to concede to a feeling such as that represented by the Senator from Kansas and the belief that in the substantial interests of the estate it must be safe with the bankruptcy court, the United States officer. So it was deemed well to go to that extent.

I hardly think that I ought to ask the Senate at 5 o'clock in the afternoon to listen to a speech from me which should go over the general argument in favor of a bankruptcy bill.

The desire for a bankruptcy law, the opinion of its necessity is one which is almost a measure of the progress of civilization and of business, and of wealth and of prosperity. Mr. Webster argued with great force that the constitutional mandate was intended to be imperative, peremptory upon Congress, in conferring the power to provide for a uniform system of bankruptcy. I do not agree with my friend from Kansas that there is no desire for this legislation except from the wealthy merchant and creditor classes. There have been since the last bankrupt act was repealed more than sixty-one thousand failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet, and unquestionably in addition to those there have been enough to make the number in the United States much larger, beyond the amount of one hundred thousand in all.

Remember the constant increase of the dealing of our States with each other, so that the manufacturer in Rhode Island has his competitor in Ohio or Michigan or Missouri or Kentucky, and his customer in Mississippi or Arkansas or South Carolina. Remember that almost every one of our great commercial cities is within an hour or two or three of journey to the border of the State where it is situated. Take Boston, take Portland, take Providence, take Worcester, take Springfield, New York, Jersey City, the great manufacturing cities of New Jersey, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, Milwaukee, Saint Louis, Atlanta, and a great many others that I might name, the men who do business in these cities go in and out, day by day, to their daily occupations, large numbers of them from residences in adjacent States. Under the Constitution of the United States there is not one of this vast army of debtors who, if he happened to be so unfortunate as to become insolvent, is not, unless there be a bankrupt law, put at the mercy of a single creditor, and these men must pass through life paupers, unable to enter upon the ordinary business of American citizens, dragging "at each remove a lengthening chain," without right to lay up for their old age, for their wives, for their children, for those dependent upon them, what it is the pride and the ambition of every American citizen to be able to lay up, a provision after he has gone, unless the humane power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution be exercised; and it is mainly and chiefly in the interest of this class of persons who are driven to the alternative of a life of poverty or a life of fraud——

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask a question. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Has the Senator any evidence before his committee that he can produce to the Senate of any considerable desire among that class of people for the passage of this bill?

Mr. HOAR. The evidence has been pouring in upon the Senate and upon the committee in correspondence and in articles in the press and in various ways for the last four or five years.

Mr. TELLER. Not from that class of men.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Not from those centers where the industrial interests of the country are agricultural; but from the great commercial centers.

Mr. HOAR. I differ from the Senator in that respect.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask a question. If that is the chief purpose of this bill why will the Senator from Massachusetts not consent that all in regard to involuntary bankruptcy be stricken out, so as to make it especially a beneficent measure in favor of the debtors?

Mr. HOAR. When I have finished my speech the Senator will understand what I propose. He puts in the form of a question in substance a gibe rather than a question.

Mr. President, I was coming to another view of this matter. I believe that this bankruptcy legislation is in the interest of the new frontier agricultural communities and the old sparsely-settled planting communities of this country even more than it is in the interest of the commercial cities. Why, Mr. President, we had from some of the representatives of these same communities to which the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Colorado have alluded, a remonstrance against the policy which preserved the credit of the Union.

They said that the desire to have the bonds paid in gold, the desire to have a banking system which would give a uniform and sound currency to the people of the whole country, was the desire of the bloated wealthy classes of the bondholders, the gold dealers of the commercial cities. They were mistaken, and the people of those communities see their mistake to-day. They see that the one thing which is essential to the prosperity, and the hope, and the growth of youth, whether a human being or a State, is the preservation of credit. The old community where capital is piled up, where laws are well established, where business is running in its accustomed channels, can get along on a cash basis; but to the new State, the new community, the youth starting, leaving behind the old home for the new, the one thing which determines his success in life is the preservation of an unsullied credit, that his promise is as good everywhere as any other man's performance, that his promise is the sure presage and prophecy of his performance.

Mr. President, here is an existing system, without a bankrupt law, under which the credit of those communities largely suffers. The man who is asked to make a loan to the planter in Mississippi or Arkansas or to the young farmer in Dakota or Colorado, or the capitalist who is asked to furnish the capital for any great measure to develop those communities, finds that at present his debt is deferred to that of the next-door neighbor, or perhaps to some fraudulent claims, and he makes the borrowing community pay for that risk, and what is the result? That while in two minutes you can communicate by telegraph (and very soon will be able to do it by telephone) from one end of the country to the other, here are millions upon millions, hundreds upon hundreds of millions of money locked up in Wall street or in State street seeking investments, seeking loans upon call in those communities at 2, 2½, 3, or 4 per cent., when the United States can sell its bonds at a rate which amounts to but a fraction over 2 per cent. per annum, the ruling rate of interest in these communities is 8, 10, 12, 15, or 20 per cent., 8, or 10, or 12 per cent. being the ordinary rate on what is called first-class securities in some parts of this country. Why is it that these millions hoarded of the capitalist in New York or in Boston waiting to be loaned do not pour out their fertilizing streams to the most distant borders of the country? It is because of the doubt on this matter of credit. It is because of the doubt whether the creditor will have his fair share, if the debtor happens to be unfortunate, of the estate.

I believe that the passage and maintenance of a just, rational, and humane bankrupt law would reduce the rate of interest in Mississippi or Arkansas from 10 or 12 per cent. down to 4 within four or five years, and that these communities pay the most fearful and unnecessary and exaggerated price for their resistance to this legislation.

However, I do not propose to go into this general discussion at this time in the afternoon. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. Let us take a vote on this amendment.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. MORRILL. Not to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 25, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 24, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EDEN, until June 15.

To Mr. LORE, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GUENTHER, for ten days.

To Mr. HAYDEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

SHIPPING FEES, ETC.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am instructed by the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests to present a privileged report, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, to whom was referred an act (H. R. 4838) "to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference on said amendments, report the same back with recommendations as follows:

That the House concur in amendments numbered 1, 2, 10, 13, 15, 17, 18, and 19.

That the House non-concur in amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26.

And that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the same.

The amendments in which the committee recommended concurrence were severally read and concurred in.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to have read separately the amendments as to which the committee recommend non-concurrence?

Mr. DINGLEY. Unless other members desire a separate vote on other amendments, amendment 5 is the only one upon which the committee desire separate action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that business will be facilitated by first taking the question as a whole upon all those amendments on which separate action is not requested.

The question being taken on the several amendments (excepting No. 5) in which the committee recommended non-concurrence, they were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 5 was read, as follows:

On page 3, line 11, strike out "but shall not apply to any canal-boat, barge, or lighter," and insert "including canal-boats, barges, and lighters."

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the request of the Senate for a conference with the House on the amendments to this bill will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair will appoint the managers on the part of the House some time during the day.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM as conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

JAMES D. WOOD.

Mr. WAKEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of James D. Wood, and that the House now proceed to consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay James D. Wood, late captain and assistant adjutant-general of volunteers in the war of the rebellion, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $133.50, being the value of a horse and equipments lost in action at the battle of Chancellorsville, as found by the Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BEACH. I would like to inquire why this claim was not paid under the general law. We have a general law on this subject.

Mr. WAKEFIELD. I am unable to inform the gentleman. I only know this is a little matter in which I am trying to do a favor for a Democratic friend of mine who has been endeavoring for the last twenty years to obtain this allowance.

Mr. BEACH. Has the bill been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. WAKEFIELD. Yes, sir; two or three times.

Mr. BEACH. I would like to hear the report.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1265) for the relief of James D. Wood, beg leave to report:

That the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being clearly and fully advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of fact, filed December 14, 1885, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"The claimant, James D. Wood, while captain and assistant adjutant-general of the Fourth Brigade, First Division, First Corps, Army of the Potomac, lost a horse and equipments purchased by himself, which he had lawfully in the service of the United States, under the following circumstances: During the battle of Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, 1863, the claimant, after crossing the Rappahannock River at or near that place, received a verbal order from the general commanding the corps ordering the extra horses of all officers back across the river. In compliance therewith claimant sent his extra horse back to the other side of the river in charge of his colored servant. The servant was forcibly dispossessed of the horse by a bearer of dispatches from the general in command, and the claimant has never been able to recover the same. The loss was without any fault or negligence on the part of either the claimant or his servant. The horse was worth $115, and the equipments, $18.50; total, $133.50."

Your committee therefore recommend the payment of the amount found by said court, and recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WAKEFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HIRAM W. HUBBARD.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 320) for the relief of Hiram W. Hubbard; and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the account of Hiram W. Hubbard, postmaster at Centralia, Ill., the sum of $640, being the value of postage-stamps, and $140 in money, all belonging to the United States, stolen from the safe in said post-office on the 23d day of October, 1884, without fault or negligence of said postmaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of a bill coming over from the session of Friday evening last, upon which the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of that bill be postponed until after the call of States and Territories is concluded to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that it be postponed until Friday next, when private legislation is in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I shall object to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it better for private business coming over from Friday to go over until the next Friday, as a rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New Jersey. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, and ask unanimous consent that it be postponed until Friday next, to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object to that.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed to Friday next?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has been ordered upon the passage of the bill, and under the rules and practice of the House it must be acted upon unless by unanimous consent it be postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. DUNHAM. I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (S. 670) to increase the pension of Marie Louise Craven, widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven, was read at length. The question being upon the passage of the bill,

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent, the previous question having been ordered upon the passage of the bill. Is there objection to the reading of the report?

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. There was no debate on Friday last, and I understand under the rules we are entitled to a half hour after the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The report was read, as is shown by the RECORD, which is in the nature of debate and has been so held constantly in the House.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I think it was read by unanimous consent, and was not understood to be in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. It has been uniformly held that the reading of the report is in the nature of debate.

Mr. HAMMOND. In order that we may be informed before we vote on this bill, I ask unanimous consent that five minutes on each side be allowed for explanation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. SPRINGRR. Then the bill had better be recommitted. We do not understand the bill, and debate is closed upon it. It should go over, at all events, until next Friday.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the Chair submit the request for unanimous consent for debate for five minutes on each side?

Mr. SCOTT. Is it in order to move that the motion to recommit be laid on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Illinois as having submitted the motion to recommit.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw that until debate is had.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I ask unanimous consent for five minutes' debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that five minutes be allowed on each side upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I think we should have more than that. The understanding was, when the bill was laid over on Friday, that there would be fifteen minutes on each side. I move, therefore, to amend by making it fifteen minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. It can not be done by a motion, but only by unanimous consent.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Then I ask unanimous consent that fifteen minutes on a side be allowed.

Mr. WELLBORN. There has been no debate upon it.

The SPEAKER. The report has been read, which has always been held to be in the nature of debate.

Mr. BRADY. While it is true that the report was read on last Friday evening, yet I understand that fifteen minutes is allowed on each side, and the report did not consume more than two or three minutes to read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not take cognizance of the length of time that was occupied in the reading of the report, whether it occupied five minutes, or fifteen minutes, or an hour. If there has been debate, the rule provides that there can be no further debate after the previous question has been ordered, no matter how long or how short the time previously consumed in debate may have been.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey that fifteen minutes be allowed on each side?

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the gentleman to modify his request for fifteen minutes and say ten minutes.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Very well; I will say ten minutes.

There being no objection, it was ordered that debate be had for ten minutes on each side.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey rose.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I will reserve my time if the gentleman from Indiana wishes to proceed now.

Mr. MATSON. I only wish to say Mr. Speaker, by way of introducing this discussion, that this bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and if anything can be said in behalf of the bill, I think that side ought to be heard first.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions, while recognizing the fact that the naval record of Commander Craven developed great merit, reported this bill adversely on the ground that in their opinion the benefit asked, which is to increase the pension to $50 a month, should be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy. I think I have stated the report fairly and fully when I say that they put it solely on the ground that the benefit should be confined within the grade of thegeneral officers of the Army and Navy.

With great respect for the opinions of that committee, and in no spirit of criticism, I submit that the rule thus laid down by the committee is not in harmony with the spirit or policy of the pension laws and not in accord with the former action of Congress.

The pension law makes no distinguishing recognition of general officers by themselves. It neither graduates the amount of pension according to the distinctive rank, nor pensions the general officers at a higher rate than some others in lower grades. On the contrary, it groups together certain officers of different rank, classing the general officers with others of lower grade. The provisions of the law are that for total disability of the following officers and for their widows after their death there shall be a pension—to a lieutenant-colonel and all officers of higher rank in the military service and in the Marine Corps of $30 a month; and for a captain and all officers of a higher rank and all officers of a lower rank down to and including the master commanding in the Navy of $30 a month. That is the first group. There is another group composed of officers of the inferior grades. So that the pension law makes no recognition of the distinctive rank of the general officers discriminating against other officers in the same group.

The lieutenant-colonel and the general, and all officers of intermediate rank, and the master commanding, and the admiral and all officers of intermediate and corresponding rank, are placed upon the same plane, each receiving the same amount, each entitled to the same consideration, each subject to the same provisions; and their widows to be the recipients of the same bounty, and to be governed by the same rules.

Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, according to the spirit and policy of the pension law, there is no room for the rule which grants benefits to the general officer which does not grant them to other officers within that same group. There is no reason why an exception should be made in favor of a general officer under certain circumstances, which should not under the same circumstances be made to an officer in the same group; no reason why an increase of pension as an exceptional case should be granted to the widow of a commodore and with the same exceptional circumstances existing be denied to the widow of a commander.

Neither has Congress regarded the $30 as fixed by an inflexible and iron rule. It has been the custom, and it is a praiseworthy one, to recognize exceptional cases which present instances of heroism and bravery challenging admiration and commanding distinctive recognition.

In the Forty-eighth Congress I find an increase of pension to $50 a month to the widows of the following officers: Commander S. Dana Green, Capt. Kidder R. Breese, United States Navy; Maj. Thomas D. Thornburgh, Capt. Thomas L. Bent, United States Army; Surgeon-General Palmer, Commander Jeffries, General Arnold, Commissary-General Eaton, General Rodman, General Ripley, Admiral Scott, Commander Bissell, Paymaster-General Alvord, Admiral Creighton.

In the Forty-seventh Congress a like increase to the widows of Col. William Dulany, Col. James D. Mulligan, Maj. Levi Twiggs, Admiral Goldsborough, Surgeon-General Finley, Admiral Hoff, Admiral Reynolds, Surgeon-General Wood, General Mitchell, Admiral Lardner, General Casey, General Custer, Admiral Spotts, Admiral John Rogers, General French, General Ramsey.

It will be noted that the increase is not confined to the widows of general officers, but includes those of Commander S. Dana Green, on whom the command of the Monitor devolved when Worden was disabled; Capt. Kidder R. Breese, distinguished at Fort Fisher; Major Thornburgh, murdered by the Indians; Capt. Thomas L. Bent; Col. William Dulany; Col. James A. Mulligan, and Maj. Levi Twiggs.

Therefore, I say, I find no warrant either in the spirit of the pension law or in the former action of Congress that justifies the laying down or the enforcement of a rule that the increase of a pension is to be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy. The rule has been to grant it in exceptional cases, and I think it can be demonstrated that this is a case so exceptional in its character that if there had been a contrary precedent Congress should depart from the rule.

Mrs. Marie L. Craven is the widow of the late Tunis A. M. Craven, at the time of his death, August 5, 1864, a commander in the Navy. He entered the Navy in the year 1829, and was continually on duty up to the time of his death, having performed twenty-four years and six months' service at sea. He was third in the rank of commander, and had he lived he would undoubtedly have been promoted to the highest grade. He lost his life while in the command of the monitor Tecumseh, leading the attack on the fortifications in Mobile Bay. That position had, it was supposed, been rendered impregnable by fortifications and its approaches impassable by obstructions and torpedoes, and its defense was supplemented by the iron-clad ram Tennessee and numerous gunboats for aggressive attack. So secure was it supposed to be that Farragut says it was claimed they would all be blown up if they attempted to enter. The position assigned to Craven was the post of honor and of danger. His it was to lead the fleet into the fire of these defenses and over these submerged instruments of destruction. His disaster would mark the path to be avoided. So important did Farragut consider the services of Craven and his ship the Tecumseh that he awaited her arrival from New York before he attempted to enter Mobile Bay. He says in his report:

> The Tecumseh, Commander Craven, arrived on the evening of August 4; and everything being propitious I proceeded to the attack on the following morning, the Tecumseh having been given the leading position.
> * * * * * * * *
> The attacking fleet steamed steadily up the main ship-channel, the Tecumseh firing the first shot at forty-seven minutes past 6 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MATSON was recognized, and yielded two minutes to Mr. GREEN.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. In his report of the action Lieut. Commander Jouett says:

> At fifty minutes after 6 the Tecumseh hoisted her colors and fired a gun. Fort Morgan replied. In a short time the action became general between the fort, the ironclads, the Brooklyn, Hartford, and Richmond. At this time the rebel fleet took their stations across the channel, delivering a raking fire upon our line. Thirty-five minutes past 7, amidst the hottest of the fire, the Tecumseh was blown up.

Captain Drayton says:

> About thirty-five minutes past 7 I heard the cry that a monitor was sinking, and looking on the starboard bow saw the turret of the Tecumseh just disappearing under the water, where an instant before I had seen this noble vessel pushing on gallantly in a straight line to attack the enemy's ram Tennessee, which had apparently moved out to give him an opportunity.

Craven, in steering to attack the Tennessee, crossed the torpedo line, and striking one, it exploded under the turret of the Tecumseh, which went down stem first almost in an instant, carrying him down with her. But his death was characterized by an incident which should never be forgotten as long as the English language contains the words chivalry and heroism. It is related by the pilot, Mr. Collins, whose life was saved.

At the moment of the explosion Craven and the pilot were in the iron tower or pilot-house, directly over the turret. There was no way of escape from their prison except through a narrow scuttle or opening just sufficient for one to pass through. Seeing the inevitable fate of the vessel they both instinctively made for this narrow opening. As it is told, when they reached the place together Craven drew back, in a characteristic way saying, "After you, pilot." Collins, who fortunately escaped to tell the act of heroism, says: "There was nothing after me; as I got out the vessel seemed to drop from under me."

It is related of Sir Philip Sidney, three hundred years ago, that when being carried wounded and bleeding from the battlefield of Zutphen he complained grievously of thirst. A bottle of water was procured for him. As he put it to his mouth his eye caught the wistful gaze of a mortally wounded soldier eagerly watching his every movement. Taking it untasted from his lips he sent it to the dying man with the words, "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine." He was buried in Old St. Paul's among the noble and the great of England. Although centuries have rolled away, his country forgets him not, and history, still repeating "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine" with the incident, ever keeps the name of Sidney the synonym of true nobility of character and of heroic self-denial.

Noble and chivalric as it was, his was but a temporary relinquishment of relief from suffering. Craven's "After you, pilot," cost him his life, the American Navy one of its bravest and most accomplished officers, mankind a hero. No grand old cathedral treasures his remains; no sculptured marble records his heroism; he rests in his iron turreted tomb off Fort Morgan, with naught but the buoy which swings to and fro with the ebb and flood of the tide in Mobile Bay to mark the scene of his bravery and his death.

The Secretary of the Navy, in writing to Admiral Farragut after that terrible conflict, said:

> Great results in war are seldom attained without great risks, and it was not expected that the harbor of Mobile would be secured without disaster. The loss of the gallant Craven and his brave companions, with the "Tecumseh," by a concealed torpedo, was a casualty which no human foresight could guard: While the nation awards cheerful honors to the living, she will ever hold in grateful remembrance the memory of the gallant dead who periled their lives for their country and died in her cause.

The country has honored the living; let not Congress forget the Sidney of the American Navy!

The widow of this gallant man in her old age and her necessity appeals for this increase. I hope it will be accorded to her.

Mr. MATSON. It is true, Mr. Speaker, as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GREEN], that the general law fixes no distinctive rate of pension for the widows of general officers, and that the rate of $30 per month applies to the widows of all officers of the Army, including the rank of lieutenant-colonel and above that, and to the widows of all officers of the Navy, including the rank of captain and above that. That is true; but some years ago Congress, seeing, I suppose, that there was no distinctive rate in the law for the widows of general officers, entered upon the increase of the pensions of the widows of general officers of the Army and Navy from $30 to $50 per month, and in every case where the widow of a general officer has asked such increase it has been granted, but as to the widows of officers below the rank of general officers, the increase has generally been refused.

There have been, however, some few exceptions to the rule. In a few cases bills have passed the House increasing the pensions of widows of officers below the rank of general officers from $30 to $50 a month, and in some instances from $30 to $40. In this case the applicant is the widow of a commander in the Navy. His was not a general office; it corresponded perhaps to the rank of a lieutenant-colonel in the Army. This widow now asks that her pension be increased from $30 to $50 per month. The cases cited by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. GREEN] are doubtless correctly cited, and the additional ones that he proposes to print will no doubt be taken from the record; but they are the exceptions, and the question for this House to decide is whether it can afford to enter upon the indiscriminate increase of these pensions. I have always believed that the House had gone too far in undertaking to increase the pensions of the widows of any officers from $30 to $50 a month. I have always believed that $30 a month was a large enough pension for any widow, and therefore I have opposed these increases, even for the widows of general officers.

The rule, not of the committee but of the House, has been to refuse the increase to those who were not the widows of general officers, and in the last Congress this very bill, after it had passed the Senate, was voted down in this House on a yea-and-nay vote by a full House. Now, the question for us to determine is, whether there is anything in this case that should make it exceptional or that would justify the House in abrogating its well-established rule to refuse the increase in cases like this. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I do not presume that any gentleman will vote for this bill as a payment in money for patriotic duty well performed. I understand that the theory of the pension laws is to take care of the widows, the children, the helpless ones, left by those who sacrificed life or fortune in defense of our common country. If that be the true theory, then, Mr. Speaker, I ask you what excuse can any one render for voting, in a case like this, to make the pension $50 a month when this widow has already a pension of $30, and when all over our country there are cases equally meritorious of people who are suffering for want of a single dollar, or $8 a month, or any other given sum.

I believe it to be the duty of this Government, Mr. Speaker, to take care of all those who are dependent upon their own exertions, and are disabled and needy because of suffering or loss sustained in defense of the country. But I deny the correctness of the theory that we consistently may, or that we should, give a pension of more than $30 a month to one while hundreds of others equally deserving get nothing. I would take care of them all, and to do that, not having revenue enough to take care of everybody on this grand scale, I would divide what we do appropriate fairly. Gentlemen may talk about the gallantry of this commander, and I concede it all; gentlemen may speak of the amiable characteristics and personal merits of his widow, and I concede it all; but is that a reason why we should heap these extravagant pensions and increases of pensions upon those who are already provided for, leaving others equally meritorious to languish in suffering and want? Gentlemen say this does not decrease their chances. I say it does. The last national convention of Grand Army men was made up so largely of those already provided with pensions that they voted down a proposition to pension those who were yet suffering and in want, and every case of this kind where you grant an increase of pension to the widow of some distinguished character diminishes your ability to do justice to others who have an equal claim.

As to the merits of this particular case, it is proper to remember that when Commander Craven blew up his ship he was acting in direct conflict with express orders. He had been told to keep to the right of certain buoys; he took to the left; he blew up his ship by striking one of those hidden torpedoes; the next vessel to his backed and filled, and his mismanagement threw the whole fleet into disorder.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 67.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 99, not voting 119; as follows:

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I move to go to the Speaker's table and take up the bill forfeiting lands granted to the Southern Pacific and California Railroad Company.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up bills forfeiting land grants made to certain railroad companies; pending that motion the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue bills, a motion which has priority.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that my purpose is to reach bill H. R. 8328, known as the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, is that a bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged report of the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in relation to the Warder case.

Mr. HATCH. On that, Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, before that is reached I desire to raise the question of consideration in favor of the special order made on April 26, House bill 5788, a bill to provide for the issue of small bills for circulation.

The SPEAKER. There can be but one question of consideration pending at a time. The first question is, Will the House now consider the report made from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in relation to certain employés of the House?

Mr. BRAGG. My committee desire to retain the hour that belongs to them to-morrow.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLER] to call up a special order. What is that special order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not call up a special order while a matter of privilege is pending before the House. When that is disposed of the Chair will hear what the gentleman from Texas proposes. The first question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the report made by the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in relation to certain employés of the House?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 46, noes 92.

Mr. COX. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and 25 members voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TUCKER. No quorum.

A MEMBER. This does not require a quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is required to determine the question of consideration.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point is made too late.

The SPEAKER. It is not too late. The Chair had announced the vote, but not the result of the vote. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 122.

So the House refused to proceed to the consideration of the report of the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. MILLER. I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 5788, which was made a special order on the 26th of April.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands what the bill is to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLER] alludes, he thinks it is made a special order subject to the consideration of general appropriation and revenue bills; and if so, the question must be first taken, as heretofore stated by the Chair, on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. BLAND. I would like to understand what the bill is which the gentleman from Texas desires to bring up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman from Texas would state what the bill is.

Mr. MILLER. It is the bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, providing for the issue of one and two dollar silver certificates.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to me the silver-certificate bill ought to have consideration——

The SPEAKER. These questions are not debatable. The special order to which the gentleman from Texas refers was "to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House, not to interfere with general appropriation bills, bills raising revenue, nor prior orders." Consequently, the question is first upon the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri, that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider revenue bills.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to ask whether the order just read by the Chair excepts the morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not read the entire order, but only enough to show that in the present situation of affairs the question must first be taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HERBERT. In order that we may intelligently vote upon these questions, I desire to ask whether that order would have the effect of dispensing with the morning hour for the consideration of bills?

The SPEAKER. It would if called up before the business of that hour had been entered upon. The only exceptions made in the order are those read by the Chair.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. I made a motion to proceed to the consideration of bills forfeiting land grants. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moved to amend that motion so as to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of his bill. Then a privileged motion was made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] to take up the report of his committee. Now, what has become of my motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moved to go into the Committee of the Whole, not to consider a report made by his committee, but to consider bills raising revenue; and that motion has priority over the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] to proceed to the consideration of bills on the House Calendar forfeiting land grants to railroad companies, as the gentleman from Indiana will see by referring to the order made with reference to that class of business.

Mr. COBB. If this motion of the gentleman from Missouri should be voted down——

The SPEAKER. Then the motion of the gentleman from Indiana comes next.

Mr. COBB. I trust the House will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. And I trust the House will adopt it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue, there were—ayes 87, noes 64.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Desiring to reach bills forfeiting land grants, I demand the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 50 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 83, not voting 97; as follows:

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. EVANS.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. BAKER.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

URGENCY DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result the Chair will appoint conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. MCCOMAS.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7652) to reduce tariff taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that that bill be passed over.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not object. There is no use to take up the time of the House.

Mr. HATCH. It is only taking up the time of the House for nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having reached the bill (H. R. 7652) to reduce tariff taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, objection was made to its consideration, and the committee accordingly rose and reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the committee be directed to pass over the bill which has been indicated?

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the tariff bill has been passed over, and the next bill on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. 8327) to reduce the number of internal-revenue officers, provide a better and more economical administration of the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. I move that bill be laid aside.

Mr. CABELL. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, whether it is in order to move to lay aside all tariff and revenue bills which precede the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. HATCH. This is the only one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain objection to any bill except the one pending.

Mr. CABELL. This is a revenue bill, and has come up regularly, and I hope the House will consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing the bill over?

Mr. CABELL. I object.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having reached the bill (H. R. 8327) to reduce the number of internal-revenue officers, provide a better and more economical administration of the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes, objection was made to its consideration, and, under the rules, the committee rose and reported the fact to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the committee be directed to pass over the bill indicated?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 43.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 39.

Mr. SPRINGER. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were noes 102.

So (more than one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole be directed to pass over the bill indicated?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Is it in order to have the bill read?

The SPEAKER. Not in the House; it might have been read in committee.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 86, not voting 97; as follows:

So the House directed the committee to pass over the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I am paired on political questions; but not regarding this as a question of that character I have voted.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. VAN EATON. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. BINGHAM, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The House has directed the committee to pass over the bill the title of which has been read. The Clerk will now report the next business upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to occupy the floor in an explanation of this bill, as I have already expressed my own views and those of the Committee on Agriculture in the report accompanying the bill. I shall, however, avail myself of the privileges accorded to me under the rules of the House to occupy my hour in closing the general debate.

I recognize, Mr. Chairman, that this is an important bill, and desire that it shall have a full and fair discussion in the committee. I shall not attempt to-day to fix any limit to the debate, and shall be governed to some extent at least by the disposition and wishes of the House in that regard.

I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] such time as he may desire to occupy.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it was my privilege a short time ago to introduce in the House a bill designed in its provisions to regulate the manufacture and sale of what is known as oleomargarine. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, as were other bills subsequently presented bearing upon the same subject. Hearings were allowed by the committee to those desiring to be heard, whether in favor of or opposed to legislation upon the question; and after weeks of patient labor a bill has been reported which in all respects meets my unreserved approval. The honorable chairman of the committee having courteously tendered me an hour of the time allotted for the discussion, I will undertake to briefly state some reasons why in my judgment such a measure is at this period not only opportune but absolutely necessary if one of the chief industries of the country is to be spared from the doom which now threatens it.

It is needless for me to speak of the importance to a nation of throwing every possible safeguard about its agricultural interests. They who devote their entire lives to the production of those articles which are relied upon for the sustenance of the people have a primal right to make known their grievances and to persist in their appeals until at least a measure of relief is afforded. The farmer is never aggressive, but always patient. His hours of toil are not limited to the period between the rising and the setting of the sun; he suffers hardships in his battles with nature, but his struggles are the struggles of peace; he is always law-abiding, and never fractious. True to the independent characteristics of his calling, he is slow to invite others to his assistance; and when that appeal is made it should be answered with a promptness that attests the nation's confidence in his statements and appreciation of his worth.

Within a period of less than ten years a gigantic traffic has grown up which has already displaced one-fifth of the purest product of the dairy and substituted therefor an article the ingredients of which are acknowledged to be not only offensive in their original character to human taste but positively injurious to the public health. So rapidly has this traffic developed, and so vast have its proportions become, that State Legislatures have been powerless to arrest its growth, and the National Congress is finally appealed to to pass laws that shall at least check its further disastrous advance.

With this object in view a convention of men representing the dairying interests of twenty-six States of the Union was held in the city of New York early in the present year. It was composed of delegates appointed by governors of States, as well as delegates from State agricultural societies and boards of agriculture, State and local dairy associations and granges, and from the produce and mercantile exchanges of New York and other cities. This convention was not the mere outgrowth of meaningless agitation, but it was the culmination of an honest sentiment, based upon a sense of injustice, and carrying with it a determination to organize upon the principle of self-protection. They temperately discussed the evils from which they were suffering. In view of the wrong that has been inflicted upon them and the nature of the commodity which has made such inroads upon their individual welfare, it would not have been surprising if they had asked for its complete extermination; but, recognizing the personal as well as the commercial rights of others, they sought in a spirit of moderation and through the adoption of laws to be placed upon at least an equal footing with their dangerous competitors.

In the first place, it is nowhere denied that oleomargarine is sold in immense quantities, honestly as oleomargarine but fraudulently as the purest article of dairy butter. In fact the highest indorsement afforded it by the manufacturers of the compound is to the effect that so thoroughly have they mastered the secret of deception that the most skillful expert is unable to distinguish the pure from the imitation article. It is at this point that the wrong begins; and this is a wrong no less to the dairyman than to the consumer. The genius which has succeeded by the application of chemical fluids and compounds in transforming a mass of loathsome and unwholesome ingredients into an article of food at a trifling cost, does not hesitate to impose the product upon the public, and receive in the way of excessive profit the difference between the cost of the imitation or counterfeit article and that of pure butter. It was to the regulation of this feature of the traffic that the convention applied itself.

All will recognize the indisputable fact that a natural and constant demand exists for genuine butter. It is to furnish the supply to meet this demand that the dairyman has invested his money in land, and crops, and stock, and machinery, and applies his labor. If, after all his toil and expense to produce an article of unadulterated purity, which the public demand, he finds, on reaching the market, that his real product has been forestalled by a spurious article unsuspectingly purchased by the consumer, surely he is entitled to some redress. The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, therefore, unrestricted by legislation, is a present and increasing injury to that class of the agricultural community especially engaged in the dairying interest. The provision of the proposed bill in no wise inflicts hardship upon the manufacturer of oleomargarine, but simply raises the farmer to the plane of fair and honest competition.

As in the past there have been so there will in the future continue to be various grades of butter, and side by side with these the differing grades of oleomargarine may still be offered and accepted by those who prefer the one to the other. The cost of from 7 to 9 cents a pound, at which it is claimed the best grades of oleomargarine can be produced, renders it possible, notwithstanding the proposed tax, for the imitation to openly compete with the genuine. The question will then be solved by the preference of the individual, and the penalty will only follow the imposter and wrongdoer.

An interesting and, in my judgment, a very important question is involved in the consideration of a measure of this character. This country is distinctively adapted to agricultural pursuits, and the rapid development of State after State since the birth of the Republic has been largely due to the peculiar attractiveness of our territory for labor in connection with the cultivation of the soil. They who represent this class of labor are usually self-reliant and industrious men. They realize the privations associated with the calling, and measure by the true standard the chances of success. They are early taught practical lessons in economy and thrift, and how best to apply these first principles is the problem to the solution of which the best years of their lives are devoted. That such magnificent results, in the aggregate, have been so speedily achieved, is the most flattering certificate of their ability, as a class, that could be formulated.

I do not need, in my present surroundings, to cumber my remarks with statistics, so thoroughly recognized and impressive is the record of their accomplishments. But what has it cost to produce these results? In the first place, toil of the most unremitting and exacting character; in the second place, that peculiar order of genius or tact which is constantly seeking to apply means to ends. Unless a farmer is possessed of both of these qualities his lands will go to waste and his cattle will starve. Nor is the one useful without the assistance of the other. He may toil without ceasing, but if he does not possess tact to direct his labor he will reap a poor reward; and however liberally he may be endowed with tact, unless he supports it with his toil, only disappointment and desolation will result.

A kindred principle applies to the intelligent conduct of his work, namely, the dependence of one branch of his industry upon another. It is only the operation of a natural law of compensation which compels a return to the soil of a portion of that which it has yielded as a reward to the husbandman for his toil. It is a mistake to argue that the world owes every man a living; on the contrary, every man owes to the world a due measure of toil through which his living is acquired. And it is through the perfection of this idea that the condition of mankind is advanced, and the world is rendered better according to the measure of individual contribution to the general sum. The farmer who should rely upon the first-mentioned theory, to which expression is often idly and thoughtlessly given, and should psssess himself of his farm with the idea that he, being its owner, is entitled to a sustenance therefrom without properly caring for his stock or intelligently providing for the development of his crops, would speedily run abreast of bankruptcy and starvation.

Moving together hand in hand, the cereal and the dairy branches have attained for agriculture that perfection which has rendered the system an object of national pride. Having done this much for itself without the fostering aid of class legislation, the great farming interest may rightfully insist upon a hearing when it appeals for protection against an insidious foe whose further advancement must inevitably destroy its chief support. If the farmer is stripped of his direct profit derived from the products of his dairy he must part with his cattle, and thus lose the incidental advantage that accrues from their natural contributions to the soil.

The sundering of this link can not fail of being disastrous in its effects, not only to the individual, but in time to the country at large. If the traffic in oleomargarine shall continue with the same energy which has marked its growth during the brief period that has intervened since the earliest productions of the compound, it will in a few years almost wholly supplant the trade in genuine butter. The farms, deprived of their herds, will inevitably degenerate in the character of their soil, and instead of being, as at present, the abodes of comfort, thrift, and happiness, they will become impoverished tenantries, yielding no revenue to the State and barely an existence to the unfortunate dwellers upon them.

In the rapid march of American progress agriculture has promptly followed in the track of the railway. Before the age of steam it was the pioneer of civilization, but as the railroad penetrated farther and farther into the great West agriculture yielded its leadership, but only to become the chief auxiliary to the more vigorous representative of the spirit of the times. Less than half a century ago the northernmost limit of the great wheat belt of the continent was to be found in the famous valleys of the Mohawk and the Genesee; and upon the banks of the Genesee and at the falls of that river, in the city of Rochester, the great milling industries of the country were centered, while at the falls of the James River the Haxhall flour, produced from the wheat grown in the rich valleys of Virginia, was of a quality second to none in the world, and commanded the markets of South America, into which we are now unsuccessfully endeavoring to introduce the surplus products of our mills and factories.

To-day the great stone mills on the borders of the Genesee are devoted to other uses. The wheat belt rapidly extended into the new States of Ohio and Indiana, thence into Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and later into the vast Territories of the great Northwest. With it the milling interest departed from Eastern centers, and now, around the Falls of Saint Anthony, in Minnesota, a locality which only a generation ago was the tenting-place of the savage, are clustered a series of majestic flouring mills, which, in their capacity and appointments, are not only the pride of the nation, but the wonder of the world. As the population in the East became more dense, the farming lands increased in value.

The tendency of continued cropping to cereals being toward the exhaustion of the soil, the herd supporting the dairy became more and more necessary for the successful maintenance of the farm. Convenience to ready markets and facilities for transportation rendered this branch of the industry one to be preferred; hence the cereals, which could no longer be profitably grown in the East, were gradually shifted to the cheaper lands of the West which nature for centuries had been nursing into fertility for the approach and reward of the pioneer.

But nature is always exacting. Having given to man the virgin soil of the prairies from which, through industry, to reap his bountiful harvest, she has compelled the maintenance of the same degree of fertility which she originally bestowed; hence the herd of the dairyman again became a necessity, and has continued to be a necessity wherever the cereals have advanced to extract the original vigor of the soil. While the two have never wholly parted company, the dairy in its work of repairing the exhaustion has largely extended its area, and in so doing has encroached so far upon the territory of its companion industry that to-day the great fields of the cereals are found far out upon the Western and Northwestern frontiers, while the butter-making and cheese interests have grown to immense proportions in the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Iowa, as well as in Kansas and Missouri, reaching eastward through Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, and the Middle States to the famous dairying communities of Pennsylvania and New York.

As the country with the lapse of time and increasing age is gradually taking upon itself the conditions of permanence in the location of its industries, it is fair to assume that within the region outlined the dairying interest is destined to become for all time established. The importance to the nation of its proper maintenance can not be questioned. So wisely have the geographical limits of our country been defined that there is little in the way of products of the soil necessary to the existence of its people that can not be grown within our own borders; and so thoroughly balanced and nicely distributed are our gifts, that the system of dependence of the various sections one upon the other is perfect, while our national independence, which is our chief glory and pride, is at the same time assured.

The particular region in which the dairying industries of the country have established themselves is especially adapted by nature for their perpetuation, not for climatic reasons alone, but because they are indispensable for the preservation in a productive state of the soil of the vast territory upon which they flourish. It is always an omen of approaching disaster whenever any legitimate industry shows signs of decay, for it is upon the well-being and contentment and prosperity of all that a nation thrives. A blow to the dairying interests of this country is a blow to the vitals of the nation. The effect of its decadence would not be confined to those directly engaged in the pursuit, but would be felt in every nerve of our national system. It would mean the lapsing of lands to a condition of unproductiveness and waste and a surplusage of labor in another branch of industry.

The effect would speedily be felt in our revenues as well as in every avenue of trade. So completely do the laws of nature intertwine themselves with every system of human government for the betterment of the condition of mankind, that when the farms of a great country become tenantless, and the soil is allowed to remain uncultivated, no theory of political economy can be devised which will point to national prosperity and success. In our Northern clime cultivation of the soil means compensation to the soil, and this the herd of the dairyman is designed especially to provide. The great South finds a substitute for this element of Northern husbandry in her tropical sun, which warms and nurses into life the seed sown in her soil, and transforms it into her vast stretches of cotton, rice, and sugar-cane.

But there is another view of this question, which, it seems to me, should preponderate in the mind of every man who is not content with looking only to the present, but who desires to contribute something to the well-being of the generation that shall follow. As a people, we have advanced within a century of time from the limited importance of a mere colony to the position of a leading nation of the earth.

A few years ago we regarded Europe as the permanent market for our cereal products. But the ingenuity and enterprise of man are constantly changing the problems that statesmanship is called upon to solve. From the first era of civilization with which commerce is in any way identified, a short route to the Indies from the continent of Europe has been one of the chief objects sought to be attained, and the most enterprising nations of the earth have been engaged in the solution of the problem. It was the pursuance of this idea more than any other which gave to the world a new continent, and rendered it possible for the Anglo-Saxon race to become the dominant race of the world.

It was reserved to the nineteenth century to witness the solution of the problem, which has been accomplished through the construction of the Suez Canal, supplemented by the invention of steam-power. The early navigators, leaving the shores of the Mediterranean and doubling the Cape of Good Hope in their search for the shortest route that would command the trade of the Indies, little suspected that their ships need never have passed the Straits of Gibraltar in their efforts to reach their goal. The construction of that canal has revolutionized the maritime trade of the world.

According to the estimates of competent authorities, it has in ten years alone saved in transportation an amount in excess of that required for its construction. It has brought the wheat fields and the cheap labor of the Indies into serious competition with the enterprise of our own country, and it may yet prove a serious factor in the competition of the cotton markets of the world. He must be a wise man indeed who will hazard a prediction as to what the ultimate result to us will be. Already one marked effect is apparent in the reduced demand for our cereals. Should this condition of affairs continue, the fields upon which has been grown the surplus of cereals, and which surplus we have been able to sell in European markets, must be devoted to other uses, and to nothing can they be so readily applied as to the production of articles connected with the dairy.

For these the demand at home and abroad is practically unlimited. Properly fostered and cared for, the dairy industry is more profitable than wheat-growing; it does not rob the soil of its vigor to the same extent as the cereals, while it is constantly repairing the exhaustion that occurs in its operation. We need have no fear of competion with other countries in this particular branch if we only remain true to ourselves. In fostering this industry we not only protect the five millions of farmers at present identified with it, but we offer to every farmer now engaged in growing grain, if found unprofitable, the opportunity to devote a portion of his farm and energies to the development of his dairy.

In view, therefore, of the possibilities of a largely increasing demand for our dairy products in the future, and the competition we have already encountered in connection with our cereals, this proposed legislation is especially seasonable; for if we permit the products of the dairy to be driven from our home and foreign markets through unfair competition, the milk of the cow can not be utilized for other purposes. Nor will the passage of such a law as that proposed react injuriously upon other branches of the agricultural industry, inasmuch as the healthy and pure product of the hog, which it is claimed enters largely into the manufacture of butterine, has at present a ready and profitable market when rendered into lard and lard oil, and the former is now a formidable competitor with butter for many of the purposes for which butter can be used.

The same theory is also applicable when considered in connection with the suet and fat of the beef-producing animal. How soon the great necessity will be upon us of turning almost wholly from the cereals to productions of the dairy with which to supply our export demand we may not now be able to accurately determine; but that we are rapidly approaching such a possible condition of affairs no one who studies the signs of the times in this connection will deny. For the past few years we have seen the price of wheat steadily decline, until to-day No. 2 wheat is selling for about 76 cents per bushel on the Chicago Grain Exchange. From this price must be deducted elevator charges at point of shipment, railroad transportation rates, and commissions to middlemen. These may be fairly estimated at 26 cents per bushel, leaving as the average amount realized by the producer on his farm 50 cents per bushel.

It is unnecessary to say that this means bankruptcy to the farmer if wheat is his main reliance. But that is the condition at this time, and within two months the reaper will resume its work with every indication of an abundant harvest. Yet, even at these low figures, our exportations of wheat are gradually decreasing in volume. Over one-half of our population are engaged in the cultivation of the soil; and if any measures can be devised which will afford relief to or strengthen the farmer in his struggle with the adverse conditions which prevail, from whatever cause they may arise, we would, in my judgment, be rendering a most acceptable service to the country by thoughtfully applying ourselves to their prompt consideration and adoption.

In conclusion, I will only briefly refer to the objections to the passage of this bill which have been advanced upon constitutional grounds. As I understand the Constitution, one of its fundamental principles is to promote the general welfare of those who seek protection under its shield. In my judgment, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and all other articles represented and sold as the products of the dairy, but lacking their purity, while being sold as articles of genuine quality, is a system of piracy which not only deprives the farmer of his honest and well-earned dues, but while advancing under false colors inflicts a positive injury upon the public health.

The Congress of the United States unquestionably possesses the right to tax any industry or any commodity, however innocent in its effects. The harmless article of salt, which enters so largely into the manufacture of butter, carries with it the enormous tax of 236½ per cent., while whisky is taxed 90 cents per gallon, with the avowed object of restricting its sale because of the baneful influence which springs therefrom. There are those who favor the taxation of oleomargarine to the point of extermination, but with these I can not agree. If there are those who prefer oleomargarine to the genuine butter, the manufacturer should be allowed to supply that demand; but, in my judgment, he should be required to pay a tax sufficient at least to equalize the difference in the cost of producing the counterfeit and the cost of producing the genuine article which he seeks to imitate and displace.

This theory I maintain upon the principle that one who devotes his time, his capital, and his labor to the production of a pure and wholesome commodity, and who is thereby contributing to the general welfare of the people, is entitled to as much consideration as one who is devoting his time, his capital, and his labor to the production of an impure and unwholesome commodity, which has an impairing influence upon the population and does not contribute to the permanent welfare of the people.

In view of the report made by the Committee of Agriculture, after a thorough investigation of the subject, I believe that we, as the representatives of the people, are competent judges of the effect of counterfeit dairy production upon the general welfare. The bill before us seeks to promote that welfare, and is hence, beyond all suggestion, thoroughly in harmony with the spirit of the Constitution.

The line of our duty in this respect, therefore, it seems to me, is made so clear to all, that upon the simplest and most rudimentary basis of reasoning the passage of a law such as that now being considered and seeking to correct the evils pointed out is of paramount importance to the country at large, to the end that not only a great national industry shall be protected from the assaults of an illegitimate competitor, but that the general welfare may be promoted thereby.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I now yield the remainder of my hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] on my left.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, no more important bill has been before this House during the present session than the one we are now considering. Representing as I do one of the richest and best dairy districts in the United States, I feel an especial interest in the question now under discussion. The enactment of this bill into a law by the Forty-ninth Congress will be but tardy justice to a most deserving class of citizens. Our farming interests, in my judgment, have not received heretofore the care and consideration from Congress they deserve. In time of peace or war we look to the tillers of the soil for the source of all our national prosperity.

Let us now give them this national legislation to insure their prosperity. During the time I shall occupy the attention of the House in the discussion of the bill I shall only note its leading features, and limit myself to a statement of some of the reasons why it should be enacted into a law, and answer so well as I can the arguments urged against it by those who profess a preference for a shadow to the substance of a thing—a fraud to the genuine article. The bill, Mr. Chairman, defines butter, and states "that for the purposes of this act the word 'butter' shall be understood to mean the food product usually known as butter, and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter."

All substitutes or imitations of butter, commonly known as oleomargarine and butterine; "oleolardine, suine, neutral and oleomargarine oil; and all mixtures and compounds of these substances; and all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annotto and other coloring matter; intestinal fat and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter," are defined oleomargarine for the purposes of this act.

Manufacturers of oleomargarine and wholesale and retail dealers in this product are all required to be licensed, and the product is required to be put up in various-sized packages by the manufacturer to suit the conveniences of his business, properly stamped, so that the dealer, with the manufacturer, can not be imposed upon, but will know that he is buying oleomargarine and not butter. Such requirements are also placed upon the wholesale and retail dealers that no imposition can well be practiced on the consumer or public. A tax of 10 cents per pound is fixed on the manufacture of oleomargarine, and proper penalties attached to all infractions or violations of the law. To secure an effective enforcement of the proposed law it is made a part of our internal-revenue system.

I think, sir, it is so framed that it can easily be enforced, and yet is so comprehensive in character that it will serve as a sure protection against the sale of any imitations or fraudulent substitutes for pure butter as defined in the first section of the act. I am well aware that grave objections can be urged against some of its provisions. It, however, has received the most careful scrutiny of some of the best legislators in the country and been approved by them. The Committee on Agriculture have given the whole subject embraced in the bill the most careful and patient examination, and they report this bill without a dissenting vote or voice.

If left to my individual vote I would pass the bill without any amendment or change, and yet I would not imperil its passage in the House by obstinately adhering to the tax of 10 cents per pound on every pound of oleomargarine manufactured where some other member, actuated by honest motives, as I presume him to be, shall feel that 2 or 5 cents per pound is as much as should be imposed. What I want is that a stop shall be put upon the sale of an article for butter which has not an element of that product in its composition. Do away with all deception and fraud. Let all products be placed upon the market on their merits. That there should be legislation of the character proposed in the bill I think must be apparent to all men; that it is a crying need is seen and felt by those who have the interests of farmers and dairymen at heart.

Those of you whose thoughts are engrossed in other subjects are little aware of the great interests involved and invested in the dairy business in America. There are produced annually in this country 1,600,000,000 pounds of butter and 400,000,000 pounds of cheese. Nineteen hundred million dollars is a moderate estimate of the value of the property invested in producing that amount of butter and cheese per annum. The dairy interest ranks among the first of our great American industries. How has it fared in the busy hum and whirl of life? To build up great manufacturing interests in our cities, on the shores of our vast lakes and along the banks of the great rivers that flow to the sea, laws have been enacted, and justly, too, I think, to foster and protect them. High duties have been placed upon all like articles manufactured in foreign countries.

As a result of such laws foreign competition has been driven out of our market. Men have been encouraged to invest their capital in manufactories. The furnace has been lighted, the wheels of machinery set in motion, the loom and the spindle made to give forth their homely music, and as a result we have become the greatest manufacturing nation in the world. During the time these manufacturing interests have been developing from small beginnings to such gigantic proportions the farmers of America have bravely borne their part. They have quietly submitted to the imposition of a tax or duty upon the tools and machines they used, the clothes they wore, and the beds upon which they slept, on the assurance that these manufactories would build up a home market for the products of their farms and dairies. They have gone on month by month and from year to year cultivating their farms, increasing the number of their cows for the dairy, and improving the breed of their stock. The good housewife has cheerily gone about the work of converting the milk and cream in her dairy into pure butter and rich cheese that delight the eye and satisfy the taste of the most critical.

Within a score or more years creameries have been established and butter and cheese factories built to relieve the laborious work of butter and cheese making upon the farm, and to encourage the farmer to still further invest in dairy interests until property to the amount of the estimate I have given has become invested in this business, and the annual production of butter and cheese so great as to almost amaze us. These results have been reached not by the aid of legislation, but by the honest industry and economy of the farmers. With many the earnings of a life are found in their cows and the butter they make. This great interest has become imperiled by one of the most gigantic frauds of modern times.

During the Franco-Prussian war an inventive genius by the name of M. Mége discovered that the fats of such animals as cattle, horses, and dogs could be made into a substitute for butter. The war measure of the inventive Frenchman was seized and improved upon by the ever restless Yankee. Our Patent Office has been besieged with applicants for patents. Without inquiring into the merit of the article proposed to be manufactured, or testing the questions whether, when manufactured, it would work a fraud on the honest producer of butter or be injurious to the health of the consumer, the Government has granted patent after patent, until now there are fifty-eight distinct and different ways patented for ruining the honest producer of butter and for undermining the health of the consumer.

The following is a list comprising sixty different articles named by seventeen patentees in their patents, and claimed by them to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine oil, neutral lard, oleomargarine butter, butterine, &c.:

Sugar of lead, bisulphate of lime, saltpeter, borax, boracic acid.

Salicylic acid, benzoic acid, orris root, cotton-seed oil, vegetable oils.

Butyric acid, bicarbonate of soda, nitrate of potassa, glycerine, capsylic acid.

Cuparic acid, alum, capsic acid, sulphite of soda, cow's udder.

Commercial sulphuric acid, pepsin, sal-soda, tallow, lard.

Sea-salt, farinaceous flour, butyric ether, caustic potash, carbolic acid.

Sulphuric acid, castor oil, chalk, slippery-elm bark, caul.

Oil of sesame, oil of sunflower seeds, olive oil, curcumine, turnip-seed oil.

Bromo chloralum, chlorate of potash, niter, oil of sweet almonds, oil of peanuts.

Peroxide of magnesia, stomach of pigs, of sheep, of calves, nitrate of soda, bennie oil, gastric juice.

Mustard-seed oil, nitric acid, dry-blood albumen, sugar, butyric acid.

Bicarbonate of potash, chloride of sodium, caustic soda, corn starch, coloring matter.

Factories for the manufacture of such fraudulent, and I might almost say criminal, substitutes for butter have been established in different cities in the country. In Chicago alone, I am told on good authority, 200,000 pounds are made daily, and I have it from reliable sources that at least 200,000,000 pounds of these fraudulent imitations of butter are made annually. If these imitations of and substitutes for pure butter were marked or labeled what they really are, and the dealers and consumers advised of what they are purchasing and eating, no complaints would be made by the dairymen. The great wrong is the fraud and deception practiced in selling such loathsome compounds for genuine butter.

By this deception not only are the farmers and dairymen cheated, and that most dishonestly too, out of the sale of 200,000,000 pounds of the butter they manufacture, but the knowledge of these frauds being practiced upon the people has lessened the consumption of butter an almost equal amount annually. The evil of oleomargarine and butterine is not confined to the domestic trade in butter. Prior to these fraudulent substitutes we had established a market for our American butter in Scotland, England, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, and other countries of Europe. Our export trade to these countries is being ruined by the shipment of the products defined in this bill as oleomargarine and sold there as pure dairy butter.

The baleful results of these frauds are seen everywhere among the farmers and dairymen. Mortgages are being placed upon the farms. The once fine herd of cows, the pride of the farmer, is lessening in numbers, and those that remain yield but a small, if any, profit to their owners. The proprietors and managers of the creameries and butter and cheese factories are failing and making assignments for the benefit of their creditors. An almost complete prostration and stagnation of the dairy interests of the country is inevitable unless Congress comes to their relief. This legislation is asked not for the purpose claimed by the opponents of the bill, to discriminate against one legitimate industry for another. It is asked for, in addition to the aid for revenue, that all products may be manufactured and sold to the consumer for what they are and that no deception may be practiced.

The farmers and dairymen have no fear of competition if the product is sold for what it is. The manufacture of all these articles enumerated in the bills and defined "oleomargarine" are denounced because they are made to imitate genuine butter.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Is that the purpose of this bill—to secure the proper printing and marking of oleomargarine and other imitations of butter?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is one of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. That is the important purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is one of the important purposes.

You may protect yourself from an open enemy, but it is the assassin who attacks you in the dark or cowardly strikes you in the back from behind who is to be feared. The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine have played the part of the midnight assassin to the production of honest butter. The claim of its being a legitimate and honest industry as compared with dairy butter is about the same as that of the assassin, that his hellish work should meet with the approval of law-abiding citizens and God-fearing men.

The Government provides by the most stringent laws against counterfeiting money. The manufacture and sale of bogus butter is equally as destructive of public morals and as injurious to those upon whom the deception is practiced. That such a law as this proposed is constitutional is no longer a debatable question. No lawyer on this floor will imperil his reputation by taking the position that it is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States has forever settled the constitutionality of such legislation. The only reasons that can be urged against the bill relate to the policy of the Government embarking in this kind of legislation.

It is always policy to do right. It is wise legislation to protect honest industry from fraud and deception. The public interests demand it. The present practice of oleomargarine manufacturers and dealers is to deceive the people of the United States to their harm by leading them to purchase these counterfeits for the real article. It is asserted by the friends of these bogus substitutes for butter that they are healthy. They can not be. All kinds of filthy fats are used in their manufacture. Animals dying from all kinds of disease are utilized, and after going through their bleaching and deodorizing processes are manufactured into oleomargarine and sold for pure butter.

Gentlemen of rare scholarship and scientific attainments have given this whole subject years of careful thought and study, and are unqualified in their statements of its unwholesome and loathsome character. Its consumption in their judgment leads to insanity, Bright's disease, and many of the ailments that undermine the strongest and most robust constitutions. I appeal to the members of this House to now and here lay a heavy hand on this greatest of all modern frauds. Make this bill a law, and compel all who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of this article carry on their business under honest colors.

As has been wisely and well said in a recent editorial in the New York Daily Tribune:

> Such a production as that of bogus butter can have no legitimate standing-place in the field of American industry. It has no more right to recognition of Congress than the sawdust game or the policy business. Its place is in the catalogue of "crooked" occupations, and nowhere else is it entitled to representation.

The latest argument I have heard against this bill is that it is legislation against the laboring man; that oleomargarine is the poor man's butter; and to tax it is to take the amount of the tax out of his hard earnings. Shakspeare has given us an answer to that:

> Mark you this, Bassanio,
> The devil can cite scripture for his purpose.
> An evil soul, producing holy witness,
> Is like a villain with a smiling cheek;
> A goodly apple rotten at the heart;
> O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Who are the men who make this argument for the poor man? They are the fat and well-favored—the Mark Antony kind of men. They are the men who have grown rich in the manufacture or trade of oleomargarine at the expense of the farmer and the public.

Within a day or two I have received a series of resolutions condemning this proposed legislation from a body of gentlemen in Chicago.

They are eminently respectable as the world goes. They style themselves "Representatives of the stock exchange." They are most emphatic in their statement that such legislation is injurious to the poor man. God help the poor man if all the rights he enjoys are obtained and preserved through such sources! Why this sudden awakening by these men on the question of the poor man's rights? Does anybody believe this argument would be heard from such a source, at least if the rich oleomargarine manufacturers and dealers were not to be affected by this bill if it becomes a law? I say to the poor man, "Beware of these gift-giving Greeks!" Do not permit such men to use you to strike down the great butter industry of this country. This argument is really an insult to the laboring men.

Has it come to this in America that the laboring man must live upon adulterated food? Must his wife and family use for the pure butter of our dairies an artificial butter, the compounds of diseased hogs and dead dogs? Let the rich and prosperous men, these new converts to the poor man's rights, pay the laboring man better wages, so he can live upon wholesome food. Let their sympathy be expressed in that way. Let them prove to the world by their acts, not their words, that they are in truth the poor man's friend.

But I deny, Mr. Chairman, the charge that this legislation will increase the price paid by the laboring men for the butter they consume. Oleomargarine is now sold at butter prices by the deception practiced.

This bill will make the dealer in that article sell it for what it is. If the poor man wants it, he can buy it for less per pound than it is now sold. The manufacturer and dealer may not make as great profits, but the consumer will certainly not be required to pay more for it per pound. This talk about the poor man or laboring man is false and dishonest. It is the last resort of a class of men who have been preying upon the public and one of our greatest industries for years.

Let the mask be torn from them and let them appear before the public in their true colors! If this bill becomes a law oleomargarine can no longer be sold for dairy butter. If it is a wholesome article of food, as claimed by its friends, under this bill it can be manufactured and sold at a profit. If it is not wholesome it is criminal to manufacture and sell it.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, before the sun goes down to-morrow night the glad news will be sent to the farmers in all parts of our great country that this bill has been passed by the House. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country are much more interested in preserving our American system of government in its purity than in suppressing the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

This report gives two reasons for the passage of this bill: one, that Congress has the power to do it, and the other that it ought to do it, because oleomargarine produces dyspepsia. Neither of these is a good reason for this Congress doing anything. Congress has the power to do many things which it ought not to do. Congress is nobody's doctor. [Laughter.] When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] was asked to put it upon any constitutional basis, he sought to rest it upon the "general-welfare" clause of the Constitution. There is no such clause in the Constitution as allows Congress to do whatever it may think for the general welfare. He called selling oleomargarine piracy. Did he rest it upon the piracy clause?

There is such a clause, but the making of oleomargarine is not piracy "on the high seas." The gentleman from Illinois who just took his seat [Mr. HOPKINS] says that oleomargarine produces Bright's kidney disease, and he wishes Congress to become a doctor. Let us look at the matter seriously. Just what the Congress can do it ought to do to take care of the farmers and everybody else, provided it does it honestly and in accordance with the Constitution of the country.

This report cites the case of the Veazie Bank, in which it was decided the Government might tax out of existence, if it saw proper, rival State banks, in order to give circulation for its own currency. That was no new doctrine. All parties had agreed upon that power. It was recommended by Mr. Cobb as Secretary of the Treasury in 1857. But what is the declaration in the Veazie Bank case as to the reason of the thing? I read from that decision at page 451, 8 Wallace:

> There are indeed certain virtual limitations arising from the principles of the Constitution which would undoubtedly be an abuse of power if so exercised as to impair the separate existence and independent self-government of the States—

Everybody will admit that. But further it says:

> or if exercised for ends inconsistent with the limited grants of powers in the Constitution.

Now I tell every man in this House that can conscientiously say that his vote for this bill is only to raise a tax that he may honestly vote for it under the taxing power of the Constitution. But if his reason is to help one Yankee to fight another Yankee in his industry, and he votes for this bill, he will have abused the powers of the Constitution which he swore to support. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] said that the States are powerless, and therefore the General Government should act. In 1883, with a very large establishment in my own city making oleomargarine, Georgia passed an act declaring that every particle of butterine should be so marked, and that every man who carried it into his boarding-house, restaurant, or hotel for eating should put up a placard that "his house uses oleomargarine"—that he should put it on his bills of fare and publish it in every room, or be guilty of a crime. And the manufacture died in Georgia. According to the protectionists' logic, post hoc propter hoc, the law killed the factory. It can be done everywhere where the people desire to kill it. And then you keep the constitutional system intact.

I have before me, but will not stop to read from it in my limited time, "Cooley's Constitutional Limitations." It declares that the States, and the States only, may make laws to protect the health and morals of the people or make laws to keep people from drinking liquors in the States. The Government of the United States can not do it. The Government of the United States can tax liquors. But the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] was mistaken when he said that those taxes were levied on tobacco and liquor because they were supposed to be injurious. They were levied because those things are classed as the non-necessaries and by some as luxuries. No government ever yet taxed either for the purpose of excluding bad things from the stomachs of its people.

Any State now may so far interfere with the taxing power of the Federal Government as to declare that no gallon of liquor shall be made or sold within that State. The Supreme Court has so held from "the License cases" in 5 Howard's Reports down; because the State under State police power has the authority and the exclusive authority. Cooley also declares that the Government of the United States has a police power, but that that police power is only to enable it to carry out the powers delegated in the Constitution, those surrendered by the people to that Government and not to the States. Now, if what I have said is true, this bill as a bill to suppress the manufacture of oleomargarine is unconstitutional.

Again, it is protection run mad when we say, "Protect my industry against that other fellow's here at home." This bill is not framed to prevent cheating people. The very first section protects colored butter. It says "butter" shall include "butter made with or without coloring matter. You may swindle me as much as you please by making white butter look yellow. It is only the thing which comes in competition with that colored butter that must be excluded, because it is not genuine butter.

I have other objections to this bill, which I will state in the few minutes I have. It is a bill to popularize, and therefore perpetuate and extend, the internal-revenue system. Who else will come here next week and say, "Add a few officers in the Internal Revenue Department to protect me, who am selling my Pennsylvania tobacco, against that man who sells Sumatra covered up and calls it Pennsylvania; I want you to add on to your law that that shall be a crime—cheating in cigars." Another man will say he is selling pure woolen goods, but that others put cotton in their goods and tell lies about them, and ask for another set of men to watch him. And the whole time of the Congress will be taken up in trying to catch up with American rascality—a thing that is impossible. [Laughter.]

There is a demand for the cheap and the nasty, and as long as people ask for cheap things there will be adulteration. This bill is wrong for another reason. It is admitted now that butterine is made so pure in appearance, so pure in taste, and in many other particulars, that nobody can distinguish it from genuine butter.

A MEMBER. You have been eating it at your hotel in Washington.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no doubt I have been eating it for years, and I have enjoyed it. [Laughter.] If I had known it was butterine I would not have enjoyed it. Just as your 90 cents on whisky has taken away all that was good and given you all that was mean, so this tax will not keep butterine out of the market, but will make dearer butter, and meaner this substitute for those who want cheap food.

There is a demand for butter under 50 cents a pound. These great dairymen in Pennsylvania and in the West, who make their millions of pounds of butter and cheese for shipment all over the world, say they can not get as much as they ought to get for their products if others can sell their manufactures. The reply is: Under the Constitution we have given protection by customs duties as against foreigners, but never have we undertaken to give protection to one individual of our own people as against another individual of our own people. It is said that this is a very important matter. Of course it is very important. Nothing that affects so large a body of respectable and good men or the powers of our Government can be unimportant.

The truth is our country is so big that the smallest thing in it, when you come to aggregate it and consider it, becomes a problem large enough to burst a common man's head. The true theory, though, the theory that we have stood upon heretofore and upon which we should continue to stand, is to let all the people in this country buy and sell what they please to each other, except when the States where the article is made or where it is sold believe it injurious to the public health or morals. And there I propose to stand. My State has no special interest in this business that I know. There is not a pound of oleomargarine made in my State of which I am aware. There can not be while our present law exists on the statute-book, and we intend to enforce it.

Our people do not make butter for sale, but we are purchasers of butter and of cheese. Of course our farmers do make butter to sell to us in small quantities. And the very fact that there is a spurious article makes the honest man's character count, and makes his butter bring a better price, because when I buy it I can say, "I know that I am not cheated when I am trading with you." The very fact that this imitation butter is shipped into Georgia makes every Georgia farmer that much better off when he goes to market, because he can say to his customers, "Here is something that did not come from abroad; it has on it the stamp of my integrity, and the character of my wife and daughter is a guarantee of its purity."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM was recognized, and yielded fifteen minutes to Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, our first inquiry is, what is the object sought to be attained by the passage of this bill? Judging from the arguments that have been made in support of it and from the provisions of the bill itself, I take it that the purpose is to drive oleomargarine out of use, in order to protect the people against fraud and to preserve the public health. The provisions of the bill which induce me to think that the object is to drive oleomargarine out of use are those which require the manufacturer to pay a tax of $600 and the wholesale dealer a tax of $480, and also the provision which levies an additional tax of 10 cents a pound upon the article in the hands of the retail dealer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The manufacturer has to pay the 10-cent tax, not the retail dealer.

Mr. REAGAN. Well, the point is that in addition to the license tax there is another tax of 10 cents a pound, whether it is to be paid by the manufacturer or by the retail dealer. Then, any person who purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine that has not been properly branded according to law is liable to a penalty of $50, and higher penalties are imposed for other violations of the law. If the object was to tax oleomargarine for revenue, it would be within the power of Congress to levy such a tax, but the object manifestly being to drive it out of existence, to destroy it as a product, there is, in my judgment, no power under the Constitution authorizing the passage of such a bill. We nowhere in the Constitution find any power authorizing Congress to destroy any product or to outlaw any article. There is no such power. The States may, if they see proper to do so, but we have not been informed that any State has attempted to do it, and if the community suffers the injury which it is alleged grows out of the manufacture and use of oleomargarine, it is singular indeed that the people in the several States have not discovered that fact and applied the remedy which they clearly have the power to apply in such cases.

Mr. Chairman, it is said and will be said again that there are many improper and unhealthy ingredients in these articles, and that the use of them ought to be prohibited and prevented. I have just stated that under the Constitution we have no power to do that. There are a great many things that are wrong and injurious to the individual and to the public that Congress can not prevent or prohibit. Assault and battery is wrong, murder is wrong, larceny is wrong, arson is wrong, bribery is wrong, many things are wrong and do great injury which Congress can not punish, because the power was not delegated to it by the people who made it. No more can you undertake to punish the manufacturers of oleomargarine by destroying their property, because no such power is delegated to you under the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, if Congress should undertake to do all the things that are necessary to the perfect peace, security, and happiness of the people, it would be compelled to have sessions of twenty-four months in each year, and then it would not get through.

Now, sir, I agree with gentlemen who think that some legislation is necessary in reference to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. I would, wherever Congress has the power, require the makers of this article to place upon it the evidence of what it is.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Can that be done without taxing it?

Mr. REAGAN. In the District of Columbia and in the Territories it can be done. If the people of the various States are not interested enough in the subject to want it done, Congress had better not interfere. If the States see proper to regulate this matter they have the power to do so.

Mr. PETERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REAGAN. I have only a few moments.

Mr. PETERS. I would simply like to call the gentleman's attention to this point: Suppose one State does regulate this matter by law and an adjoining State does not, what good does the regulation do in the State that undertakes to regulate?

Mr. REAGAN. Each State can protect its own citizens by proper regulation and proper inspection, whether another State does so or not, just as it can protect its own citizens against any other violation of the law without the concurrence of any other State. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. Chairman, I would by State law adopt some provision requiring oleomargarine when offered for sale to be sold for precisely what it is, just as I would within the States if I had the power compel the makers of brown paper shoe-soles to stamp upon them the evidence that they are brown paper and not leather; just as I would require wines and liquors when sold in bottles or other packages to be stamped or labeled with the actual quantity instead of permitting them to be sold for one-third or one-fourth more. All these matters are proper subjects for regulation by State authority; but I would not, because evils of this kind require to be regulated, strike down our system of Government and overturn the Constitution; for these matters can be more properly regulated by State authority.

Mr. Chairman, if things continue to go on as they have gone on at this session, we shall, after another Congress or two, find people coming here with petitions declaring that in their neighborhood a tree has been blown by a storm across their fences and asking Congress to give them relief. There is no telling what we shall come to in view of the way we are proceeding this session.

A MEMBER. And all done under Democratic administration! [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; I am ashamed to say these things are done in a Democratic House. I do not pretend to excuse Democrats who vote for these measures. Republicans may be excused because they do not believe there is any Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You ought to know better than that, Brother REAGAN.

Mr. REAGAN. Anything introduced in this House which would clearly violate the Constitution could, I think, get a solid vote on the other side because it violated the Constitution. But we have on this side a few who still have some little compunction about disregarding the Constitution.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the case he put, of a tree having been blown down and the Government being asked to pay for the damage, does not illustrate some of the provisions in the river and harbor bill, which I believe the gentleman sustained.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not see the pertinency of the gentleman's question; if I did I would try to answer it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am afraid the gentleman does not look very sharp to discover it.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose the gentleman means to imply that the river and harbor bill was unconstitutional.

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; I merely mean to imply that it contained some provisions for the protection and benefit of private property by appropriations out of the public Treasury.

Mr. REAGAN. There was never any such provision inserted in the bill with my consent.

Mr. STRUBLE. If the bill now under consideration is in fact unconstitutional, may we not expect that the Supreme Court of the United States will so declare, and thus preserve the Constitution?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir. By this I do not mean to say that the Supreme Court would not in a case coming within its judicial control enforce the Constitution; but as to a certain class of questions, political in their nature, the Supreme Court of the United States will not revise the action of Congress. Although it may be clear that the act was passed in disregard of the Constitution, that the men who voted for it violated that instrument either through ignorance or from some other motive, yet it is not all matters of legislation in respect to which the Supreme Court can correct the unconstitutional action of Congress.

Mr. STRUBLE. Do not the court act upon the principle that the question being of a political nature they will leave it to the people to say what shall be done in the premises?

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose the gentleman means that the people can do anything, Constitution or no Constitution.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that this bill in its terms as written is unconstitutional?

Mr. REAGAN. I say that taking the provisions of the bill in connection with the arguments employed in support of it, it is clearly shown that the purpose of the measure is not revenue but the exclusion of a particular article from use. The object is clearly to legislate in favor of one class of people and against another class; to legislate in favor of people who make butter, and against people who make oleomargarine.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I understand the gentleman to concede that the bill as written is in its terms constitutional.

Mr. REAGAN. I can not make any other answer than I have made. The bill shows upon its face that it is not meant for revenue, but to exclude from use oleomargarine. The arguments in support of it are all in the same line.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then do you not pronounce it constitutional? I understand you do.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not desire to have it supposed that I have any sympathy with the improper practices of those engaged in the making of oleomargarine. I would require by the proper authorities, by the States within States, and if necessary by Congress where it has jurisdiction, that those engaged in this business should clearly show what it is.

I would make it highly penal to put any unhealthy ingredients in it. I would make it an offense to sell it without proper evidence of its character. This being shown, it would then take its proper place as oleomargarine, and not be palmed off as real butter.

I have no sympathy with a fraud which represents oleomargarine as genuine butter. And when you put these restrictions upon its sale it will then be known as oleomargarine. Then if this cheap substitute for butter is desired by poor people who are not able to buy genuine butter which is costly, if the cheap substitute be healthy and pure, who here will say poor people shall not supply themselves with it? And this is one of the reasons why I oppose the bill. I would allow its manufacture, I would prevent putting improper ingredients in it, I would provide for showing what it is, so that those wishing to purchase genuine butter may do so, and those wishing to purchase a cheaper and healthful food, may also have the opportunity to do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the gentleman from Texas takes his seat I would like to ask him one question.

Mr. REAGAN. My time has expired, or I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will yield long enough for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to ask his question.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Texas says he wants to protect the poor people. The object of this bill is to protect the poor people by enabling them to get the genuine article of butter. It can be proved a spurious article, not what it is represented to be, can be purchased at 7 cents a pound, and is purchased at the factory at 7 cents a pound, and then palmed off upon poor people as genuine butter at from 18 to 25 cents a pound.

Mr. REAGAN. So far as the fraud is concerned of representing oleomargarine as butter, I would prevent that; but I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the object of the bill. It is to protect dairymen who own cows and make butter which is sold at a high price and against furnishing poor people with a cheap substitute therefor at a low price.

Mr. SCOTT. No; it is to protect poor people and secure to them genuine butter at a low price, and not oleomargarine, a spurious article, at a high price.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will reserve the remainder of my time, as I understand the other side desire to be heard.

Mr. HISCOCK Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentlman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] who has just preceded me, and as I understood the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], there is not a provision in this bill to tax oleomargarine and imitations of butter which is un constitutional. As I understand the arguments of both of these gentlemen, they assume to put reasons in my mouth and to assign reasons to gentlemen generally upon this floor why they may or will vote for the bill, asserting, if you please, the reasons thus assigned are unconstitutional, or have no warrant in the Constitution, and therefore the bill itself is unconstitutional, they argue.

They propose to look back of the bill itself and to say that I am animated to vote for it because I wish to protect the butter industry, and that as Congress has no power under the Constitution to do that, therefore the bill is unconstitutional. I apprehend every member of this committee who examines the provisions of the bill in detail, or considers it as a whole, will agree it nowhere is in conflict with the Constitution.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] suggests it is not in the interest of the farmer—if he knew, poor man, what his interest was—that this bill should become a law.

Well, sir, as I am informed, two-thirds of the States of the Union, and more than two-thirds of the people of the United States, have by affirmative legislation upon the statute-books of their States respectively declared they do want just such a law as the pending bill enacted. And, so far as the first question is concerned, whether it is in the interest of the agricultural people of the United States that we should have this legislation, I propose to leave it to them, to that class, and I am not compelled to confine myself to memorials which are often cheap, very cheap, which have come to us, but I can point to their declarations in emphatic terms, through their chosen representatives, in the form of State law, and I need not go any further than the statute of the State of Georgia, to which the distinguished Representative from that State has referred. It voices the sentiment of the people of the other States and characterizes their legislation.

Now here is a product so vile in its ingredients and so unhealthy in its use the people of the State of Georgia have said of it that an innkeeper using it shall place a sign over the entrance to his inn announcing that oleomargarine is used there as food; and, further, that upon the register where a man writes his name as a guest notice shall be given that they feed their guests on the nasty and unwholesome food, outterine.

That is the character of the product; and gentlemen may bring here the report of chemists as much as they please, for what can speak more plainly or more emphatically of the bad character of this compound or more intelligently than this solemn act of the Legislature of the intelligent people of a great State compelling inn-keepers to advertise this compound as the poison which is given to guests if it uses butterine or oleomargarine or any of the base imitations of butter, by whatever name called?

What next? And now, Mr. Chairman, I am coming, and shall speak very briefly, to the constitutional question involved here. I ask gentlemen upon the other side of the House, who always have or profess to have special charge of the Constitution, when has there ever been a time in the history of our country when, for the purpose of taxation, we have not discriminated in favor of one industry and against that of another? It is conceded on all hands that under the taxing power we can tax the manufacture of any product out of existence, and where then is the ground for opposition to this bill? It has always been conceded by every statesman, or less, who has ever discussed a tax law, that it was proper to discriminate in favor of, protect, if you please, one industry if it needed it as against another. This can not be disputed, and who challenges the assertion?

How long has it been since the Democratic party in its national convention declared in positive terms in favor of the doctrine which I have just cited? Taxation with incidental protection was once a plank in its platform, unless my recollection fails me, and we need invoke nothing further here. This side of the House has ever been ready to go that length, and does not that doctrine cover the suggestions of the gentleman from Georgia and the objections of the gentleman from Texas, and justify all parties in supporting the pending bill? Constitutional warrant for taxation with incidental protection is all that is required or asked for. The principle underlying that plank of the platform in the national convention carries with it the power to enact this bill.

Gentlemen have been appealed to and put upon their consciences and oaths in delivering their votes upon this bill. Well, by our votes one industry is to be stricken down; that great industry in favor of which three-fourths of all the States have legislated—agriculture, an industry from which this country derives practically all of the wealth it has—or we are to foster and support it. What is asked? That in levying taxes we will give it incidental protection as against a compound which has been declared by those who have examined it to be vile in its component parts and carrying with it the germs of insidious disease, a fraudulent, spurious article, which is palmed off upon the poor as an honest product of the dairy. And, Mr. Chairman, I have heard the poor man alluded to in this discussion more than once. There are those here who seem to have him always with them in their professions. This compound is palmed off upon him, freighted with disease, as a wholesome product, and for it he pays the full price of the genuine product of the dairy.

What, then, do we propose by this bill? We propose, under the Constitution, if you please, to give incidental protection to the agricultural industries of the country by forcing this vile, dirty, diseased product to pay an internal tax. By all parties who have ever formulated a tariff bill this principle has underlain the whole subject. It has been the foundation-stone upon which such bills have been constructed always, and it is fair to say that the internal-revenue taxes upon our statute-books can only be sustained upon that theory, and that theory alone. Alcohol and its products, believed by the people to carry with their manufacture and sale vice and crime, is still taxed upon the theory that it is a tax upon vice and crime, and in some degree may restrain them; and there is not a feature of the internal-revenue taxes now collected but that the argument has been made over and over again in favor of it that it should be supported and sustained because the industry taxed can well afford to pay it.

Suppose a provision should come in here to repeal the bank tax? Would not the argument be urged against it that the tax is upon capital, upon wealth; that the banks can afford to pay taxes? Would this argument be presented in favor of the repeal, that it was unconstitutional? And that that tax is imposed for no other reason in the world than that the banking capital can afford to pay, and is discriminated against, and for the benefit of other property?

And I repeat, and challenge contradiction, the whole system of internal-revenue taxation rests upon the principle of protection: that it is within the province of the legislators to discriminate in the levying of taxes, to levy them upon the industries which can well afford to pay them and upon those which are believed to foster crime and disease. Can we not carry that same principle a little further, and levy a tax upon this industry which carries with it and disseminates disease; levy a tax upon an industry that is prosperous because frauds are practiced by it?

Who is there who believes for a moment that oleomargarine would be sold in the markets of the United States if the purchaser knew the vile compound he was buying? It has its place in the markets here because people are ignorant of what it is. They buy it without knowing that they are being deceived; and can we not as against this diseased product, this fraud, in levying taxes exercise the powers which have been exercised by the Government heretofore against whisky, tobacco, and banks, and impose a tax upon it and brand it? Because it is unhealthful, vended by deceptive and fraudulent practices, does that give it immunity? Because it is only bought, because the consumer does not know of the fraud that is being practiced upon him and is ignorant of what he purchases, do gentlemen tell us, then, that in enacting this taxing law we are violating the Constitution?

Well, Mr. Chairman, if we are, and I deny it, I will take my part, and I hope you will take your part, in all the violation of the Constitution there is involved in voting for the passage of this bill!

It has been suggested in this discussion that State legislation is the proper method of dealing with this matter. Sir, there is no way to regulate the trade in this article unless you regulate, control, supervise the manufacture of it. The manufacture can only be regulated in that way. The Government must take possession of the factory where it is made, and it must be made under Government inspection and under Government license. Its manufacture must be surrounded by all the regulations, by all the laws, by all the penal provisions of the statute, if you please, that are made to surround the manufacture of alcohol and its products. With that precedent upon the statute-book, with all the precedents that we have had in the past upon this question, are we to be frightened from the support of this bill because possibly it can be construed, claimed, imagined, guessed, dreamed that some gentlemen may have supported it for unconstitutional reasons?

It is not my intention in this discussion to enter at any length into the methods of the making of this what should be a contraband article. I concede what will be asserted upon this floor that oleomargarine can be made as pure, as healthy for use as food as butter is itself. I grant it; and when evidence is brought forward here in support of that proposition I concede it all. I have no doubt the evidence points to the fact that it can be manufactured so that it is butter; in all its constituent parts, and, in the proportion which one part bears to another, as pure as butter.

But, sir, that is not all. You can, and they do in the main, manufacture it so that it is little less than poison—I amend my remark and strike out "little less than." It is manufactured so that it is poison; and yet the ordinary consumer can not tell it from the pure article—from butter—and pays the price of butter for it. I go further than that, and say that no man except the scientist by an anylysis or by the microscope can tell it from the pure article or from butter; and this vile compound it is that is put upon the market and sold to the poorer class who consume it. Having collected in it the germs of all the diseases which infect animals, and never having been subjected to that degree of heat which would destroy the germs, it is absolutely a poison to the human stomach, freighted with disease, freighted with death. It can be made in that way, and, as I said a moment ago, it is not within the power of any man unless he has scientific attainments and brings analysis or the microscope to bear upon it to distinguish the poor article, the poison, from the good.

I refer to it again and urge it as a power that we have, as a duty that is imposed upon us here, to so legislate, so tax, that industries of this kind—industries which ought not to prosper, industries that if we had the power, the constitutional power, we ought to strike down and out of existence—should pay their proportion of the taxes for the support of this Government.

I grant, sir, that this bill carries with it all the machinery which is necessary for the purpose of forcing this article, if marketed at all, of forcing it to be advertised so that its true character and its true nature may be known to the consumer. I grant, sir, this measure may possibly have the effect of stamping this industry out of existence. I do not know whether it will or whether it will not. If it is so unwholesome that when advertised no man will buy it, I shall have no sorrowing over my share in the alleged violation of the Constitution of my country by the vote I shall give in favor of this bill, and that should not afford a reason why it should not be taxed. Must we, are we forbidden to tax by the Constitution those products, that the mere process of taxation, and because the process of their taxation, will advertise their quality and character and stop their production and sale?

And right here, Mr. Chairman, for I am advised that I ought to consume about all the time until five o'clock, as no one else wishes to take the balance of the time till then—there is one suggestion in this connection I will make, and I hope that I will hear from the friends of oleomargarine upon that point before this discussion is over. Why is it that you so struggle against this bill? Why is it that day after day for weeks our desks have been covered with literature upon this bill? Is it because of the tax which is imposed upon it? Is that the reason? I believe and doubt not it will be demonstrated in this discussion that oleomargarine can be manufactured to-day, the pure article, healthy as food, pay all the tax that this bill imposes, and compete in the markets with butter.

Mr. CANNON. And not be raised in price?

Mr. HISCOCK. And not be raised in price to the purchaser at retail.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. What advantage then do you gain by this bill?

A MEMBER. The Government gets the tax.

Mr. HISCOCK. It can be manufactured, as I have said, can pay the tax which this bill imposes, and be sold if pure and healthy side by side with butter—I mean at the price that butter commands in the market. But now for the reason why this bill is opposed. The imposition of this tax is not the reason why it is opposed. The opposition is due to the fact that an impure article is known to be poison, to be unhealthy, destructive to the human race, carrying with it disease to whoever eats it; and that fact may have the effect to stop the sale of all imitations of butter, for who can tell whether he is buying a pure or an impure article?

Again, sir, imitation butter is now sold as butter and at a butter price to the unsuspecting consumer. He it is that is poisoned and cheated. The effect of the bill will be to brand the goods, give them their true character, obviate, prevent fraud, and all this opposition is not against the tax, but because it will prevent fraud and deception. And shall we forbear to tax the vile stuff, a poison, because thereby the true character may be known?

I trust gentlemen will cease to invoke the Constitution as an argument against the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock; the evening session to be devoted to general debate upon this bill, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. DUNHAM. To that proposition, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HATCH. Pending that I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has priority.

Mr. HATCH. I trust the gentleman will withdraw it.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 49, noes 54.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand tellers.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] is determined that this order shall not be made, and it is not worth while to try to have tellers in the minute and a half or two minutes that remain between now and 5 o'clock.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is perfectly correct in his statement. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER. The noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I move the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock for debate only on this bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

While the House was dividing on the question of ordering the yeas and nays, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of March 5, 1886, information in regard to changes made from the original plans of construction of the cruisers Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication is accompanied by a large mass of documents, which, if there be no objection, will be referred to the Committee on Printing, to ascertain and report whether it is necessary that they should be printed.

Mr. CAMERON. Let the communication itself from the Secretary of the Navy be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication from the Secretary of the Navy will be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the governor of Ohio, transmitting resolutions of the senate of Ohio in regard to the election of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE as a United States Senator from that State; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the board of county commissioners of Bernalillo County, New Mexico, praying for prompt and favorable action on the bill to settle private land claims in Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SEWELL presented a memorial of Welcome Circle, No. 3, Brotherhood of the Union, of Camden, N. J., remonstrating against the acquisition of land in this country by aliens; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Dubuque, Iowa, praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER presented a petition of Peter Nelson and 54 other citizens of Barkville, Delta County, Michigan, and a petition of J. C. Bishop and 21 other citizens of Ottawa County, Michigan, praying for the enactment of a law authorizing the Postmaster-General to pay the expenses of rent, light, and fuel, and granting other relief to all postmasters of the third and fourth classes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition of E. C. Flagg and other citizens of Upton, Mass., highly respectable farmers there, praying for the enactment of the provisions contained in the bill concerning oleomargarine, reported by the House Committee on Agriculture. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EUSTIS presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Louisiana, favoring the passage of a law to establish a navy-yard at New Orleans; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PALMER presented resolutions adopted by the Detroit Board of Trade remonstrating against the proposed tax on butterine or oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of Richard B. Rians, praying for the passage of an act to increase his pension.

The petitioner states that his father served in the American Army in the Revolutionary war; that he himself served in the Army in the war of 1812, and also served as a member of the Thirty-seventh Regiment, Iowa Volunteers, known as the Gray Beard Regiment, in the war of the rebellion; that he had four sons, two sons-in-law, and thirteen step-sons who served in the Union during the war of the rebellion, making twenty members of the Army from that family; and that he is now drawing a pension from the United States of $12 per month. He is nearly eighty-eight years of age, is almost blind and nearly helpless, and in consequence of his age and infirmities is entirely unable to do anything toward his support.

I think the petition presents, in connection with the papers accompanying it, a case that the Committee on Pensions may early and favorably consider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of the bill proposing to tax oleomargarine and butterine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial adopted by a joint session of Local Assemblies No. 4080, No. 1597, No. 405, No. 4327, No. 4449, No. 5959, and No. 1912, Knights of Labor, of Englewood, Ill., remonstrating against the proposed tax on imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., favoring the construction of a railroad bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of Ellicottville, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter at 10 cents a pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1505) granting a pension to William Dermody;
A bill (H. R. 5333) granting a pension to Edward L. Hill;
A bill (H. R. 5306) granting a pension to Roxana V. Rowley;
A bill (H. R. 6257) for the relief of Julia Connelly;
A bill (H. R. 1943) granting a pension to James L. McClarran;
A bill (H. R. 5307) granting a pension to Lieut. Joseph Prost; and
A bill (H. R. 5334) granting a pension to Henry Annin.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2249) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 998) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the owner of the bark General Berry, destroyed while in the service of the United States, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I desire to say one word upon that motion.

This claim came in by way of petition, the petition of one James Hooper, and was very fully and thoroughly considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. An adverse report was unanimously agreed to. Then the petitioner, feeling aggrieved, urged a rehearing, which was granted him, and he iterated and reiterated his desire, and the matter was very thoroughly and patiently heard and disposed of.

Now the same claim comes in again in the guise of a bill which does not allude to the petitioner's name, but says, "A bill referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the owner of the bark General Berry." Instead of giving the name of the person, it describes him in that way, and the bill is sent to another committee.

I think under the circumstances, whichever committee should originally have had jurisdiction of such a claim, the same committee that dealt with it before should deal with it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2419) granting a pension to Jackson Steward, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7979) granting a pension to Jackson Steward;
A bill (H. R. 6430) granting a pension to Lucy G. Dutcher;
A bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Jacoby;
A bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy;
A bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Eliza Wilkins;
A bill (S. 2420) granting a pension to Sidney Denton;
A bill (S. 2391) granting a pension to John G. Warren;

A bill (S. 2388) granting a pension to Alonzo Raymond;
A bill (S. 2366) granting a pension to Elizabeth Garaghty;
A bill (S. 2363) granting a pension to Marcel Gagnon; and
A bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wright.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2517) declaratory of the meaning of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax;" which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1160) authorizing the retirement of Lieut. Adolphus W. Greely with the rank and pay of colonel, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2339) to provide for one additional assistant adjutant-general, with the rank of major of cavalry, to report it favorably without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

As I have obtained the indefinite postponement of the other bill in which the name of Lieutenant Greely is mentioned, it is proper that I should say the bill I now report favorably authorizing the appointment of one additional assistant adjutant-general with the rank of major of cavalry is intended to put it in the power of the President to recognize Lieutenant Greely's services. His name is not mentioned in the bill, but the object and purpose of it is expressed in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2035) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the State of Oregon with the sum of $12,398.55 for ordnance and ordnance stores to be issued to the Territory of Washington on account of said State, in payment for ordnance and ordnance stores borrowed by said State of said Territory during the Nez Percé Indian war of 1877 and 1878, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas in relation to the enlargement of the Soldiers' Home located at Leavenworth, Kans., to report them back. As the matter has been reported on by bill I ask that the resolutions lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1964) to repeal a certain portion of section 1094 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1043) to amend sections 1097 and 1098 of the Revised Statutes, relating to aids to general officers of the Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1148) providing for the construction of an iron pier at Fortress Monroe, Va., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2361) granting a pension to Louis Heidel; and
A bill (S. 2384) granting a pension to William Peavler.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3440) making an appropriation to construct a macadamized road from the United States barracks in Saint Bernard Parish, Louisiana, to the national military cemetery at Chalmette, in said parish, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1863) for the relief of W. T. H. Foreman, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to whom was referred the bill (S. 546) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ills., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees, to report it with amendments; and I ask permission that I may submit a report upon the subject hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave will be granted, there being no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say that, as a member of the committee, I was not present at the time when the bill was ordered to be reported, and I do not assent to its provisions. I simply desire to place myself upon record as not approving it.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1059) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4124) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1773) for the relief of Lieut. J. McA. Webster, of the Twenty-second Infantry, United States Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT OF LABOR COMMISSIONER.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 30,000 additional copies of the first annual report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor be printed; 8,000 for the use of the Senate, 16,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,000 for the use of the Commissioner of said bureau.

REPORT ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. HAWLEY. From the Committee on Printing I report a substitute for a resolution referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The substitute was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 7,500 additional copies of the report of the board of fortifications or other coast defenses be printed; 2,000 for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 for the War Department, and 1,000 for the Navy Department.

NELSON'S REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. HAWLEY. From the Committee on Printing I report also favorably the following concurrent resolution referred to that committee:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report on Alaska, by E. W. Nelson, be printed, with the necessary illustrations, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for distribution under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I see that the resolution includes an appropriation for the necessary illustrations. I should be glad to be informed on that point.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to state (the inquiry is perfectly proper) that this is one of the two reports sanctioned by the Smithsonian Institution, reports made by officers of the Signal Service under scientific instruction from the Smithsonian. Professor Baird places a very high estimate upon them. One of them has been ordered to be printed by the Senate. This one costs but $1,500 for the whole number, the regular number and the additional copies. There are some illustrations, but not expensive ones.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if anybody in connection with the Smithsonian Institution writes anything which is not printed at public expense?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is an indefinite question. I am unable to answer. I suppose whatever they write that is valuable gets printed, either by their own funds or by the vote of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. The question as to whether it is valuable, I think, if submitted to the ordinary test applied to the emanations of other people, would probably be decided against the value of the work that is published. I do not know myself of any person in Government employ except Senators and Members of Congress who have a right to write anything they please and have it printed at the Government Printing Office. I should like to hear of anybody else. If any person knows of any one who is authorized thus to inflict upon the taxing power of the people what he has to say, I should like to hear of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2518) granting a pension to Louisa R. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2520) granting a pension to Stephen Singleton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 2521) for the relief of John Mellifont and Ellen Riordon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2522) for the relief of Damie Fuller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2523) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine W. Collins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2524) granting a pension to Peter Goad; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER. I introduce a bill for the purpose of creating the office of assistant commissioner of Indian affairs for reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in that bureau of the Department of the Interior there is no assistant. Whenever the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is away the duties of the Commissioner are discharged by the chief clerk, without, apparently, any authority of law so to do, but from the necessity of the case. The bill disposes of the chief clerk and transfers all the duties now discharged by him to an assistant commissioner, giving him the authority that the chief clerk now exercises. As a matter of justice to the Department this bill ought to become a law, and I ask the committee to take it up and dispose of it promptly.

The bill (S. 2525) to create the office of assistant commissioner of Indian affairs was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (S. 2526) for the relief of Walter Akin, administrator of James Akin, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2527) granting a pension to Esther G. Nally; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2528) for the relief of Edwin Stevens; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING OF GENERAL PENSION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war, honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein, be printed as passed by the Senate.

CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS AT PENSACOLA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and they are, instructed to inquire and report, by bill or otherwise, whether the interests of the country do not require the equipment of the navy-yard at Warrington, near Pensacola, Fla., for the construction there of steel ships of war, and whether an appropriation of not less than $500,000 should not be made for the immediate commencement of the work of constructing such vessels.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR AND WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York. The bill has been reported favorably from the Finance Committee, and there are reasons why immediate action should be had, which will be obvious to all the members of the Senate. I think there can be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officers to allow Chester A. Arthur, collector of the district of New York, in settlement of his accounts, a credit for $8,436.88, the same being for the sum of $5,000 in gold coin, now charged to him, which was stolen or disappeared from the office of the then cashier of the custom-house at New York, January 21, 1876, without the default or negligence of the collector or of the late William D. Robinson, cashier; and for $3,436.88, the amount of an apparent discrepancy in account of proceeds of sales of unclaimed goods, which is unexplained by reason of the death of Samuel G. Ogden, late auditor of the custom-house, who had charge of such account and personally received and disbursed all moneys thereon during his whole term of service of thirty-six years. It further directs the proper accounting officers to allow William H. Robertson, collector of the district of New York, in settlement of his account, a credit for $13,094, the same being a sum now charged to him, which was stolen or disappeared from the office of the cashier of the custom-house at New York, without the default or negligence of the collector or of the late James Hoffman, cashier.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4838) to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the said bill and the amendments thereto; and had appointed Mr. DINGLEY, Mr. DUNN, and Mr. MCMILLIN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, and for other purposes, be made a special order for Tuesday, the 1st of June, at 2 o'clock.

I will state, if I am permitted to do so, that I make this motion by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, and that this is a very important measure. It proposes the repeal of the pre-emption law, the repeal of the timber-culture act, the repeal of the commutation provision of the homestead law, makes material modifications of the desert-land act, and contains many general provisions of importance and utility in the disposition of the public lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the bill indicated by him be made a special order for Tuesday, the 1st of June, at 2 o'clock. The question is on agreeing to the motion. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to, and the bill is made a special order for the time named, two-thirds concurring.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. SEWELL. I rise to a question of privilege as to the vote necessary to make a special order, whether it requires a majority or a two-thirds vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires a two-thirds vote. There being no negative, the Chair assumed that the special order was made by the requisite vote.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New Jersey voted in the negative.

Mr. SEWELL. I objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then assume that the vote has not been taken and will again submit the question.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the public land bill to which he has referred be made the special order for Tuesday, June 1, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SEWELL. I have stated to the Senate on more than one occasion that I am desirous of getting up a certain bill and that I should object to any special order being made without taking a vote on that bill. I shall ask the friends of that bill to vote down any special order being made until the bill to which I refer, the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, has a chance to come before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon to make the bill indicated by him a special order for the date named.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the title of the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, and for other purposes.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. Is this subject debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not subject to debate. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] on all questions connected with this bill.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to say that I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I do not know how he would vote on this motion, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). When the roll was called I did not notice the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], with whom I am paired. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PLATT (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. As I do not know how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr CULLOM].

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]; but if he were here I know he would vote for the motion, and so I have voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is carried, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

SAMUEL HANSON.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the recall of the bill (S. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson, which passed the Senate yesterday. A House bill for the same purpose has arrived in the Senate and been passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senate bill referred to will be recalled from the House of Representatives.

FORFEITURE OF ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of House bill 453, Calendar No. 877.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the words "right of way," in line 3, to insert:

And the right, power, and authority given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material of earth, stone, timber, &c., for the construction thereof, including all necessary grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations.

So as to read:

That all the lands, excepting the right of way, and the right, power, and authority given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material of earth, stone, timber, &c., for the construction thereof, including all necessary grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which are adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the main line of said road, embraced within both the granted and indemnity limits, as contemplated to be constructed under and by the provisions of the said act of July 27, 1866, and acts and joint resolutions subsequent thereto and relating to the construction of said road and telegraph, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "restore to the public domain," in line 23, to strike out the following words:

And made subject to disposal to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws, by actual settlers only as though said grant had never been made: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to impair any right the United States may have in or to the lands embraced in said grant not declared forfeited by this act.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me that in accordance with the policy already announced by the Committee on Public Lands for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws, the first part of that paragraph ought to be retained:

And made subject to disposal to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws, by actual settlers only.

I do not understand why, if the committee intend to adhere to the policy announced in the bill that has been a special order this morning, that amendment should be made to this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee have not announced a principle quite so broad as that, I think. The bill which is before the Senate from the committee provides for the repeal of the pre-emption law and of the timber-culture law and for the modification of the desert-land act. Many of these lands, according to the information the committee had, are of a character that would be entered under the desert-land act as proposed to be modified by the committee, and it is thought best to leave these lands to be entered as they will be entered under the provisions of the bill which will probably become a law before Congress adjourns. There are many of the lands that can only be made use of under the desert-land provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is necessarily absent from the Senate and will probably be absent indefinitely, proposed an amendment to this bill. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered as offered by him for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment was proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], as representing the views of the minority of the Committee on Public Lands, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as new sections to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri to hear and determine all questions and controversies concerning the rights and equities in said forfeited lands that are claimed or asserted by the United States, or by any person or corporation claiming the same under or in consequence of any law of the United States, or any act of its lawfully authorized agents, and to enforce any judgment or decree, either interlocutory or final, that said court shall render in respect of said lands or any interest therein.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the western district of Missouri, under the direction of the Department of Justice, to proceed in the circuit court of the United States for the said district, by bill in equity, in the name of the United States of America as plaintiff, against any corporations or persons that claim any interest in the lands hereby declared forfeited arising under said act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, or under this act, so as to bring before said court for its determination the validity of such claim, whether the same be legal or equitable.

SEC. —. That any person or corporation not made a party defendant in said proceeding, but claiming any interest under the laws of the United States in the lands, or any part thereof, which are declared forfeited by this act, may present such claim by petition in said cause, duly verified by oath; and if the court, upon consideration thereof, shall decide that the adjudication and settlement of such claim is necessary to do complete justice in said cause, the court shall direct that such further proceeding be had upon such petition as that the same may be fully heard and determined, and shall proceed to decree upon the same as fully as if such petitioner had been made a party defendant in said suit: Provided, That no such petition shall be filed after twelve months from the date of the filing of the bill in said cause.

SEC. —. That the court, if it shall see fit, may tax all the costs of the suit under this act against the United States, or may apportion the costs of any proceeding under this act between the parties according to justice and equity. Any party to the suit instituted under this act shall have the right of appeal from any final decree therein to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same conditions as are prescribed by law and the rules of said court for appeals in equity cases; and the Supreme Court shall cause said appeal to be advanced on the docket so that the same shall be speedily determined; but no right of appeal shall exist after six months from the time when said final decree is entered on the records of the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. It is proper I should say that the committee did not agree to that amendment, and do not believe it is necessary. I do not believe myself that it is of a character to render any service to the public or to the railroad company or to the persons who may be interested in the lands or in the company itself. I therefore hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. VEST. If I understand the case, there is nothing in the bill as reported by the committee which will prevent any person or corporation testing the matter hereafter and having an adjudication of his or its rights.

Mr. PLUMB. Nothing at all.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain the meaning of this language which I will read. The bill provides that the grants made by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which are adjacent to and conterminous with the uncompleted portions of the main line of said road, embraced within both the granted and indemnity limits, as contemplated to be constructed under and by the provisions of the said act of July 27, 1866, and acts and joint resolutions subsequent thereto and relating to the construction of said road and telegraph, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain.

Is that intended to forfeit the lands for that portion of the road which was not completed within the time specified in the granting act?

Mr. PLUMB. It is only intended to forfeit the lands opposite that portion of the road which is now uncompleted.

Mr. CALL. Then I wish to say for one that this is a bill to confirm the title of the railroad company to the grant instead of a bill to forfeit it, and it raises a question of great public interest which attaches to a great many of the railroad companies and which is perhaps the most important question before the people. It is impossible to tell what quantity of land will be confirmed to the railroad company under this act if it shall become a law.

The people of the United States, and I believe the right and justice of the case, demand the forfeiture of all the land where the grant was not complied with and the road completed within the time specified in the granting act. If there be exceptions to that, they should be made known and a new grant be made, for it is in effect a new grant and not the forfeiture of an old grant.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to the statute amendatory of the original granting act, which I think will qualify his opinion on this particular point as to this road. By chapter 33 of the acts of 1871 it is provided—

That the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, organized under act of Congress of July 27, 1866, is hereby authorized to make and issue its bonds in such form and manner, for such sums, payable at such times, and bearing such rate of interest, and to dispose of them on such terms as its directors may deem advisable; and to secure said bonds, the said company may mortgage its road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property, subject to such terms, conditions, and limitations as its directors may prescribe. As proof and notice of the legal execution and effectual delivery of any mortgage hereafter made by said company, it shall be filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That if the company shall hereafter suffer any breach of the conditions of the act above referred to, under which it is organized, the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to so much thereof as shall be coterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage.

I think, whatever the merit may be of the general proposition which the Senator from Florida is proceeding to argue, that this railroad is taken out of the category of roads to which he has referred.

Mr. CALL. What is the date of that statute?

Mr. PLUMB. April 20, 1871.

Mr. CALL. That seems to qualify the matter.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ARMLESS OR LEGLESS PENSIONERS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the individual pension bills upon the Calendar reported favorably, and I suggest that we begin where we left off yesterday.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to let me call up a general pension bill, limited in its character, which I do not think will take more than a few minutes. It is Order of Business 517, Senate bill 2056—quite as important as private pension bills.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not like to give way, but I think I shall have to do so for that.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to take up Senate bill 2056.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2056) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

It proposes that all persons on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $30 a month; that all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $36 per month; and that all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at the shoulder-joint or a leg at the hip-joint, shall receive a pension at the rate of $45 per month. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Mr. SEWELL. This bill, while general in its character, is limited to the men who have lost limbs in the service. The classification under the existing law is:

(1) For all amputations below the knee or elbow	$24 00
(2) For all amputations above the knee or elbow	30 00
(3) For all amputations at the hip or shoulder joint	37 50

The committee had a great many bills under consideration, from which they reported this original bill, preserving the present classification as I have stated it for these injuries, but increasing the twenty-four-dollar class to $30, the thirty-dollar class to $36, and the class receiving $37.50 to $45.

That increase has been based on a great mass of testimony coming from the pensioners themselves and medical certificates in connection with their claims as to the increase of suffering by reason of these amputations. As they grow older they become less able to work and more feeble, and as a consequence ought to be more of a burden on the generosity of the Government.

The number of pensioners and the amount of money involved in this bill is as follows:

The class now receiving $24 per month numbers 15,024; the amount of money expended, $4,326,912, and the increase proposed is $1,081,728. The class receiving $30 per month consists of 7,927 pensioners, and the present annual value of their pensions is $2,853,720, and the proposed increase is $570,744. Of the class now receiving $37.50, there are 470 pensioners, and the annual value of their pensions now is $211,500, and the increase proposed by the bill is $42,300; making the total increase by this bill $1,694,772.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that an annual increase?

Mr. SEWELL. An annual increase of $1,694,772.

I submit, Mr. President, that this is a well-defined class that is not capable of increase, that the number is diminishing every day, and that we know what we are doing when we propose to vote for a bill of this kind. The increase is one that ought to be made. These are the suffering heroes, I may say, of the war, who carry about with them apparent to the eye of everybody their disabilities; and if there is any class of pensioners to whom we ought to be liberal, these are the ones.

Mr. MILLER. There is an amendment to this bill which I offered some time ago which has been printed and I trust it will be accepted by the Senator who has the bill in charge, as I think it very just. In line 16, after the word "hip-joint," I move to insert:

Or so near the joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb.

So as to read:

And that all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at the shoulder-joint or a leg at the hip-joint, or so near the joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $45 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRIDOLINE GLASTETTER.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the individual pension bills reported favorably in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, it will be so ordered. The call will commence where the Senate left off yesterday.

The bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Fridoline Glastetter, late a private in Company F, Second Illinois Light Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALLIS PATTEE.

The bill (S. 2026) granting a pension to Wallis Pattee was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Wallis Pattee, late a member of Company K, Seventh Regiment of Iowa Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. M'ELROY.

The bill (S. 2233) granting a pension to John P. McElroy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John P. McElroy, formerly of Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. ROWE.

The bill (S. 2228) granting a pension to Samuel F. Rowe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel F. Rowe, late of Company G, Fifth Wisconsin Regiment Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (S. 2228) granting a pension to Samuel F. Rowe, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant enlisted as a private in Company G, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, in May, 1861, and was discharged June 14, 1862. He asks for a pension for chronic rheumatism, contracted at Cape Griffin, Va., while in the line of his military duty.

His application was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions solely on the testimony of the official surgeons, who allege that he is perfectly sound, and without any appearance of disability. The report of the Adjutant-General identifies the service of the soldier, and mentions his discharge for disability. The Surgeon-General's report says he was admitted to Eckington Hospital, Washington, D. C., May 16, 1862, with chronic bronchitis, and discharged from the service June 14, 1862.

Dr. Walbridge, of Wisconsin, testifies that after a careful examination in October, 1884, he finds chronic bronchitis affecting the lungs, which corresponds with the report of the Surgeon-General. He also has pains in the chest and arms, due to chronic rheumatism, and he pronounces him partly disabled.

Ceylon C. Lincoln, a neighbor, testifies to his long acquaintance with claimant, and to his personal knowledge of him from year to year, and since his return from the Army to the present time he has been partially disabled from performing manual labor.

R. H. Soper says his acquaintance commenced with the claimant when they enlisted; that he was a sound man; that he has personal knowledge of his being sick and sent to the hospital, and of his continued disability.

Other witnesses testify to their knowledge of him before enlistment, when he was an active healthy man.

The surgeon's certificate of discharge says he finds him incapable of discharging the duties of a soldier; that he is discharged on account of chronic rheumatism, and adds "of six years' standing."

The very contradictory statements of the doctors so weaken their value as to suggest that they can not count for much for or against the claimant. The testimony of his neighbors and long-time acquaintances seems to be reliable, and it is in evidence that he entered the Army a healthy man, and came out of it, and continues to be, broken in health, and to a degree disabled by a complication of diseases.

The Senator by whom this report is submitted has personal knowledge of this claimant, and can certify that he is a disabled man, in destitute circumstances, and in every sense worthy of relief.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCY A. WASHBURN.

The bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Lucy A. Washburn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the name of Lucy A. Washburn, widow of First Lieut. Lon Washburn, late of Battery I, Sixteenth Regiment New York Artillery, shall be placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES G. MATHES.

The bill (S. 2220) granting a pension to James G. Mathes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James G. Mathes, late a corporal of Company L, Eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY DANER.

The bill (S. 2197) granting a pension to Henry Daner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry Daner, late a private in Company I, Second Regiment of United States Artillery, who served twenty years in the United States Army and was honorably discharged for disability incurred in the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACKSON CHAPMAN.

The bill (S. 2075) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jackson Chapman, late a private in Company E, Forty-fifth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANN E. LAMBURG.

The bill (S. 1902) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann E. Lamburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Ann E. Lamburg, widow of George W. Lamburg, late of Company I, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES BRUNDRIDGE.

The bill (S. 2198) granting a pension to Charles Brundridge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles Brundridge, late of Company D, First Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrosed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WALLACE YOUNG.

The bill (S. 2180) granting an increase of pension to William Wallace Young was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of William Wallace Young, late a private in Company B, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, that we may know the reasons of the increase.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2180) granting an increase of pension to William Wallace Young, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner was a private in Company B, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers. He was pensioned at $4 and increased to $6 a month for disabilities resulting from confinement in rebel prisons. He alleges that while in Florence prison, South Carolina, in February, 1865, he contracted diarrhea, disease of liver and kidneys, and lung disease and scurvy, while a prisoner of war, by exposure and starvation, resulting in general debility.

His capture and imprisonment are shown by the war records, and in the same report his disability is thus described by the surgeon: "Debility induced by improper and insufficient food while a prisoner in the hands of the rebels."

From the testimony of his neighbors, who are ascertained to be credible, it is proven that he was sound when he enlisted, entirely free from any of the diseases incurred while in service.

Sergt. Nathaniel Post testifies that while in Florence prison, about the 20th of February, 1865, he contracted diarrhea, liver, kidney, and lung disease and scurvy, which were caused by exposure and starvation, and resulted in general debility; that these facts are known to affiant, who saw claimant in the engagement at the Wilderness, Virginia, when he was in good health and capable of extraordinary endurance; that after his release from prison, on his way home on furlough, affiant again saw him when he was emaciated, broken down, and so weak that he feared he would not live to get home.

Drs. Brown and Wilcox testify to having treated him for the disabilities claimed and to his low condition. Recent medical examinations show that he is not able to perform manual labor; that his condition is not only nearly helpless, but pitiable.

There is a mass of convincing testimony in substantiation of his claim for increase, a careful examination of which convinces the committee that his pension is too low.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill to what extent the Pension Office can now increase this man's pension. He was pensioned at $4, I see, and then it was increased to $6. Now what is the greatest allowance the Pension Office can allow to a private soldier for total disability?

Mr. INGALLS. Seventy-two dollars.

Mr. LOGAN. That is from wounds.

Mr. INGALLS. When his condition is so helpless from wounds or disease that he requires the continual care and attendance of another person, not specific disability, but general disability, resulting from any cause.

Mr. SAWYER. That is only $50 now. When that law was passed all then on the roll were raised to $72. Now $50 is the highest.

Mr. INGALLS. Seventy-two dollars is the highest rate allowed for general disability by the general law.

Mr. SAWYER. But that general law only covered those who were on the list at $50 then.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is mistaken; we have a general statute providing that in case of total disability and personal helplessness requiring the continual care and assistance of another person the rate of pension shall be $72 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can it not be graded between $8 and $72?

Several SENATORS. No.

Mr. SAWYER. I know the committee thought this was one of the cases where the man ought to have $30. His health was broken down. He was ruined almost in rebel prisons. We thought $30 was little enough.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure the Pension Office is not allowed to rate up to $72. That is for a specific case described by law, a case of such absolute disability as to require the assistance of an attendant. Eight dollars is what is called the total disability for a private soldier. Of course there are some specific cases of wounds that go higher. The $72 is a specific class; but $72 is not a total from which the Department can rate at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is put at $30, and the Pension Office has refused to increase it even from $6 to $8.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator advance that as an argument why the Senate should not increase it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I am simply saying that it does seem that the Pension Office, in charge of a disabled soldier, and which has continuously been in charge of soldiers, with nearly the entire machinery of the office largely in the hands of soldiers, certainly ought, where it is a question of fact as to the degree of disability, to be willing to do justice to the soldiers, to the applicants for pensions, and not compel them to come to Congress with so many cases for relief.

Mr. INGALLS. When was this application rejected at the Pension Office?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was allowed a long time ago.

Mr. INGALLS. When was it rejected?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not been rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator to say that an application for an increase had been rejected at the Pension Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I suppose as a matter of course the man applied for it. I take it for granted, though the report does not say anything of the kind. He was pensioned at $4 and increased to $6 a month for disability. It does not say that he applied for an increase beyond that, but it is presumable that he did and that the office would certainly have given him a rating up to $8 per month. There is nothing here to show that he ever applied for it, but I presume he did.

Now, the point I make is that the Pension Office ought to do equal and exact justice to all worthy applicants for pension, and they should not resort to Congress unless in exceptional cases where under the law the Pension Office does not have the right to adjudicate equitably but must follow the letter of the law and construe it against them.

Mr. INGALLS. The Pension Office, so far as my observation goes, at this present time is apparently administered upon the theory that every disabled soldier who claims that he has a right to an increase of pension is felonious. I have a case in my mind now where a soldier totally blind, whose claim had been admitted under a previous administration of that office and his arrears adjudicated under the most abundant and explicit proof, had his claim suspended by the present Commissioner among the earliest of his official acts; and upon an appeal taken after the case had been argued before the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and again taken to the Secretary of the Interior against the continued interposition of objections on the part of the Commissioner of Pensions, so obvious was the justice of the claim that the Secretary finally declared that the original decision should stand, and the man received his pension, making I believe the largest aggregate amount of arrears that has been paid since 1879.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri that there is some defect in the present administration of pensions. It is not appropriate that hundreds of cases should be required to come to Congress, especially when the evidence is as clear and abundant and copious as it is in nine-tenths of the cases that come before the Senate for pensions after having been carefully examined by the members of the committee. But what are you going to do about it? Here is the Commissioner of Pensions, today himself a standing monument of the gratitude and liberality of a Republican Senate. The claim of John C. Black was before the Senate Committee on Pensions when I was its chairman, and we reported a bill putting him on the pension-list at the highest rate that is paid I believe to any soldier of the Republic, upon the ground that he was totally disabled, that his ability to earn a livelihood in his profession had been absolutely destroyed. His friend and advocate and sponsor here was Hon. David Davis, then a Senator from Illinois, and he assured the committee that John Charles Black was an absolute physical wreck, unable to obtain a subsistence for himself or his family in the practice of his profession, and we gave him $100 a month; and that man to-day in the enjoyment of $100 a month as a totally disabled pensioner gets $5,000 a year as Commissioner of Pensions and is able enough to interpose objections, frivolous, unjustifiable, contrary to the letter and spirit of the law, against thousands of men who are vastly more entitled to the sum that he receives than he is entitled to it himself. His actions to-day and his position to-day in this Government are a refutation of the facts upon which he received that pension; and if he were a man of honor, if he were entitled to the confidence of the people and the emoluments and dignities of the position he enjoys, he would decline to receive that pension. And I protest, sir, in the name of all the disabled soldiers of this Republic against the infamous obstacles that are interposed by that man against the allowance of pensions to which they are vastly better entitled than he is to the pension that he receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has gone out of his way and out of the record in this case to make a personal onslaught upon General Black, the Commissioner of Pensions, and he has undertaken to leave the false impression upon the public mind of this country that these complainants who are compelled to resort to Congress for relief are the claimants whose claims have been rejected by the present Commissioner of Pensions, which is not true.

Mr. INGALLS. Many of them have been.

Mr. COCKRELL. Most of them have not been and the record shows it, and the Senator knows it. I hold in my hand the record, and I say that the Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, has allowed more pensions during the first year of his administration than any Commissioner of Pensions ever has allowed. That is the record; and with that record staring the Senator in the face he makes that unjustifiable and I think unjust assault upon General Black.

Now let us look at the record.

Mr. INGALLS. What do you say about his enjoying a pension at $100 a month for total disability as a physical wreck?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator presented it to him, and he is estopped from criticising his own act.

Mr. INGALLS. Who is estopped?

Mr. COCKRELL. The distinguished Senator before me, the honorable Senator from Kansas, then chairman of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. The pension was allowed upon what was supposed to be reliable and satisfactory evidence, and the present condition of the Commissioner of Pensions is a satisfactory proof that he obtained the pension he enjoys under false allegations. It ought to be repealed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator, in discharge of the obvious duty he owes to this country, should introduce a bill for the repeal of that law.

Mr. INGALLS. It ought to be repealed. It is a shame that he is enjoying it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator ought to have the manliness to do it. But I have in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Pensions; it is official. Let us see how many pensions were allowed in different years of the administration of that office, and see whether General Black is subject to the charge which has so unjustly been made against him. I will begin with the year 1880. Nine thousand seven hundred and eighteen pension claims were allowed in that year; in 1881, 20,912 were allowed; in 1882, 22,615 were allowed; in 1883, 21,758 were allowed; in 1884, 27,117 were allowed; in 1885, 27,225 were allowed.

Where are the facts that justify the discrimination which the Senator from Kansas has charged upon General Black? It is not in the record.

Mr. INGALLS. I was talking about cases that had been rejected, not those allowed. Those which have been allowed by the present Commissioner of Pensions had all been prepared for adjudication by his predecessor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not by any means; and the Senator knows the contrary. That will not do. It is a mere subterfuge. If the pensions allowed by the present Commissioner were prepared by his predecessor, the pension claims rejected were also prepared by his predecessor. That is a fact the Senator must stare in the face. If the pensions allowed by the present Commissioner of Pensions were prepared by his predecessor, then the pensions rejected in that office were also prepared for rejection by his predecessor, and the responsibility rests there.

Now, I challenge the Senator to hunt up these cases that have been coming here to Congress for individual relief, and I say the record will show that nine out of ten of them originated under the administration of the predecessors of General Black in office.

No Commissioner of Pensions can give individual attention to each case; it is a physical impossibility; and if so many cases of injustice have been done as charged by the Senator from Kansas since the administration of General Black they have been done by the subordinates in the office, for it is impossible for him or any other Commissioner to give attention to all the cases. And who are the subordinates? They are gentlemen who were put in there under the preceding administration, and they are still there. Look at the board of appeals. There has been but one change made in it. Look at the paraphernalia in that office, and they are the same men who were in there under General Dudley; and it does not, with these facts before him, lie in the mouth of the Senator from Kansas to make this assault upon an individual who is not in a position to respond to him personally.

I believe—and I am sure the record will show it—that the Pension Office to-day under General Black will do as complete, as exact, and as full justice and equity and right and fair dealing to every worthy applicant for pension as has ever been done by that office since its creation, so far as General Black is concerned and so far as the responsible heads in that bureau who have been put there under the present administration of affairs are concerned.

It is not worthy of the Senator from Kansas to undertake to make the false impression upon the country that the hundreds and even thousands of individual pension claims have come here because of the action of the present Commissioner of Pensions. They have not come here because of any action of his; and even if the cases had been rejected under his administration, the responsible parties for their rejection would have been the men who were put in there before he went into office and who have been continued in place. It is the old régime, the old incumbents who pass upon these claims. As a matter of course General Black can not examine ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand individual pension cases during the year. It is a physical impossibility for anybody to do it. He must rely upon the examinations made in each division, which are reported to the different boards through which each case has to go; and then the final board of review remains unchanged. I believe only one change has been made in that large board.

Now, Mr. President, here is a case where, so far as the report shows, no application was made for an increase and where the increase could only have been made to $8 a month, as I understand from the Senator reporting the bill. If the Pension Office has no jurisdiction under the law to increase this claimant's pension beyond $8 a month, and he is justly entitled to more, then it is a fit case for Congress. If the Pension Office has a right to increase under existing law this man's pension to an amount equivalent to what he is entitled to, then it is not a fit case for Congress.

In the large number of pension claims, in the thousands and hundreds of thousands of claims presented to the Pension Office, there will necessarily be some that for technical reasons can not be allowed. There will be some where probably the rating under the general law can not be what it should be. In such cases, as a matter of course, there is but one relief and one mode of relief, and that is either by a general law of Congress providing relief in certain specified cases so as to cover it, or an individual relief bill. My experience is that the very poorest way of securing justice is by individual relief bills, and that every class of worthy, just, and meritorious cases should be provided for by a general law.

Take the case of desertions in the Army. The record shows probably over two hundred thousand soldiers marked deserters. They have repeatedly come to Congress asking that individual relief bills be passed in their favor. We passed, in 1882 I believe it was, a general bill relieving all that the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is chairman, believed were properly entitled to relief. That law was not construed as was anticipated by the War Department, and immediately another law was passed to remove the charge of desertion in certain cases. Under that law hundreds and possibly even thousands of soldiers who were unjustly charged with the offense of desertion have applied to have the record changed and corrected.

A large number of their bills have been presented since that time not coming within the terms and provisions of that law. At the present session of this Congress I had the honor of presenting a bill and the Committee on Military Affairs ordered it to be favorably reported, making provision for the removal of the charge of desertion standing against the records of many others who were deemed to be worthy of relief. That bill has passed both the Senate and the House and is now a law.

I think the better way would be in these pension cases to pass laws increasing the power and authority of the Commissioner of Pensions to pass upon classes of cases which do not now come within the terms and provisions of the general law. I think it is the worst possible mode of relief to pass individual bills.

Mr. President, I did not anticipate in asking some very interesting questions that I should draw on such a discussion as has been carried on upon this bill. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am in favor of the passage of this bill, and I do not intend to enter into the field of debate that has been very thoroughly plowed by the two gentlemen who have preceded me, the one from Kansas and the other from Missouri, except to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to one fact. I am not doing that for the purpose of criticising the Commissioner of Pensions, but for the purpose of showing how unjust have been the criticisms which have been heretofore made.

Speaking in a political sense, Commissioner Black charged his predecessor with favoritism because he had allowed a great many pensions in 1880, and yet I find from the statement of the Senator that Commissioner Black in one year allowed nearly three times as many as his predecessor, Commissioner Dudley, did, although he was charged with favoritism on account of the great number of pensions that were allowed.

I only call the attention of the Senate to that fact to show how unfair these things are that are sent broadcast before the world to improperly influence the minds of people in regard to the action of officials.

So far as General Black's pension is concerned, I have nothing to say about it, whether he is entitled to it or not. If he is entitled to it I hope he will retain it. I think he is a badly wounded man, and if he is entitled to a pension, no matter how large, I certainly would not reduce it one cent, so far as I am concerned; nor would I so act in reference to the pension of any man who had performed his duty honorably and well. As to how he obtained that pension, I have naught to say; but I do think where pensions are obtained through Congress, and persons think they are obtained on some improper evidence, about which I have nothing to say, it does not always come with the best grace to attack others who obtain pensions in the same way.

This man shows from the evidence, as I understand the report, that he was confined in prison for a long time, and we all know who have any experience—without reflecting upon anybody—that prison life is not calculated in the slightest degree to produce a healthy physique or healthfulness in the person, but is on the other hand calculated to destroy the health and constitution of men. We all know that no matter whether it is an army prison or state prison, or what it may be, confinement in prison is not conducive to good health, but is always calculated to destroy the system, constitution, and health of the individual. I have not the slightest doubt that this man's health was destroyed in prison, as he says, and the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions has not at any time concluded that he was in a condition that entitled him to receive a larger pension is no evidence whatever to my mind that the applicant ought not to receive it, for I do know, and I say it without criticising officials, that there are men who apply for pensions who ought to have them who do not receive them. Perhaps it is also true that men who ought not to have them do receive them. The great majority of the men who apply for pensions are men who are disabled not from wounds, but on account of disease they contracted in the service which has developed itself in after years.

I hope this pension bill will pass, for I believe that every man who was in a prison during the war—I do not care whether he was there two weeks or three weeks or two years—every man who was imprisoned and punished and suffered as prisoners did during the war, is entitled to a pension, and I would vote to give every one of them a pension to-day, and $30 is not too much for a man disabled in the manner in which this man's disability is described in the report; and for that reason I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it is impossible for me to allow the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas to go without notice on my part.

I was a member of the Committee on Pensions when the pension now so severely criticised was granted to General Black. The Senator from Kansas stated that Senator Davis, of Illinois, was the champion of that measure. To a certain extent that is true, for Judge Davis thought as I thought. I remember well the proceedings in the committee when we agreed to report that bill. I had intimate personal knowledge of General Black; I had known him many years; and I took a deeper interest in the case than anybody else here. I have known General Black since as a boy, at perhaps nineteen years of age, he broke away from college and went into the Army. His military services were especially brilliant.

His wounds were repeated and of the severest character. I saw General Black frequently during his most dreadful sufferings before this pension was granted, and I say to the Senate and in the hearing of the country that I did not conceive it possible for a human being to suffer as he did and live. He was wasted to a skeleton, blood-poison ravaged his entire system, and the bones of his arms were sawed out by the surgeon. I often left him never expecting again to see him alive; and when his pension bill came up here I had all the feeling that it was possible for me to have in behalf of a gallant, brilliant, promising, brave, suffering man, stricken down in defense of his country.

I hold myself responsible and am ready to answer for the justice and propriety of that pension anywhere and everywhere. It was not obtained under false pretenses. So far from it, no pretense made here could have equaled the dreadful reality of his sufferings; and although he has survived, as I did not expect him to do, nor did his most intimate friends, yet to-day he discharges his duties with open, running wounds. His shattered and splintered bones leave him not one moment's freedom from pain; he can sleep but in one position in his bed at night; and had he not been upheld by a spirit possessed by few men on this earth he would have sunk and died long ago from excessive and constant suffering. He is made of the material that constitutes heroes. If any gentleman here thinks $100 a month will pay for his present condition and what he has undergone, let him say so. I differ from him.

General Black at the time this pension was granted, and in fact for years afterward, had no more ability to earn a livelihood by his own exertions that a child. And even though his constitution has survived the terrible shock, yet his hair has whitened, and, for a young man of forty-five, he is prematurely aged. He has never since the reopening of his wounds been able to pursue his profession with that industry and endurance so absolutely necessary in that most laborious profession known among men, the practice of the law.

Sir, I worked earnestly, with my heart in "the effort," for General Black's pension. It has my approbation now. I remember that at the same session, I believe, the same committee reported a similar bill for General Shields. We put him at $100 a month. He had been wounded in two wars, but he was mixing in the affairs of the world, and he afterward served with us here in the Senate. The Senator from Kansas, who was chairman of the committee at that time, will remember these facts that I now recall to his recollection.

Whether General Black is a man of honor or not I will not discuss. Those who know him best will hear what the Senator from Kansas has said with pain, not because it will affect their opinion of the gallant soldier, the brave, true man, the upright officer, but they will hear with pain that a Senator uses his position to thus speak of a man who can not strike back in his own person.

As to General Black's discharge of his duties as Commissioner of Pensions, not one word need be said by me. The speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] settles that question.

Sir, I do not wish to drag the question of pensions into party politics. Neither the granting nor withholding of a pension is ever governed in my mind by such considerations. But when an attack is made more or less for political effect—I know not what other cause the Senator from Kansas had—I rejoice that such an answer has been made as came with such force and conclusiveness from the Senator from Missouri.

This much, Mr. President, I felt I ought to say.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to make an observation in response to the remarks make by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] appealed to me just now, and said it was his desire that the Senate should continue this bill for fifteen or twenty minutes longer.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to continue it half an hour to give the Senator from Kansas a chance to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. If there is no objection on the part of the Senate I am disposed to yield to that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will not call the regular order until it is demanded by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I shall demand the regular order at half past 2 or sooner if this bill is out of the way.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the present Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. John Charles Black, was placed upon the pension-roll by special act that was reported during my chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions upon the direct and positive allegation on his part and in his behalf by those who supported and promoted the bill that he was totally disabled, and that he was an absolute physical wreck.

The highest rate of pension paid to any soldier at that time, I think in 1876, for total disability was $50 a month, and Mr. Black was placed upon the roll at $100 a month because it was affirmed that he was so totally disabled by disease, and by gunshot wounds, and by other disabilities received in the service, that his capacity, intellectually and physically, was absolutely annihilated.

I remember the circumstances to which the Senator from Indiana has called attention. I do not stand here to disparage in any manner whatever the valor or the courage of Mr. John Charles Black, but I say that he received that pension and he enjoys that pension to-day because allegations were made which did not exist and which do not exist.

Long before Mr. John Charles Black was pensioned—I did not know it at the time—shortly after he came out of the war, after there had been resection and this surgical treatment had been gone through with, he was active in political and professional life. I am told that he was a candidate for Congress in 1866 or 1868, some time after the war closed. I am told that since that pension was allowed in 1876 he has been thrice a candidate for Congress in the district where he resides, that he has made the canvass in opposition to his antagonist, and he has been a candidate for governor active upon the stump, that he has conducted his professional avocation, that he has contended for the Senate of the United States against the Senator from Illinois who now sits before me [Mr. LOGAN], and I know of my own personal knowledge that during a considerable portion of that time he has been a manager upon the Board of Soldiers' Homes, and I am told from many quarters, from testimony which can not be questioned, that he is not and that he never has been totally disabled intellectually and physically.

Mr. VOORHEES. Nobody ever said that he was disabled intellectually.

Mr. INGALLS. It was on that specific allegation——

Mr. VOORHEES. I say it was not.

Mr. INGALLS. It was on that specific allegation, presented time and again——

Mr. VOORHEES. It never was.

Mr. INGALLS. That he received that pension of $100 a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. Never.

Mr. INGALLS. Why does the Senator say "never?"

Mr. VOORHEES. Never on any ground of intellectual disability.

Mr. INGALLS. When the highest rate that ever had been allowed before was $50 a month for total disability, the Senator now says that in 1876, without any specification of peculiar disability, we passed a bill to give him $100 a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. I said nothing of the kind. I said there was no charge of any intellectual breakdown.

Mr. INGALLS. Why, Mr. President, the Senator said on the floor within ten minutes of the time I now speak, that he was lying prostrate upon a bed of suffering and illness and pain, incapable of exertion, from which neither the Senator from Indiana nor any of his friends supposed he would ever arise.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now I repeat that; but does it follow that he was intellectually a wreck? That is the statement of the Senator.

Mr. INGALLS. The allegation was that he could not obtain a livelihood by the practice of his profession.

Mr. VOORHEES. Could he on his back, torn with wounds, even if his mind was as bright as Blackstone's? Could he?

Mr. INGALLS. I am not here to answer a catechism of the Senator from Indiana about whether a man can practice law on his back or not. That does not concern the controversy.

I repeat, the allegation was at the time when that pension was granted that he was so physically and intellectually disabled that he could not acquire a livelihood by the practice of his profession. Nobody knows it better than the Senator from Indiana, because he stood here on the floor and in committee-room—and I honor him for it—and declared that this man's capacity for usefulness was so impaired that it was necessary that he should be pensioned to save him and his family from mendicancy and from being cast upon the charity of the world.

Well, Mr. President, that alone would not have sufficed to have induced me to protest against this man's pension. No pension, however large, can be compensation for such injuries as John Charles Black received. No man would go through the havoc of war and the battle's confusion, no man would be torn and rent by shot and shell as he was for $100 a month. But what I protest against is that he, enjoying this pension obtained upon those pretexts, signalizes his advent into the place he now holds by protesting against the payment of smaller pensions to men who were as greatly disabled as he was, and that he today stands advising and co-operating with the President of the United States in vetoing little measures of relief at $8 a month to private pensioners who could not secure sufficient evidence to establish their claims before the Pension Office. I protest against his enjoying that pension of $100 a month when he has been lawyer, politician, Commissioner of Pensions, for years and years since it was granted to him, no more physically disabled, no more intellectually disabled than the Senator from Indiana is, enjoying that pension upon pretensions that do not exist and at the same time using the powers of his great office to prevent the payment of pensions which had been lawfully and properly granted.

Here was a citizen of my own State, Robinson, a man who for nineteen years never had seen the light of the sun nor the face of wife or child, whose claim had been examined and re-examined and fought and contested for years, and was finally allowed by the predecessor of General John Charles Black, a thousand times worse disabled than he is because he was doomed to perpetual blindness and isolation, and one of the first acts that Mr. John Charles Black did after he came into that office was to direct the payment of that pension to be suspended. All that this poor wreck, incarcerated in perpetual darkness, could receive was $72 a month, $28 less than Mr. Black receives; and he can write his name with that disabled hand. And yet although it had been allowed after protracted adjudication he ordered it suspended by telegraph; and since March, 1885, that poor disabled wreck has been endeavoring to secure justice before the Pension Office, and so firmly established was his claim upon right and justice that, although he has interposed his objections at every stage before the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior, at last Secretary Lamar directed it to be paid in spite of the protest of Mr. John Charles Black.

I protest, sir, in the name of all the disabled soldiers of this Republic against that impostor—that impostor; I repeat it with full knowledge of what the phrase means—that impostor, who is receiving a pension to which he is not entitled by virtue of law or by virtue of any disabilities that he is subjected to, and who has used his official position ever since he has been in it to slander and revile his predecessor, who with active speech has hurled out broadcast upon the administration of his predecessor the declaration that the pension system had been used as a political engine; that the department as it had existed for years under Republican administration was a partisan machine; and that in order to obtain the allowance of pensions it was necessary to give in adhesion to a particular political organization.

Sir, in the name of the thousands of men yet unpensioned I protest against the aspersions which have been cast by this man upon his predecessor, upon men of an opposing political faith, who were willing to do him justice, as the Senator from Indiana well knows. For no man was more active or enthusiastic in the effort that led to the pensioning of Mr. John Charles Black than I was. I hailed the opportunity with joy of doing justice to a disabled veteran of the Republic, little thinking that in the years to come, enjoying that pension to which he was not entitled, he would use the power of that great office for the purpose of overthrowing the system of which he is himself one of the most conspicuous beneficiaries.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it is well known that the Senator from Kansas is only at his best when he is extravagant and confined by no close or accurate lines. He felt compelled to insist that in order for a man to be disabled from the practice of law his intellectual faculties must be impaired. There never was a statement of such impairment made in regard to General Black by me or anybody else, and the papers on file in the Senate will show that fact.

The Senator continuously said that the pension was granted in 1876. It is not a matter of great importance, except to show the general inaccuracy of his statements. It was granted in 1878.

I was not a member of the Senate in 1876. I came here in 1877; and the report of the committee which I hold in my hand, and which the Senator concurred in, was made by Mr. Bailey, then a Senator from Tennessee, on the 20th of May, 1878.

All the statements contained in this report were established by the proof, and the Senator himself concurred in them. He says now that those statements were false, or at least that the pension was obtained by false pretenses. If those statements were true, however, then the pension was not obtained by pretenses that were false.

Sir, if the Senator from Kansas, suddenly spurred to this outburst of animosity and the use of epithets toward General Black, desires to test the sense of the Senate and the country, let him introduce a bill to repeal General Black's pension.

I am going to read at least a portion of the report in my hand, and we will see what we acted on in 1878, and also ascertain what General Black asked for, and how much he is responsible for what we did. He never asked for a pension of a hundred dollars a month, as this report will disclose. The report says:

That at the outbreak of the late civil war Mr. Black, just entering upon manhood, and having recently completed a collegiate course, was engaged in the study of the law; but upon the call of the President he enlisted as a private in Company I, Eleventh Indiana Zouaves, a regiment mustered into service for three months. Upon the expiration of this service he enlisted in the Thirty-seventh Illinois Infantry for three years, and was elected and commissioned major of the regiment. In 1862 he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and afterward to the rank of colonel. In 1864 Colonel Black and his men re-enlisted for the veteran service. From November, 1864, until February, 1865, he commanded the Fourth Brigade, Reserve Corps, Military Division of the Mississippi; and in March, 1865, while in active service, was made brigadier-general by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the field, and was mustered out of the service in August, 1865.

He did not quit as long as there was a flag flying in the field.

In March, 1862, at the battle of Pea Ridge—

Which involved the safety of Kansas—

In March, 1862, at the battle of Pea Ridge, Lieut. Col. Black was shot in the right forearm, the bullet passing between the bones about 3 inches below the ulna, and injuring the elbow joint.

In December, 1862, at the battle of Prairie Grove, he was shot in the left upper arm. The bone being shattered, resection became necessary, and from that time the arm has been permanently disabled. The wound inflicted at Pea Ridge apparently healed, but in December following reopened, and caused great suffering.

After he left the military service General Black resumed his professional studies, was soon admitted to the bar, and almost immediately upon his admission entered upon a large and lucrative practice, which he continued to enjoy until the year 1874—

Mark this. He did practice law successfully up to 1874—

when, in consequence of the great suffering caused by the wound in his right arm, his health became much impaired, his person emaciated, and he was constrained to abandon his profession—

An old wound breaking out afresh, blood-poisoning his whole system, the bones decaying and splintering and falling out!

From the year 1874—

Continues the report—

until this day he has been an invalid.

That I say is true upon the personal knowledge which I had at that time. The distance is but 50 miles between General Black's home and mine. He lives at Danville, Ill., and I live at Terre Haute, Ind. I have practiced law at his courts from my earliest manhood, and I know him and all his people. Consequently during his dreadful illness, when these old wounds broke out again upon him, I saw him repeatedly, and when I say that he was the merest physical wreck I ever saw to live I state only the truth. I repeat what I said awhile ago, that I witnessed suffering on his part that I did not believe the human frame could endure without dissolution, and he was a physical wreck when the bill passed Congress and became a law.

The wound in his arm—

Continues the report—

has caused the most intense suffering, and in 1876, in order to save life, the elbow-joint was resected—

Which means taken out; the elbow-joint was taken out—

He is now a physical wreck, maimed and diseased, incapable of any effort, and much of the time confined to his bed.

That was true at that time, and in some respects it is true now. He knows not one moment's freedom from physical pain. His open, running wounds have to be dressed now every day by an attending physician. That is General Black's condition, and if the Senator from Kansas feels any pride in assaulting, with terms such as he has used, a man who bared his breast, and was shattered as he was, and who suffered as he has done, let him enjoy it. I would not for any consideration have those words upon my tongue toward any man who had the honorable life and record of General Black. The report continues:

From August, 1865, until 1877, General Black was paid a pension of $30 per month, based upon the injury to his left arm. In 1877 this was increased to $50 per month because of the loss of the use of the other arm. He now asks that the right to $50 per month be recognized from August, 1865.

It was a question of arrears and not increase. He did not ask for the increase. I remember well a consultation with Judge Davis, and honored be his name ever by me whenever I utter it, and I hope the blessings of health and happiness will be his for long years to come! He had known General Black from his boyhood. I consulted with him as to what was best for the general. I did not write or ask General Black on the subject, nor did Judge Davis. We agreed that if we could get a pension for him at $100 a month without arrears it would be better in the long run than $50 with arrears, and it was upon our agreement and determination, and not upon General Black's request, that he was placed on the rolls at the rate he draws. The report continues:

The committee is convinced that the claim is well founded.

A strong, healthy man, possessing fine talents and great abilities, who would have gathered fame and wealth, has been stricken in his country's service. He asks the country he served so well to give bread to himself and opportunity to educate his children.

The committee, however, respectfully submit that instead of granting arrears of pension, Congress should recognize the distinguished claims of General Black and to grant him a pension of $100 per month, and therefore they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. President, this is neither the time nor the place to deal with a personal assault on General Black made in the terms used by the Senator from Kansas. I regret them. I have a high admiration for the brilliant gifts of the Senator. He has been a faithful friend of the pensioned soldiers. I would do him entire justice and no injustice, and in that respect I will differ from him in his treatment of General Black. He has been totally and absolutely unjust; he has taken advice from his resentment at what he conceived to be a wrong to his blind soldier in Kansas. I sympathize with his earnest advocacy of such a claim; but it too brings its compensation.

When General Black came into office and found a claim which carried with it over $10,000 of arrearages, the largest arrearages ever paid, he simply had the care and prudence to suspend it for an examination. He a soldier of the Republic, maimed himself, marred by shot and shell, suspended that claim to have it examined into; and that resulted in a confederate soldier now at the head of the Interior Department allowing the claim. The Senator from Kansas, while denouncing the Commissioner of Pensions, forgot to express his grateful appreciation of the patriotic and liberal action of the late Senator from Mississippi now Secretary of the Interior. I do not think such a spectacle as that is valueless. I do not think such an instance in our history will do any harm to the fraternal relations which ought to exist between the sections of this country.

I have here General Black's original memorial, and I am almost tempted to have it read. I do not know that I should do so at this time. Upon the suggestion, however, of my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] I will send it to the clerks' desk and have it read.

Before reading, I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the facts elicited in the closing remarks of the Senator from Kansas. It is true that General Black stated in his report that the Pension Bureau had been used for political purposes. It is true there is now an investigation on that subject. I do not believe it fair to either side of that question for the Senator from Kansas to thrust it into this debate. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I shall express no opinion upon that subject now. The time will come when I shall do so. It will be when I have read the evidence, when I have examined what has been proved, and then I shall stand by the proof as I see it.

This prejudgment of the Senator from Kansas will not affect his object. It will not prejudice the Commissioner of Pensions in the public mind. He is mistaken in supposing that he can take judgment against this meritorious officer by default before the evidence is closed, before it has been printed, and before people have seen or read it. I repeat, when the time comes we shall all look at it, and we shall all take our part in such discussion as it may elicit, and we shall take each of us the proper responsibility for our conduct. I ask for the reading of the paper which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, Washington City, D. C.:

The application of John Charles Black, of Champaign city, State of Illinois, respectfully shows unto your honorable bodies:

That on April 19, 1861, he enlisted as a private soldier in Montgomery Guards of Crawfordsville, Ind., afterward known as Company I, Eleventh Indiana Zouaves.

That he was appointed sergeant-major of said regiment upon its formation, and served as such until its muster-out at the expiration of what was known as the three months' service.

That immediately thereafter he engaged in raising a company of volunteers for the three years' service, which company was afterward mustered into service as Company K, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

That he was elected and commissioned major of said regiment upon its organization, and served as such until 1862, when he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of said regiment, holding the latter position until he was commissioned colonel of said regiment.

That in January, 1864, said regiment re-enlisted for the veteran service, your memorialist continuing in service.

That from November, 1864, to February, 1865, your memorialist commanded the Fourth Brigade, Reserve Corps, Military Division of Mississippi.

That while in active service he was commissioned brigadier-general by brevet, March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on Blakeley Batteries.

Your memorialist was honorably discharged, upon resignation tendered August 15, 1865.

That on December 7, 1862, at the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., while lieutenant-colonel commanding his regiment, your memorialist was wounded by a bullet wound in the left upper arm by which about 2½ inches of the bone was shattered and carried away, necessitating resection of the bone. As the result of this wound and the operation the left arm was shortened and shrunken so as to be permanently disabled for manual or other labor of any kind.

That on March 7, 1862, at the battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, your memorialist was wounded by a bullet wound in the right forearm 3 inches below the elbow, the ball passing between the bones, striking and injuring the ulna and injuring the elbow. This wound healed, but reopened in December, 1862, and then healed over again. That during all the time from the reception of said wound until the operations hereinafter mentioned said arm commenced to discharge near the old wound and continued so to do until December 6, 1876, when it was opened by Dr. Edmund Andrews, a noted surgeon, at Chicago, Ill.

It was then found that the discharge was from the elbow-joint, the bones of which were found diseased, and were "pared" or "scraped" in the hope that this would afford relief. But a high degree of inflammation supervened, and on February 26, 1877, the same eminent surgeon, Dr. Andrews, performed a second operation, opening the arm and removing the elbow-joint. That as a result of this wound and these operations there is now permanent total disability of the right, as there was before and still is of the left arm. That these results are attributable to said wounds received in the service, and to no other causes, your memorialist being otherwise of robust and vigorous health, though his general health is now greatly and perhaps permanently impaired by reason of the matters above detailed.

Prior to June, 1874, your memorialist was engaged in the practice of the law at Champaign, Ill., and had a large and lucrative business, consisting largely of railroad and insurance cases, but in June, 1874, your memorialist was taken sick, such sickness being the result, as he is advised by his physicians and is assured by his own feelings and judgment, of his wounds alone.

From that date to the present he has been almost constantly an invalid, being much of the time confined to his bed, and by reason of this prolonged sickness his business has been entirely broken up and utterly destroyed and lost to him.

It will of necessity be a long time before he can possibly resume business, and even if his health should ever be so far restored (which he now hopes for) as to enable him to engage again in the practice of his profession his ability to pursue his life avocation is permanently impaired by reason of the disabilty of both arms, particularly of his right hand and arm, incapacitating him from writing and rendering the employment permanently of an amanuensis absolutely necessary.

Your memorialist further says that since about August, 1865, he has received a pension of $30 per month, based upon the injury to his left arm; that this amount proving entirely inadequate he applied for an increase, basing his claim upon the second wound, which disabled his right arm; and that upon said application his pension was increased to $50 per month, commencing July 17, 1877.

That he applied for and is justly entitled to receive said increase from the date of his original pension, August, 1865, and that he was only prevented obtaining the same by reason of a slight informality in his original application, namely, of his failure to mention the disability of his right arm. That had such injury been referred to in his original application for pension the increase would have dated back to August, 1865, as he is informed and believes.

Your memorialist therefore prays the passage of a special act directing that he be allowed and paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month from the date of his original pension, August, 1865, to the date of the commencement of said increase, less what has already been paid him.

All of which your memorialist respectfully submits, and prays the relief sought.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB, in section 9, line 5, to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read:

Provided, That the court of bankruptcy shall in any case where the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts is concurrent direct that the suit shall be brought in the State court.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is going to address the Senate. Before he proceeds with his general remarks I should like to go back and suggest to him an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Colorado yesterday made a suggestion in regard to section 8, which I take some blame to myself for not having seen before he made it. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to go back to that section for a moment.

The bill as originally drawn by Judge Lowell did not contain a provision for the supreme courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories, and the bill was changed so as to include and extend the bankruptcy jurisdiction to them. Section 8 should have been modified to conform to that change. That was not done, and I now propose an amendment to which I called the attention of the Senator from Colorado in private. I propose to strike out of the second line of section 8 the word "circuit," and then to strike out in the sixth line "two of," and also the word "circuit" in the same line; so as to read:

That the final judgment, decree, or order of the court having jurisdiction, &c., shall not be reviewed by the Supreme Court excepting upon a certificate of division of opinion between the judges of said court.

And then to make it clear, to cover the point of the Senator from Colorado, I propose to add:

The provisions of this section shall apply to the supreme courts of the District of Columbia and of the Territories.

Mr. TELLER. That will do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to the consideration of section 8, and proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 8, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "circuit," and in line 6 of the same section to strike out the words "two of" and the word "circuit;" so as to read:

That the final judgment, decree, or order of the court having jurisdiction in all matters, questions, and controversies properly arising in the courts of bankruptcy as such, in whatever mode they may be tried, shall not be reviewed by the supreme court excepting upon a certificate of division of opinion between the judges of said court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now I propose to add to the section the language which I read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 8:

The provisions of this section shall apply to the supreme courts of the District of Columbia and of the Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In the ninth section I propose with the leave of the Senate to assent to the amendment moved by the Senator from Kansas, substituting "shall" for "may," and I propose hereafter when that Senator is present (I shall not undertake to make the motion now, as I see he is not in his seat) to add to the section some language like this:

Unless in the judgment of said court the interests of the estate will be materially injured thereby.

Or some equivalent phrase. There may be cases where a State court will not be held for a year or two years, where the United States court would be held the next week, and great delay would be occasioned in bringing suit. I propose, however, to agree to make it mandatory upon the bankruptcy court to resort to the State jurisdiction unless in the extreme nature of the case it should go to the United States court; but I shall, as I said, reserve that matter until the Senator who moved the amendment is in his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to have the amendment of the Senator from Kansas acted upon at this time?

Mr. HOAR. I think it had better be reserved.

Mr. TELLER. I did not exactly understand what the Senator proposed.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas yesterday——

Mr. TELLER. What was the last proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I propose to assent to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas in the fifth line of the ninth section, striking out "may" and inserting "shall," but to add to the section at the end "except in cases where in the judgment of said court the interests of the estate would be materially injured thereby," or some equivalent phrase, making it the general rule to prefer the State courts except in extreme cases, where, as I said just now, a State court would not be held for two or three years and the United States court would be held in the next month, and in that case the United States court would be preferred.

Mr. TELLER. I had intended to suggest something in reference to the pending amendment, which of course I shall omit now.

The bill is, as was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] yesterday, a very important bill, and one which I do not think ought to be passed through the Senate as a mere matter of form, because it came from a responsible committee or because it is supposed that it was draughted by a very able and intelligent judge.

The bill is very broad and comprehensive. It brings within its terms nearly all classes of people except the agriculturist, and perhaps the lawyer and the doctor. Every man who is connected with trade or commerce in any shape or manner is brought within the provisions of the bill and is entitled to all the benefits of the bill, if any there are in it, and is subject to all the pains and penalties, which in my judgment very much outweigh the so-called benefits.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the pending bill is more comprehensive than any other measure which has been passed on the subject of bankruptcy. It provides that—

The word "trader" shall include all merchants, all who make it their business or a part of their business to buy or sell lands, goods, chattels, bills, bonds, notes, stocks, or shares, manufacturers, warehousemen, bankers, brokers, builders, contractors, shipwrights, publishers, innkeepers, livery-stable keepers, and all artisans who buy the materials for their business on credit.

That is broad enough to take in nearly everybody in the community, as I said, except agriculturists. They are excepted, and they are practically all who are excepted. Why are they excepted? If the bill is of such a valuable character, a man who incurs debts in working a farm ought to be protected and ought to have the opportunity given to him to get rid of his incumbrance just as much as the man who is in trade.

The bill was not framed and is not intended for the people who are mentioned in that first section of the bill. I have not any doubt but what the Senator from Massachusetts has all the sympathies he expressed yesterday for the class of people who are unfortunate enough to get into debt, who he says go dragging the ever-lengthening chain but are never able to get rid of the incumbrance, and are always prevented from making a living for wives and children, always prevented from laying up something for old age. I have no doubt the honorable Senator has the sympathy that he expressed for that class of people, but I wish to repeat that from that class of people there has come no demand, no request for this kind of legislation. I have not had access to the committee, but I venture the assertion that the committee have not a petition from any man in trade of the character that is included by the word "trader" in the first section. Of course there are men in trade who are interested in this bill. There are those in the great cities of New York, Chicago, Saint Louis, Boston, and other moneyed and great commercial centers who are interested in its passage. They are not the men who are afraid that they will be dragging the lengthening chain. It is not that class of men who have made the chambers of commerce ring with their denunciations of Congress for failure to pass this bill last year or the year before, or who thundered denunciations against Congress a few years ago because it repealed the act of 1867.

The men who are included in the first section from which I have read, who are expected to be reached by the bill, are not to be reached with a kind and soft hand. They are not to be reached for the purpose of putting them upon their feet, lifting them out of their misfortune, and enabling them to begin life again. That is not the purpose of the bill; but men come from the great commercial centers of the country, and it is a cry that the National Government shall stand up for them and enable them to collect their debts. It is just as well to meet these questions promptly and frankly and fully, and to recognize the fact that the demand of which the Senator spoke yesterday is a demand made for that class of people through the public press, through the chambers of commerce, through the boards of trade, and possibly in a few instances through legislative bodies.

I venture to say that if the Senate will strike out the involuntary clause, there will be no further interest expressed in the measure by those who have sent their agents here to impress upon Congress the necessity for the passage of this bill. The boards of trade and the chambers of commerce will have no further interest in the proceedings as to this bill the moment it is confined to those merciful provisions of which the Senator spoke yesterday.

A bankruptcy bill intended for that purpose might address itself to the humane and sympathetic interest of every man. A strong appeal can be made, I know, in behalf of men who have been unfortunate. I remember that years ago, before the bankruptcy act of 1867 was enacted, Mr. Horace Greeley, a noted and distinguished philanthropic gentleman, kept his paper full of appeals to Congress to intervene in the interest of the class of men mentioned by the Senator yesterday. Finally Congress did intervene, and the result was the act of 1867, which went into effect immediately thereafter, and all through the country every branch of industry and commerce felt its blighting hand. Finally, when it was repealed, I do not know how it was in the other House, but in this body I venture to say there were not over half a dozen negative votes when the act was passed in this Chamber repealing the law of 1867.

Is this proposed act any better? The honorable Senators who favor the bill say that it is better. It may be better in detail, but there is no difference in principle between this bill and the act of 1867. Every wrong that that act perpetrated or enabled any man to perpetrate can be perpetrated under this bill; nay, more wrong will be perpetrated under it. It is intended that it should be so by the men who are clamoring for its passage.

The voluntary clause of the act of 1867 was seized upon by the dishonest men of the country to get rid of the payment of their just and honest debts, keeping as we all know thousands of dollars' worth of their property either in their own hands or in the hands of others so that they could turn up, after they were discharged, with a competency. The involuntary branch of the act was seized upon by the creditor to force the debtor into bankruptcy and so compel him to pay.

The honorable Senator, asserting first that this bill was in the interest of the poor people, in the interest of the small trader, turned around and told us before he got through, practically, that it is in the interest of State street and Wall street. He illustrated that by saying that in State street and Wall street money can be had for 2, 2½, and 3 per cent., and out West it can not be had for less than 12 per cent., and even more. He says that those people are not willing to trust the people in the West for fear they would lose their money, and therefore they come here and ask to have the strong hand of the General Government to compel payment when they have loaned their money, that they may use Federal interference to compel their debtors to keep their engagements to the very letter. They have the State courts; they have all the machinery that is given to the citizens of the State where they make their loans or where they sell their goods, but that is not sufficient; they want to be beyond State power and beyond State local influence.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask my honorable friend, at some convenient time to him, to explain to me a little more in detail the point he is making or has made?

Mr. TELLER. I shall make my speech, and if the Senator does not understand it it will be probably my fault; but I shall not attempt to explain it and bring it exactly to his comprehension, I think. I am objecting to the bill; I am objecting to it upon the principle that it is for the express purpose of enabling the creditor class to seize upon the debtor class unfairly and improperly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like very much to understand how, if the Senator is willing to state it at some time in the course of his speech. I have undertaken to study the bill, and I had supposed that there was nothing which could be done to a debtor under the bill which could not be done now. The purpose of the bill is, as I understand it, to secure to the debtor all the State exemptions. You can not touch or take with this bill any right of property that you can not take from the debtor under the law of the State.

The involuntary part of the bill does two things. First, it does what the State law can not do under the Constitution; it discharges the debtor for the future of every claim of every creditor under the sun unless he has committed a fraud. Second, it says that the property which the law now authorizes him to be stripped of by his creditors, only that and nothing more, leaving it for the State to decide what that exemption shall be, instead of all going to one creditor shall be divided equally among the whole. Is there anything else in the bill which the Senator has found which puts the debtor in the power of the creditor; and if there is, will the Senator point it out?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I shall proceed in my own way to discuss the bill. Nobody but the Senator from Massachusetts would expect that a Senator would allow him to interject his views into that Senator's remarks in this way. I do not object to it. It simply shows that the Senator does not know what is in the bill that he has presented.

This bill has not been originated in this body, or by any of its committees; the bill was originated in the city of Boston. It was originated by the men who want to put their grip upon the debtors of the West and the South, the men who complain that they can not get the last pound of flesh and every particle which belongs to them. The bill came here, but it has not been studied by the Senate, it has not been studied by the committee, it has not been studied by the Senator himself, for he has shown already in the six pages of the bill which we have passed over his ignorance of the bill and of its provisions. I have studied the bill; I think I know as much about it as he does, and it is not a question new to me any more than it is to him. I have dealt with these subjects myself. I was here when the debate took place on the repeal of the last infamous act which was denominated a bankruptcy act, and this is no better.

I shall be able to show to my satisfaction, at least I can satisfy my mind, that the bill is not in the interest of any class except the class who demand the most and give the least. It will not do in this body or before the country for the Senator and his friends and the friends of the bill to assume that it is in the interest of the unfortunate and distressed, for that is not true. The bill never originated with men whose hearts are in sympathy with the down-trodden and unfortunate. It originated with the men who get what they can, and keep what they get, and who are perfectly oblivious as to how they get it so that they only get it.

I was speaking of the involuntary part of this bill. The honorable Senator tells me that it reserves to the debtor everything that the State reserves by way of the exceptions to execution. Of course it does. Even these avaricious and grasping creditors would hardly think of overriding State laws to that extent. They would concede, whatever might be the power of the General Government, a proper respect for the State with reference to those beneficent and benevolent laws which give to a man who is unfortunate wherewith he may educate his children and keep his wife from the pauper's home. It does that; but that is no merit, that is no mercy; that is justice and nothing more.

But the bill puts in the hand of every man who owns $500 of credit the right to ruin every man who falls within its provisions. Does the Senator undertake to tell me that it contains nothing but what is in the State laws? Then why are you not satisfied with the State laws and State remedies? It is because the State is merciful, and because the State does not allow its citizens thus to be handled, that these men have appealed to Congress for the passage of this bill.

It ought to be denominated a bill to confiscate the property of the unfortunate. A man may be worth $1,000,000, and if misfortune overtakes him so that he can not meet his note of $500 in thirty days any one holding it can put him in bankruptcy. Any man having a claim against him, disputed and doubted (for this does not apply to commercial paper as the old law did, but applies to book accounts as well), can put him into bankruptcy, can go before the court and allege that he has failed to make his payment within the provisions of the bill and seize upon his estate and destroy his credit.

There never was a bill instituted and brought before a legislative body more potent for evil, more potent for injustice, in my judgment, than this bill; and yet the Senator from Massachusetts says he hopes I shall be able to show somewhere some objection to the bill that is worthy of the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. When did I say that?

Mr. TELLER. Practically that is what you said.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, "practically!"

Mr. TELLER. It is possible under this bill to do evil. The honorable Senator can not escape by saying that it will not be done. It has been done. The country is full of the history of men driven into bankruptcy whose estates were solvent at the day the bankruptcy proceedings were begun. I can take the most prosperous merchant in this country and proceed against him in bankruptcy and ruin his credit under the bill. He may be solvent and able to pay; but if he owes debts and I go and proceed against him on a $500 claim all his creditors will be alarmed and all his creditors will come in and make claims against him, and the men who would otherwise have extended to him time to make payment, who would have continued to sell him goods with which to fill up his store, will decline so to do. Thus the bill puts it in the hands of a grasping, avaricious creditor with a small bill to destroy the commerce of the country.

It is the business of the honorable Senator to come here and show omething in favor of the bill. Where is the crying necessity for the bill? Who has been heard demanding the passage of the bill outside the great centers I have mentioned? What have the people of the great central portion of the country, what have the people of the South and of the West said with reference to this bill? Have they demanded it? Have they suggested it? Not at all. Every demand has come from the section and the places I have mentioned, and those people have come here for the purpose of enabling them to get a stronger grip upon the men who are practically now in many portions of the country reduced to a condition of almost absolute serfdom.

The honorable Senator said yesterday that the people of the West could not borrow the money they would like to loan, and therefore the bill was in their interest in the new sections where society is not stable and where property has not accumulated. Then let him wait until those people, who are quite as intelligent, who understand perfectly their interests and their wants as do the people in his State or any other—let him wait until they, either through their Representatives or in some other manner, signify a wish for this kind of legislation.

Let us come down to the practical application of the bill. I said we knew what occurred under the old law. I venture to say that there is not a man who was engaged in the practice of law in the United States who did not have some such case as I notice, men solvent, able to pay their debts and willing to pay their debts, who were made paupers by the old law; and so odious did it become that there was a clamor from every portion of the country for its repeal. Legislative body after legislative body addressed the Senate and the House of Representatives in the interest of its repeal. Nobody that I know of has yet demanded its re-enactment except the persons of whom I have already spoken. If it were so beneficent and benevolent and had such a good influence why is it that the people tired of it and why is it that they demanded its repeal?

The honorable Senator from Kansas said yesterday that if there was anything which added to the disaster of the country, which brought the people low financially, it was the bankruptcy law. Let me say here as a matter of history known to every man here who has given the slightest attention to the subject, that the panic of 1873 was precipitated and brought about by the bankruptcy act of 1867. I am not without authority. It is not an assertion which I have made simply upon an inference that I draw. It can be proved by the records in the city of Philadelphia that the great house of Jay Cooke & Co., perfectly solvent the day that bankruptcy proceedings were brought against them, more than solvent, rich, rich to a degree that we in the West regard as remarkably rich, was brought down to utter ruin by the application of a single creditor to put them in bankruptcy, who thus destroyed their credit and prevented them from carrying on the enterprises in which they were engaged. With it came a lack of confidence in the community at large everywhere, and disasters that it took us five years at least to recover from, if we shall ever recover therefrom.

The other measure was demanded in the same interest that this is demanded, and was passed under the cry that it would benefit the poor, as it is now proposed that this bill shall be passed.

The great mass of business in the United States is done upon credit. Credit depends upon the confidence of the people. Impair that confidence and the credit is gone. Nobody supposes that you can do the business of this country upon the money that is in existence. Even if none of it were locked up in the banks and in the Treasury, if it were all out among the people, you could not do the business of the country with it. It must be done, and is done, and will be done upon credit. This is a bill to destroy the credit of the merchant everywhere.

In times of financial depression there are very few men who are solvent who do not find themselves embarrassed with debts. There are very few men but find themselves compelled to go to bank and renew their notes. There are very few men but who find themselves in a condition in which they do not occasionally want to put upon their real estate a mortgage. When you have destroyed public confidence in his ability to pay, you have destroyed the man. Take, for instance, a man who is selling goods in a Western town. He is worth perhaps $100,000. His property consists of the goods upon his shelves and in the credits that he has given to his neighbors. Distress of some kind prevails financially. He is unable to collect the debts as fast as his Eastern creditors would like. He finds his neighbor's wheat crop has failed, or his corn crop has failed, or the low price of corn and cattle, or it may be of cotton, has made it impossible for the neighbor to whom he has sold goods upon credit to respond. So he says to his Eastern creditors, "I am solvent; wait until my people can pay, and I will pay you." Ninety-nine men out of the hundred who have given him credit respond and say, "Certainly; you shall have time to pay." The hundredth man, a Shylock, says, "No; I have got your note for $500; pay it." The debtor says, "I can not pay you to-day; wait a little." The creditor prefers his petition for bankruptcy, and what becomes of the debtor? He may be able to pay off the note to-morrow, but the ninety-nine men who had agreed to extend his time say, "We can not wait; this man is in a worse condition than we supposed; we may lose our debts;" and they enter upon the proceeding. Thus it goes, and thus by this bill you put it in the power of one man out of a hundred to ruin a thrifty, prosperous merchant.

Yet the honorable Senator wants me to spend time in detailing some of the objections which are really objections to the bill. He had better spend some time in showing its advantages. He had better spend some time in showing the advantage to commerce and the advantage to trade that there is in arming any man in the community with that power against the interests and the commerce of the nation.

In my judgment the bill is defective in details, as well as defective in principle. It is defective in the great principle that it puts in the power, as I said before, of one man, or two men, or three men out of hundreds and thousands, to compel the debtor to come to their terms; and if he fails so to do to put him in bankruptcy without regard to his condition. It is not to put men in bankruptcy who are bankrupt; it is to put every man in bankruptcy who does not pay his note within thirty days after it is due. It is to put in bankruptcy every man who borrows of his neighbor and gives a mortgage upon his property, if somebody will go and assert that it was put there for the purpose of giving that neighbor a fraudulent preference over other creditors.

I know enough of human nature, and so does every man on this floor, to know that it is practically impossible for a person to put a mortgage of a large amount upon his real estate that some man will not attack it, truthfully or not, however it may result in the end, although it may be shown that this was but a tithe of what he was worth, although it may be shown that it was for the purpose of carrying on the business in which he was engaged, and that it was not a fraudulent incumbrance, but a praiseworthy and honest one. The very fact that the petition has been filed is his ruin, and he will never be able to right himself in public estimation, his credit is gone and his ability to pay destroyed.

What I have said against the bill I have said against its general principles. I am opposed, and I believe the people of the United States are opposed, to any bankruptcy bill that puts it in the hands of a few grasping, hard-hearted creditors to ruin the great mass of men who are engaged in business in this country. With what industry have all classes been brought within the provisions of this bill, including the mechanic who may buy the boards that he is going to fashion into furniture, or the material out of which he is going to make articles for sale! Everything is brought within the provisions of the bill. In other words, every man who incurs a debt is to be brought within the reach of his creditor, save and except the classes I have mentioned—the farmers, the doctors, and the lawyers.

Mr. SPOONER. You construe the word "artisans" to mean mechanics?

Mr. TELLER. I construe the word "artisans" to mean mechanics. That is the way the word is usually used, and that is the purpose for which it was put in the bill.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to section 33 of the bill. Of course I do not expect the Senator from Massachusetts, who seems to have studied the bill so well, to receive any light from anything I say. I do not know that anybody will receive light from it. I regard it myself as a matter of duty, charged as I am here with a part of all legislation, to protest against the enactment of such a measure.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the character of the thirty-third section. I have examined all the bankruptcy acts which we have had in this country; I have examined the bankruptcy act of Great Britain; and I have endeavored to read something upon this subject. I think the man who drew that section was the most industrious and the most determined to render to those who employed him full and proper service for the purpose for which he was engaged of any man I ever knew, for if there is anything he has omitted in favor of the creditor and to the injury of the debtor, I think it has been by oversight and mistake. He must have been industrious from what he achieved. Section 33 provides—

> That any person being a trader residing and owing debts exceeding in amount $1,000, who, after the passage of this act, departs from the State, District, or Territory of which he is an inhabitant, with intent to defraud his creditors—

I called the attention of the Senate a moment ago to the fact that it does not depend upon the truth of the petition that is filed; that a petition as false as Lucifer may be the means of destroying a man perfectly solvent, perfectly honest, if an allegation is once made against him and his financial condition is of such a character as to bear that result; and that is the condition of nine men out of ten engaged in trade. If a man depart from the State "with intent to defraud his creditors" he commits an act of bankruptcy. A man living in the State that I in part represent might want to go to see his dying father or mother in Massachusetts. He might not have time to notify all his neighbors and all his creditors that he was going. Before he reaches the old homestead, before he reaches the home where he expected to find his aged parent alive, or perhaps to attend his funeral obsequies in discharging his filial duty, some fellow—and the country is full of them—with a claim would set up, "Why, this man has departed from the State as I verily believe for the purpose of defrauding his creditors; he left on a night train; he went out suddenly and unexpectedly," and he swears to it. The bankrupt proceeding commences, and that man's credit is ruined, although he may come back and he may try the case in court and it may be adjudicated in his favor that he had not thus departed from the State for the purpose alleged. They do not first determine whether he has fled from the State. The goods are seized and the judgment rendered afterward.

Or, being absent, remains so with like intent.

If he is kept away, somebody can allege that he has kept away for the purpose of avoiding the service of a writ, and then his property is seized and put into the court of bankruptcy. What benefit is it to him when his credit is destroyed if he does finally establish by a jury of his countrymen that he was not away with intent to defraud? He has been posted in all the publications of the country as a bankrupt; he has been put upon the posters of the great commercial centers as a man whose property has been seized, and his credit is gone.

Or conceals himself to avoid arrest or the service of legal process; or makes a fraudulent transfer of his property.

If you go back you will find in one of the preceding sections what a "transfer" means. A transfer of property is declared to mean a mortgage, a conveyance of any kind. Although it may be to secure a pre-existing debt, it is nevertheless a transfer of his property. Of course they have it here:

Or with intent to defraud his creditors—

As I have said, that is a charge so easily made and it is so immaterial whether proved or not in its effect upon the debtor, that it ought not to be there—

Or with intent to defraud his creditors, suffers judgment against him; or gives a warrant to confess judgment, or judgment-note, with like intent—

"Or suffers judgment against him!" A man is not allowed to contest a doubtful claim. He must take the chances that if a judgment is rendered against him he will then be put in bankruptcy—or who, being actually insolvent, suffers his property to be seized on execution, and fails within twenty days thereafter to redeem the same from such seizure; or has suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper or open accounts, made, passed, or contracted in the course of his business for a period of thirty days after the same were payable; or who, being insolvent, makes a preference to any creditor as hereinafter defined, or makes an assignment for the benefit of existing creditors, with or without preferences—

"With or without preferences." A man who finds himself in failing circumstances who desires to turn over everything he has in the world for the payment of his debts can not select the tribunal that shall pass upon the value of his property and pay it off pro rata among his creditors; but if he does that, if he says to the most honest and upright man in the community, "Be my trustee, sell these goods, dispose of this property, pay it out, as it belongs to my creditors, so far as it will go," that is an act of bankruptcy under this bill, and for that act he can be called into court and compelled to undergo all the provisions of this bill. Any one who does any of these things "shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, and may be adjudged bankrupt by any court of bankruptcy in a district in which he may have been a resident at any time within six months next preceding the application, upon a petition filed in such court by three or more of his creditors whose debts, which would be probable at the first meeting under this act, amount, in all, to not less than $500."

Three men having claims of $500 jointly between them can thus destroy any man in business if he attempts to select his own trustee, to select his own agent, who is responsible to the State courts, who is responsible if he violates his trust to the creditors as much as any official that can be appointed. Is it to be presumed that a man who turns over all his property to pay his debts without preferences does not turn it over to a man who will honestly apply it to the purpose for which his trusteeship has been created?

Then this follows; at the bottom of the page I find:

When such act consists of a transfer of or attachment or lien upon property of the bankrupt, such period shall not be deemed to expire until six months from and after the recording, registering, or docketing of the deed, writing, transfer, judgment, or attachment relating thereto, whenever by law such recording, registering, or docketing is required or permitted, or from the notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession by the creditor, or other person dealing with the bankrupt, of the personal property which is the subject-matter of such alleged act of bankruptcy.

A man who has more real estate in value than the debts he owes can not with safety turn it over to any man who holds his note, because somebody may allege at any time within six months that he has done it for an improper purpose; and that is a "transfer" that brings him within the provisions of this bill. Who would dare to take from his debtor a mortgage upon his property? You thus deprive the struggling debtor of an opportunity to make available that which he has in the honest discharge of his debts. What benevolent purpose is served by that provision? Who is to be benefited by saying to the debtor, "You have got property; you must not put it in the hands of your creditors to pay your debts because at any time within six months it may be alleged that that act was an act of bankruptcy?" Not one creditor would dare to take it; and thus, I repeat, you prevent the man from using that which he has and that which he has a right to use, in the ordinary commercial way, for the purpose simply of giving those people who have credited him an opportunity to compel him to deliver the full pound of flesh.

It is possible that this bill will reduce the rate of interest in the West; but I beg the honorable Senator from Massachusetts not to worry himself about our interest in that respect. We do not want to borrow any money at 2 or 3 per cent. at the cost of so expensive a proceeding as this. While the people in the West are ready to pay their debts—and they are as apt to pay their debts and expect to pay them as any other people—they do not care about having the power given to any man or any set of men to compel them to sacrifice their property or allow some other man to sacrifice it and eat it up in costs and expenses.

I have found a very generous provision in this bill, the only provision in it that is generous, and I have no doubt that if I fail to call attention to it the Senator from Massachusetts when he addresses the Senate on the beauties and virtues of this bill will hardly omit it. Let us see what is left to the debtor under its provisions. The debtor is solvent, but some man has alleged that he has done something that will bring him within the provisions of this bill. His property is seized, and thereupon, while the property is in the hands of the law, while he is prevented by the provisions of the law from putting his hands on his property, or disposing of it, he may come in, says the bill, and allege that he is not insolvent, and then if within ninety days, with his property all encumbered, with his credit destroyed, he is able to resume payment his property shall be returned to him. Why, Mr. President, how will the poor debtor resume payment when his money, his goods, and his credits are in the hands of his creditors, when everything that he has got that could be valuable to him except his life has been turned over under a false and fictitious charge made against him, although the court may wait ninety days, and if he will resume at the end of ninety days then his property shall be returned to him?

Mr. President, I did not intend when I commenced my remarks to speak except as to one single phase of the bill. I presume it is likely there are some other features of the bill that I shall attempt to be heard on before we close. I do not regard this as a matter to go through the Senate in a hurry. I do not regard it as a matter of slight concern. I think now when all the industries of the country are paralyzed, when the business of the country is in a state that needs assistance, it is no time to pass bills of this character that will enable a few creditors out of many thousands, if they are so disposed, to destroy practically the credit system of the country, and bring all of the middle-class people, who are those most to be affected by this bill, to ruin. When I speak of "middle class," I mean financially the men who are neither very rich nor very poor, the men who are able, if let alone, to pay their debts and yet can not under an attack in the court of bankruptcy on their credit. That is the class of people who, in my judgment, will be most affected, and I repeat that when the industries of the country are paralyzed as it were, when every man in trade to-day (and it has been so for the last three years) is suffering from the depression, from the lack of money, and the lack of business in the country, it is no time to put these men in jeopardy by enabling one person out of a hundred, or two or three out of a thousand, to interfere and destroy their credits and take their property out of their hands and put it beyond their reach either under the pretense that they will have no lengthening chain for them in the future or under the pretense that the State laws are not efficient and are not sufficient for the collection of all honest debts, as I know, and as the Senator knows they are.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not know how fully the Senate may think it worth while to enter upon any discussion of this measure at the present time. I have been unfortunately called out during a part of the speech of my honorable friend from Colorado, if a person who has associated with the persons he has described may be allowed to so style himself. I wish, however, to say that my honorable friend is utterly mistaken in his conception either of the character or the purpose of the class of men to whom he has referred. The leading merchants and manufacturers of this country are not a set of sharks, Shylocks, dealing with their debtors as men who desire to wring the life-blood or the pound of flesh from a victim.

They are men who will compare favorably with any class of men on the face of the earth. No nobility has inherited traits, there is in the present or in past ages no chivalry that has shown more generosity than the class of men who have been successful, East and West, North and South, in the business and trade of the American Republic. They built our railroads, they covered the sea with our commerce, they made our flag favored the world over, created the wealth and prosperity of America. They built up this vast internal commerce, the creation of the past twenty-five or thirty years, the most remarkable creation of the human brain and of human knowledge which history shows. And to make an attack of the kind the Senator makes upon them is to make an attack upon the American character itself.

These men are permeated through and through with the American spirit, with the American character, with the American traits, and one great part and characteristic of that character is generosity, kindness, and fellow-feeling for the poor. You can not put your hand upon a name among that class of the leading promoters of this legislation to which the Senator from Colorado has referred which is not a name associated wherever it is known with kindness, with generosity, with fellow-feeling. They are men who have grown up from poverty, from want, from straitened circumstances. Such men are never deserving of such a character as the Senator has undertaken to apply to them.

Now, what does this bill undertake to do in the involuntary part of it, which is the part the Senator has undertaken to criticise? It says exactly this, that when a debtor has become insolvent, is unable to pay his debts, there shall in the first place be reserved to him every particle of property, every interest, every right which the law of his own State protects against attachment or seizure on execution. Colorado may, if she sees fit, exempt the homestead to the amount of a million dollars of her debtors, and the United States bankrupt law can not lay its hand on it. It may exempt the furniture of the household; it may exempt the tools of the mechanic; it may exempt a capital to continue business. All that is left to the State.

Then the second proposition is that the debtor, being honest and undertaking to perpetrate no fraud upon anybody, shall be discharged from every obligation he owes upon the face of the earth which, under the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any State from passing a law impairing the obligation of contracts, can be done by no other authority but the authority of the National Government. That is the second feature of this ferocious and savage bill!

The third and the last thing is that it says that this property with which you are unable to go and pay your debts in full shall be equally divided among your creditors, instead of being seized by one under a State attachment, or being given to one by voluntary preference of the debtor; and that is all. That is the whole scope, purpose, substance, and intent of this bill. And is not that right? The Senator says he has taken up one clause—in my hearing since I have come in he takes up the clause wherein it says that if a debtor, being insolvent, unable to pay his debts in full, makes an assignment with or without preferences, the creditors may come in, if they see fit, and put him into bankruptcy.

In other words, the law simply says to a debtor, all of whose property, all of whose estate belongs to his creditors and not to himself, he being bankrupt and the property not being within the exemptions of the State law, "You shall not have the right in a matter which solely concerns your creditors and not in the least concerns you—because all this property that the assignment relates to is to be divided among the creditors—to substitute a man of your own who may be dishonest, or who may be fraudulent, who may be incapable, who may be irresponsible, and let him go on without any oversight, without any power controlling him in his place, without any right to make him account, except in the end, to the creditors whose property he is distributing among them—you shall not substitute him for an officer of the law whose responsibility is secured, in whose choice the creditors are consulted, and who is constantly acting under the supervision of the court." That is the main bloody feature of this bill which has excited the imagination of my honorable friend from Colorado!

Why, Mr. President, if there be anything in this bill anywhere which can be construed into an oppression, or can be made in one case out of a hundred an instrument of oppression upon an honest debtor, let it be stricken out and amended, and no man will be more thankful than I to have that pointed out; and of course in so complicated a system as a bankrupt law new views and particular passages in such a bill will be disclosed and be suggested, as my honorable friend from Colorado has already pointed out one.

But that is all there is of a bankrupt law. The old bankrupt law wiped out after the war the debts of more than one hundred thousand American citizens. My mail has been full while these measures have been proceeding with applications of debtors from all over the country, poor men wanting to know what I think of the hope of the prospect of the passage of this relief, saying that they are waiting, "we failed so and so, or had this, that, or the other misfortune," and they are waiting for the opportunity. Every one of these debtors whom the Senator from Colorado has described, and whom he professes to represent, is to be condemned everywhere without this bankruptcy bill to the inability to go on with his business unless every single man to whom he owes a debt consents to discharge it. His life and the life of his family and household are at the alternative of poverty on the one side or fraud upon the other.

Was it not becoming the wisdom and foresight of our fathers to insert in the Constitution of the United States a power in the American Congress to remedy that state of things?

Is it not becoming our statesmanship and our humanity and our intelligence and our industry to attempt to devise a scheme, if we can, under which this class of our fellow-citizens shall find itself? When a man is insolvent and can not pay his debts, is there a State on the face of the continent under whose laws his property does not belong to his creditors now and can not be wrested from him, with all the cost and expense of lawsuits, at the option of any single man? If there be such a State, this bill respects the choice of that State and allows that exception still to stand; it does not interfere with it; but if there be no such State, what hardship is there or can there be in saying simply that if you are unable to pay your debts, your property, which the law is to take from you and to seize, is to be divided equally among all your creditors rather than be given to the person whom you may prefer?

Mr. President, this particular attack that the Senator has made upon the bill is so unfounded that by the common law as it now exists such an assignment as he has referred to is void and may be set aside by any single creditor. It certainly is so in my State, and I presume wherever the common law prevails that an attempt by a debtor, unless there is a State law authorizing it, to convey to a trustee to defraud a creditor his property to be sold and disposed of by the trustee and so removed from seizure or attachment or execution is void as in fraud of creditors.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean to say that by the common law an insolvent debtor can not convey his property or any article to be sold by his trustee within a reasonable time for cash, to be applied to the payment of his debts? Does he mean to say that is a principle of the common law?

Mr. HOAR. I mean to say that exact proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the law very differently.

Mr. HOAR. I had the honor myself of arguing that very question before Professor Simon Greenleaf, one of the greatest lawyers of this country, when I was a law student at Harvard. I speak of it, of course, without the assent of the creditors.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course.

Mr. HOAR. My proposition is that at common law as administered in most of the States of this Union, and certainly in my own, a man being indebted whom I might sue, whose property I might seize on attachment, on mesne process or execution, can not deprive me of my right to take his property and apply it to my use in the mode pointed out by the law by substituting a method of his own, to wit, a trustee, who is to take it, sell it, and apply it to me, or apply it to me in common with other creditors, without my assent. That is my proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not the common law of England.

Mr. HOAR. I think it is.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the point he has just made has been decided in my own State in the direction which he has stated.

Mr. HOAR. I had occasion as a part of my very early studies to investigate that particular proposition to ascertain the state of the law upon that subject, and the law as I state it is the law of England and it is the law of nearly all the American States, I will not say without an exception. There are some jurisdictions where, there being nothing to do but to pay over the property equally to certain creditors mentioned in the assignment, the law presumes, what otherwise would be necessary, the assent of the creditors, and of course where the assent is given in fact the thing will stand.

So, Mr. President, I repeat that the Senator's assault upon this bill on the point which he has made against it relates to a transaction which would be void at the common law. But I do not propose to take this time in the afternoon, with these vacant seats, to go into a general discussion of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the trouble with the Senator from Massachusetts is that he assumes that the people he represents, especially in reference to this bill, are the people of the United States. There never was a greater mistake than that. I have made no attack upon the merchants of this country. I assert here to-day that 3 per cent. of the men whom he has so highly indorsed—and every word of it I agree to—are not demanding this legislation. Some of them may have been cajoled into signing petitions; they may have submitted in boards of trade and chambers of commerce, when some astute and pressing attorney, perhaps anxious for opportunities to distinguish himself in collection matters, has pressed upon them this measure, to resolutions; they may possibly, some of them, have put their names to papers; but 3 per cent. of them have not indorsed this suggestion in any way whatever. It is the class of men to whom I referred, the men who are grasping, avaricious—who, as I said before, get as they may and keep as they can—that is the class of men who are making this effort.

The honorable Senator says when a man becomes insolvent his property belongs to his creditors. Admit it. That is not what I am complaining of. I am complaining that this bill enables them to make men insolvent who are not insolvent. It is not a question of insolvency. The bill provides what shall be conclusive of the insolvency. A man may be worth ten dollars where he owes one, and if he does certain acts provided for in this bill he is insolvent within the provisions of this law and his property will be seized, and rightfully seized under the law, and destroyed.

Mr. President, I know something of the commercial world. I have had some opportunities to see the men from the Atlantic to the Pacific who are engaged in commerce. I know that the great mass of them would take no advantage of provisions of this kind; but I know that in every community, in every State, there will be some who will take advantage of them; and I know that there is no merchant who deals with New York to any considerable extent, or with Boston, or any other great city, that will not find on the list of men of whom he has purchased goods and to whom he has become indebted some one who will not have all the characteristics of mercy and sympathy spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts when he described the merchants of the country. It is against those men that I want to protect the debtors.

Mr. President, I do not represent the debtor class. I have not made any assertion of that kind. I do not represent a community of debtors, I want the Senator to understand, and I have no more interest in the debtors than he has. I have an interest in seeing fair play, and justice, and right, and prosperity in this country, which I do not believe can be had under this bill.

It is a kind and fatherly bill, it is taking care of everybody, the Senator says. Why, Mr. President, the courts of the State and the nation are too slow, and this bill provides that the court of bankruptcy may sit at any time, and at all times, and anywhere that the judge pleases on giving reasonable notice. It is for the expeditious collection of debts; and if the Senator will so label his bill, and if the men who are demanding it will come here in their true colors, there will not be very much complaint, because there will be very little danger of its ever becoming a law.

The honorable Senator's mail may be full of letters from men who want to get rid of their debts. If it is, I will venture to say that the majority of them who are appealing for the passage of this bill are men who committed frauds on their creditors, for to the great credit of the class that he has mentioned in my long experience as a lawyer I have never found a single case of oppression in the honorable class that he has mentioned. I have found such cases, but they were not practiced by those who belonged to that class. Honorable men are always ready and always willing, when the debtor has surrendered his all, to give him an acquittance; and if these men are honest unfortunate debtors they will get their acquittance. The bill is not in their interest; it is in the interest of a speedy and hasty collection of debts. I admit every man ought to pay his debts; no man believes in that more than I do; but I understand the way business has been transacted in this country men are expected to grant relief, and the merchants whom the Senator describes are ready and willing to do so with a few exceptions.

I complain of this bill because it puts it in the power, not of the men he eulogizes, not of the men that he thinks are so benevolent, but of the men that I described, a little small force it may be, but powerful for evil under this bill. Under the color of Federal law they can seize the property of every man in this country and nine out of every ten can be put into bankruptcy under the bill. Public credit will be destroyed in this country and disaster will follow, as it followed the bill of 1867.

The honorable Senator does not pretend that there is anything new in this bill save the simple matter of detail, the simple question of applying the law, the simple matter of fees. All the evils of the act, all the frauds of the act, all the injustice of the act of 1867 are here, and we are asked to repeat that which we declared by the almost unanimous vote of the national Legislature a few years ago ought not to remain upon the statute-book.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the bulk of what the Senator says is based on his apprehension of what might be done under this bill by a harsh or dishonest creditor, which I utterly deny, because the bill carefully provides against any such possibility. He tries now to have the law remain without a bankruptcy bill. What then? A manufacturer, for instance, fails. What is the process? He may have three thousand workingmen. Every one of them has got to bring a suit to claim his debt by law, making a separate bill of costs and separate suits. The only way to prevent that is to have a voluntary payment and a voluntary composition with the creditors. Now, the voluntary composition with the creditors can not take place without the creditors' assent. It is certainly in the power of a shark to put a man into bankruptcy, to compel the division of his property equally and cheaply among all his creditors. It is much more in the power of the shark who gets the benefit of the seizure under execution of the property to get the first grip on the whole. The debtor can not get rid of the debt without the shark's consent; but when he is under a bankruptcy bill, in spite of the objection of the creditor he can get a discharge from all his debts.

Mr. TELLER. I would suggest to the Senator that in all the States that I know of we have insolvent laws. We have a method by which the unfortunate man can take his goods and apply them to the payment of his debts.

Mr. HOAR. He can not be discharged.

Mr. TELLER. He gets discharged in that State.

Mr. HOAR. Not from the debts in other States.

Mr. TELLER. It is perfectly good in the State where his creditors live. As between him and the creditors in that State, it is all right. Further than that, when a man owes one of these sharks he can go to the other creditors and say, "I will pay this man off; I have got three of these fellows; I can pay this one to-day, and that one to-morrow, and the next one next week." Under this bill the payment of any one will allow the other two to come upon him and destroy his credit and his existence as a merchant.

Mr. HOAR. That can be done without this bill, because the other two can sue him, make their costs, and take execution on his property.

Mr. TELLER. They can not seize his property.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, they can on their execution. The Senator says although we have insolvent laws now in our States, the New York and Massachusetts sharks who want to get the last pound of flesh out of the Western gentleman can put their Colorado debtor into insolvency under the Colorado system or whatever the State may be where they have insolvent laws and can wipe out all the debts of the creditors in his own State. What then is the result? Under the present system, under the Colorado law if you have an insolvent law in Colorado, you have taken all the man's property away from him, you have discharged him of the debts he owed to his neighbors and friends and acquaintances, and you have left him at the mercy of the Eastern sharks whose claims the Colorado authorities can not discharge.

Mr. TELLER. They do not put him into bankruptcy. That is the difference.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator said in answer to my last proposition that they have insolvent laws. Then I said you can not give a discharge. Oh, yes, we discharge him from debt in his own State. That was the resort of the Senator. Now, my proposition is that if that be true, where do you leave the unfortunate debtor persecuted by his creditor? You leave him with his property taken from him, for when he goes into insolvency I suppose he gives up his property if the proceeding is honest; and you leave him with his own neighbors and friends, whether they get much or little of their debts, with their debts gone, and he all his natural life at the mercy of creditors in other States.

Mr. President, there is not a particular in which this bill is not better for the debtor, as it is better for the creditor, than any State law under the Constitution of the United States can possibly be unless in the single case where the debtor desires to secure a fraudulent keeping of his property for himself or a fraudulent preference of one creditor over another.

Mr. TELLER. So far as I know there are no provisions in any insolvent laws of the States of the character of this bill. The insolvent laws do not allow the creditor to destroy the credit and seize upon the property of debtors upon such pretenses as are set forth in this bill. There is a wide distinction between the insolvent laws of every State and this bill. And as to fraudulent assignments, in all the history of the country there were never so many fraudulent transactions as occurred under the bankrupt act of 1867. A bankrupt law opens the door for a fraudulent debtor and closes it against the honest and deserving debtor.

Mr. HOAR. That I do not say is mere railing, for that is not a proper word, but mere rhetoric. There is nothing in the bill to warrant that assertion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 of section 9 it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That any debt, demand, or property claimed by the trustee shall be sued for in such court, either State or Federal, as the bankrupt would have been entitled to resort to in enforcing the same claim: Provided, That the court of bankruptcy shall in any case, where the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts is concurrent, direct that the suit shall be brought in the State court.

Mr. HOAR. That amendment I gave notice that I would assent to, but that I wanted to add at the end of the section a particular exception; and I desire it to stand over until the Senator who offered it shall see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over for the present without action. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read section 10 of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that I understand this section, but it seems to me that the same difficulty which occurred in section 8 runs through section 10, and I do not know but that it runs through the whole bill.

That appeals may be taken from the district to the circuit courts in all cases in equity.

Does that provide for appeals in the Territories from the Territorial courts?

Mr. HOAR. That leaves that to the general law in regard to Territorial courts and the courts of the District of Columbia. I do not think the tenth section requires any change, because that only provides for certain equity appeals from the district, which is the bankruptcy court, to the circuit court; but the supreme court is the bankrupt court in each Territory and in the District of Columbia. I do not understand that the section requires any change.

Mr. PLATT. Then there will be no appeal in the District of Columbia or in the Territories?

Mr. HOAR. No.

The Secretary read sections 11 and 12 of the bill.

R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year 1886, submit the following statement in explanation of the accompanying report.

The effect of the action recommended is as follows:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, and 4: $231,500 will be given to meet a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing, the sum being allotted as follows: For Congress, $200,000; State Department, $5,000; Treasury Department, $24,000, and for the Court of Claims, $2,500.

The sum of $1,500 proposed for printing and binding for the Library of Congress will be stricken from the bill.

On amendment 5: Will make a direct appropriation of $200,000 from the Treasury to meet a deficiency on account of pay of the Army for 1886.

The total amount of the bill as agreed upon is $6,431,500.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make only a brief statement. The amendment of the Senate in relation to the printing and binding for the Library was found not to have come through the channels prescribed by law and was rejected by the conferees.

The amount awarded in the conference report of $2,500 for the printing of the Court of Claims grows out of a large increase of business in that court, the result of the enactment of what is known as the Bowman act.

The controversy as to the amount necessary for the Army for the year 1886 was of this nature: The Department recommended a transfer from the appropriations of 1885, so as to be used in the year 1886. That the Senate with unanimity objected to stating that each appropriation should show on its face the amount chargeable to each particular year, and there is force in that position. The figures would show that the amount of appropriations for the pay of the officers and enlisted men for that year was about $12,205,000. The addition of $200,000 would make it for 1886 $12,405,000, which is less than the amount that has passed the House for the approaching fiscal year, the exact figures for the same being $12,542,689.46.

The increase for the pay of the Army over the amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1886 arises from the fact that the discharges from the Army of enlisted men during the current year have been and will be unusually large, compelling an increase in pay to enlisted men for 1886 over 1885 of $112,000; for retained pay, $24,000; travel pay and subsistence, $30,000, and clothing, $40,000.

With this statement, I ask that the report be agreed to.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening; the evening session to be devoted to general debate upon the pending bill, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that motion, but——

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that a vote may be reached in time to make an evening session unnecessary.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, if it is possible to reach a vote on the bill to-day before 5 o'clock, or by that time, I shall not ask for the evening session.

The SPEAKER. In that case the House can adjourn.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to obstruct the consideration of this bill, and I do not object to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], but to-day and to-morrow were set apart for the discussion of the bill known as the free-ship bill, and because the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who is in charge of the legislative appropriation bill told the chairman of the committee and myself and others on Friday last that he would not interfere with the free-ship bill to-day, we gave way for some portion of the time on Saturday, and I and others who desired to speak on the free-ship bill waited until to-day.

The committee are perfectly willing to give way to-day, provided they can have to-morrow; or, I venture to state as the sentiment of the committee, that they will give way on both days if they can have unanimous consent for any other day this week.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the latter is preferable. I do not suppose that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] desires for a moment to obstruct legislation in connection with any subject by pressing the appropriation bill; but it is desirable that that bill should be considered promptly, and if I were at liberty to make a suggestion it would be that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] submit first the proposition to set apart another day for the discussion of the free-ship bill, and let us go on with the appropriation bill to-morrow. If, however, the House does not consent to that, I, as one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, would not feel warranted in voting to press the legislative bill as against any other legislation that seems to have the right of way and is in progress of consideration.

Mr. HAMMOND. We not only have the right of way, but we have an express understanding.

Mr. Chairman, with the view of trying to arrive at some adjustment that will avoid any conflict before the question is taken on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to go into Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that on next Saturday, after the reading of the Journal, the free-ship bill may have the right of way for the whole of that day, and that the hour for calling the previous question upon it be fixed at 4 o'clock p. m. on that day.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, Saturday has been set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, while time is being distributed in this way I want to call attention to the fact that the 13th of April was set apart for the interstate-commerce bill. It has been in order ever since to call up that bill, and I do not want any understanding reached here that will preclude me from calling that bill up to antagonize any other measure that may be urged upon the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] objects to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, that being objected to, I desire to see whether we can not have to-morrow assigned for the discussion of the free-ship bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will agree to get through with the bill on Saturday I shall not object.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that the Committee on Appropriations will ask for Friday.

Mr. HAMMOND. We will help you to get that. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to see whether we can not get to-day or to-morrow assigned for the further consideration of the free-ship bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the understanding that was reached on Saturday last in regard to the action to be taken with regard to these two measures, the bill now pending and the free-ship bill, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations ought not to insist upon occupying either to-day or to-morrow; but I shall have to insist that as early as possible after to-morrow the legislative bill shall be taken up, for it is known to be a very tedious bill, and it ought to be disposed of and sent to the Senate as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow after the reading of the Journal the House proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the free-ship bill, and that the previous question be considered as ordered upon it at 4 o'clock.

A MEMBER. That has been already agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I object to that, Mr. Speaker. I can not make that agreement now. As I have already said, if it is possible to close the discussion on the pending bill to-day I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought I had that agreement with the gentleman.

Mr. HATCH. No. I have said that as soon as I can confer with the members of my committee, under whose instructions I am acting in the conduct of this bill, I shall be very glad to make any agreement that will be satisfactory and fair.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understood the gentleman to be satisfied that we should have to-morrow if we would yield him to-day without a contest.

Mr. HATCH. I have not so stated either to the gentleman or to the committee.

Mr. HAMMOND. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, the only way to settle this matter is to come to an understanding that after the pending bill is disposed of the right of way shall be given to the free-ship bill, as it is called, for one day.

Mr. WELLBORN. I shall object to that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That we will fight for, all of us.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

IMITATION BUTTER PRODUCT.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills for raising revenue. The business under consideration is the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, what has become of the remainder of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entitled to the floor for the remainder of his hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much is that?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield twenty minutes to my colleague [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, in the earlier days of this session I had the honor to submit to this House a memorial signed by seven thousand constituents of mine asking for this legislation, which, together with the bill I introduced, was referred to the Agricultural Committee. In behalf of those constituents, whom I am proud to represent upon this floor, I desire to thank the Committee on Agriculture for reporting with promptness the bill which is before us for our consideration.

It is claimed by the opponents of the pending bill that it is unconstitutional; that Congress has no power to levy a tax upon oleomargarine except for the purpose of raising a revenue. This in substance is the burden of the objection which is interposed.

While I have great respect for the opinions of the learned gentlemen I am not prepared to acquiesce in any such construction of the powers of the Constitution. I believe this bill is entirely within its provisions.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

It will be observed that this section provides not only for the laying and collection of taxes for the payment of debts, but for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this provision of the Constitution means anything, it means that every community has a right not only to protect itself against fraud and deception but its people against the manufacture and sale of an unhealthy and unwholesome article of food, and if it can not do it directly it may do it indirectly. Self-protection is the first law of nature, and is as applicable to nations as individuals.

The object of this legislation is not only the protection of the American dairyman against a dishonest and fraudulent business, but for the protection of the public.

But, sir, if it be true that such a tax can not be imposed except for the purpose of raising revenue, put this measure squarely upon that ground. Place oleomargarine and all kinds of bogus butter upon the same footing as whisky and tobacco. It is an open question which of the two is the most injurious to health. We need the revenue for the erection of fortifications, coast defenses, and the rebuilding of our Navy. Scarcely one-half of the great war debt has been paid. In 1866 our national debt was $2,773,236,173. On the first day of last November it was $1,303,034,056. Our annual expenditures are more than $300,000,000. The estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year are $323,911,394, and should Congress pass the Blair educational bill this sum would be increased fully $80,000,000.

The substitute for butter known as oleomargarine, if made according to the formula of Mege, the original inventor, may be wholesome, and it may not be; I am not prepared to say. But this I do know, that the oleomargarine that is being manufactured and sold to-day in all of our great cities is not made in accordance with Mége's patent. If you will take the trouble to visit the Patent Office you will find that nearly two hundred patents for the manufacture of imitation butter have been issued since 1872, the date of the granting of the original patent. That in the place of margarine oil more than fifty kinds of acids and chemical ingredients are used. Nitric acid, sugar of lead, castor oil, sulphate of lime, mustard-seed oil, cotton-seed oil, and the Lord only knows what—vegetable oils mixed with grease, lard, and the fat of animals.

Nitric acid is used for the purpose of removing the peculiar odor of grease and lard, and it is a startling fact that there is no power under the heavens by which you can tell whether the lard was taken from a healthy or diseased animal. Sir, it is impossible to imagine a more colossal fraud; and yet it is said that we have no power under the Constitution to protect the public against it. If this be true, I have lost my respect for the Constitution of our fathers, and the sooner the fact is understood the better.

The right to manufacture and sell an unwholesome or fraudulent article of food should be prohibited, not taxed. This oleomargarine business is a bad business. It is conceived in fraud and brought forth in iniquity, and the sooner it is exterminated the better it will be for us. I would make the manufacture and sale of all kinds of bogus butter a criminal offense and the offender punishable as the counterfeiter of your currency. Legally or morally I can see no difference between one who deliberately manufactures and puts upon the market a spurious and unwholsome article of food and the man who counterfeits your United States greenbacks.

Mr. Chairman, we have had during this session no question before us of greater importance. The dairy interest of the United States is one of the largest and most important of all our industries, and I will exclude none. It is absolutely the most important. More than five millions of our people are engaged in and devoted to it. The dairy product of the United States last year was worth more than $500,000,000. There is invested in the dairy business of the State of New York to-day more than $300,000,000. I doubt whether there ever was a more stupendous swindle than this bogus butter business. It not only robs the farmer and dairyman of the fruits of their skill and labor, but it swindles the public generally. They are its victims. More than 200,000,000 pounds of this stuff is manufactured and sold annually, and sold not for what it is, but for what it is not.

There is not a dealer of oleomargarine in the country that could successfully prosecute his business if he were to sell his product for what it is; and I know of no one who prefers oleomargarine to butter. I defy any one but the most skillful expert or learned chemist to tell you which is the spurious and which is the genuine article.

Yet, sir, we are repeatedly told that Congress can not interfere in this matter; that it has no power under the Constitution to protect either the dairyman or the public. We can enact laws to protect American labor against the pauper labor of the Old World; we can protect the cotton and woolen manufactures of New England and the sugar industry of Louisiana, but we can not protect the American farmer. Mr. Chairman, this is the logic of the distinguished gentlemen who oppose this bill.

Sir, such declarations are simply preposterous, and it is not the first time the Constitution of the United States has been invoked to defeat important legislation. Let us not anticipate the decision of the United States Supreme Court. Let us enact the law, and if Mr. Armour and his oleomargarine friends believe the measure to be unconstitutional he has his remedy. The court is always open for the adjudication of just such questions as this. So far as I am concerned I have no doubt as to the power of Congress in a matter of this kind. Whether the consumer be a poor or rich man he has a right to demand that he shall not be deceived by those who sell him food, and that a spurious and injurious article shall not be palmed off upon him as a genuine article. This right is guaranteed to him by the higher law and existed prior to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, if a law could be enacted that would compel the manufacturer of bogus butter to sell it for what it is there would be no necessity for this legislation, but it can not be done. Of the thirty-eight States all but ten have passed laws governing the manufacture and sale of imitation butter. For the last fifteen years the Legislature of the great State of New York has been trying to accomplish this result, but its efforts have been in vain. Sir, we have reached a point in the history of this traffic when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. The farmer can not successfully compete with the manufacturers of oleomargarine that can be made for 7 cents a pound. Either oleomargarine must go or the great dairy industry of the country must be wiped out, utterly destroyed. That the statement which I make is not an exaggeration you have but to consult the facts and figures of your trade with foreign countries for the past five years.

The American dairyman should supply the butter and cheese markets of the world. The finest dairy districts of England and France produce no better butter than is made by the farmers of New York, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois. But the manufacture of oleomargarine is not only destroying our domestic market, but is ruining our foreign trade. In 1880 we exported 39,236,658 pounds of butter; last year the United States exported 21,683,148 pounds; a falling off within a period of five years of almost 50 per cent. In 1880 the United States exported 19,844,256 pounds of oleomargarine or imitation butter, worth $2,582,640; last year we exported upward of 37,000,000—an increase of 17,000,000 pounds of imitation butter, and within a period of five years. These are very significant figures, and demand the most careful consideration. England no longer comes to America for her butter and cheese.

She imports annually more than $50,000,000 worth of butter, but less than 10 per cent. is made in the United States. She imports annually more than $25,000,000 worth of cheese, 75 per cent. of which comes from countries other than the United States. England alone last year imported from the United States more than 25,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine, every pound of which not only took the place of so much butter, but in most instances was palmed off upon the English people as the genuine product of the American dairy. Sir, it is no wonder that Hungary and Germany have closed their ports against the American farmer. The good name of our Government is involved, and we owe it to ourselves, to the honor and integrity of our Government, to put a stop to this business. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the pending bill. I believe it to be not only constitutional, but the only legislation that will be able to preserve the great dairy industry of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I return to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] so much of the time yielded to me as I have not occupied.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] agreed to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEPBURN] and myself what time he had left.

Mr. MILLARD. I yield the time, then, to those two gentlemen.

Mr. CANNON. How much time is there left?

The CHAIRMAN. There are seven minutes of the time which was yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] and fifteen minutes besides.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] who is not now in his seat told me he would yield the remainder of his time to the gentleman from Iowa and myself; and I understood the division would be one-half to each of us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then divide the remainder of the hour of the gentleman from New York between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill levies a tax of 10 cents a pound upon compounds sold as imitations and counterfeits of butter. It provides the machinery by which the tax shall be collected through the internal-revenue office, the effect of which is to give notice to all the world that such compounds are not butter, but purport to be what they are in fact, namely, oleomargarine or butterine. The report accompanying this bill from the Committee on Agriculture is a valuable one, short, terse, and full of information as to the articles used in the manufacture of these imitations of butter. I read from the report as follows:

That among the articles and ingredients used in the manufacture of such imitations there are the following: Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, broma chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

The report also states that this bogus butter is not only disastrous to the dairy interest and to all branches of agriculture indirectly, but detrimental to public health. It also states the amount of these spurious compounds manufactured annually in the United States to be about 200,000,000 pounds; and the cost of the product to the manufacturer to be from 7 to 8 cents a pound, and the cost to the consumer to be about equal with the price of genuine butter. Putting the average price of butter at 18 cents a pound and the price of the bogus butter at 15 cents, we have a profit divided between the manufacturer and retail dealer of 8 cents a pound, making a profit in the aggregate to those persons who manufacture and sell these counterfeit compounds to the people as genuine butter of $16,000,000 per annum. The report also states that there are in the United States over fifteen million cows, producing annually over 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter and 300,000,000 pounds of cheese. Add to this the value of milk consumed as milk, and you have a product of the annual value of $500,000,000.

It is claimed on the part of the dairy interests that it is not to their interest nor to the interest of the consumer that they should be compelled to compete with the counterfeit butter which passes into the market as genuine.

The opponents of this bill claim, first, that we have no power under the Constitution to levy a tax upon oleomargarine. I need not reply at length to that claim. The same power under which banks, incomes, whisky, and tobacco are or have been taxed is sufficient to authorize this tax.

It is further claimed that the effect of this tax will be to unjustly discriminate against the oleomargarine interest in favor of the dairy interest. Mr. Chairman, in reply I have to say that you can not levy a tax without benefiting some one and injuring somebody; and, so far as building up and protecting interests is concerned, it has been the policy of the Government from the commencement to so levy taxes as to promote a diversity of industries; and gentlemen know that practically we never consider a tax bill but we try to adjust it so as to effect the greatest good to the greatest number, either directly or in the end. Our whole system of taxation is constructed upon that basis. The agriculturists, who constitute the great foundation of industry—nearly one-half of our whole population—have for nearly a century submitted to taxation which tended to give a diversity of industries, and have rarely asked for taxation that would tend to benefit them directly. They now ask that such a tax shall be levied upon this spurious, counterfeit product as will place a brand upon it so that it shall be known by all persons and in all markets for what it is, instead of being known for what it is not. It is objected that the proposed tax is too high and that we do not need the revenue.

Mr. Chairman, in reply I call attention that the proposed tax is not so great as that upon the product of corn when it is made into whisky, or upon tobacco, or upon many articles imported to this country. Under the law now in force each peck of corn, of the value of 8 cents, when made into whisky pays 90 cents—a tax eleven times the cost of the product. Leaf-tobacco, of the value of from 2 to 10 cents a pound, pays a tax of 8 cents a pound when manufactured. If gentlemen think we are getting too much revenue it is perfectly competent to reduce internal taxation upon other articles or to remove taxes in whole or part upon some of the articles we import.

Mr. Chairman, the cry is raised that this tax upon bogus butter will oppress the poor man. I have had a great many letters and petitions from the masses of the people asking for this legislation, and not one from the laboring people against it. This bogus butter is made very largely in Chicago and other great cities by wealthy manufacturers, who, with the dealers in the same, make a profit of many millions annually, a profit that is founded upon passing to the consumer as true and genuine that which is bogus and counterfeit. These are the men who have protested and are protesting against the passage of this bill. These are the men who out of this traffic are gathering their millions annually, and who suddenly become the friends of the laboring men and in their name make protest. The laboring men can speak for themselves; they are speaking, and in speaking ask this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who suppose that the laboring man desires to buy this bogus article, believing it to be genuine, for the same or a little less price than he would have to pay for butter are mistaken. Laboring men want a fair wage for their labor, and then want a genuine article for their money and are willing to pay a fair price for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I want a moment longer to say that if the agriculturist is to prosper permanently he realizes that he must change his methods in farming; he must diversify his pursuit or wear out the soil. In my own State of Illinois I believe is to be found the best soil in the world, but even there the farmers are aware that thirty or forty years successive cropping to corn and small grains is wearing out the soil. We are compelled to rotate crops, and depend less upon corn for a profit and more upon the product of the dairy. From every standpoint and from every interest, except that of the few manufacturers who make oleomargarine and the few dealers who sell it, this legislation is desirable.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have ten minutes' time which I would be glad to reserve until my colleague [Mr. FREDERICK] takes the floor in his own right, after the gentleman from Georgia, at which time he has promised to yield me twenty minutes, and then I can take the half hour and submit my remarks on the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can reserve his time, there being no objection.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will take the floor in my own right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, supposing the sense of the House to be largely in favor of this bill, I presumed I would have no chance to make a speech on it to-day. I thought the previous question would be called and the bill closed out at once. I may submit now in deference to those in charge of the bill that considering the pressure of public business it seems to me they are giving much too great time to this discussion. Having an hour, I intend to consume but ten minutes of my time, because I believe this discussion should be stopped.

I mean, of course, not that I shall not yield the time to any gentleman who may wish it, but that I shall not occupy much time myself.

I desire simply to present in direct form the issue between me and the gentlemen upon the other side. I did not say that this bill was unconstitutional. I said that the man who voted for it because he desired to raise taxes, if that was his purpose, could cast an honest vote for it without violating the Constitution; but that the man who voted for it, not to raise a tax, but only to suppress one industry in the country in favor of a better, was prostituting the taxing power of the Constitution to a base purpose. I have no argument to make with gentlemen who say they care naught for the Constitution. They are beyond redemption.

I do not know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] would like to have himself so classed; but I will read his language and let others place him where they think the language properly makes him take position. He said, speaking of this subject:

Because it is only bought because the consumer does not know of the fraud that is being practiced upon him and is ignorant of what he purchases, do gentlemen tell us, then, that in enacting this tax law we are violating the Constitution? Well, Mr. Chairman, if we are, I will take my part, and I hope you will take your part in violating the Constitution in voting for the passage of this bill.

That might have been considered a slip; but later on he said:

If it (oleomargarine) is so unwholesome that when advertised no man will buy it, I shall have no sorrowing over my share in the violation of the Constitution of my country by the vote I shall give in favor of this bill, and that should not afford a reason why it should not be taxed.

It gives me pain, Mr. Chairman, to hear distinguished gentlemen talk in that way about the Constitution of the country. As I understand it, when one has a doubt about the Constitution authorizing a particular vote, he should give the benefit of that doubt in favor of the constitutional limitations upon which the American system is founded.

If he can say, when his constituents wish a thing done, he will take it to be constitutional, and if it be a violation of the Constitution will take his part in the violation, he with his great learning and ability may keep himself from harm, but his influence will teach the people to despise the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] further said, the fact that two-thirds of the States of the Union had passed bills to prevent the sale and manufacture of oleomargarine was an argument in favor of this bill. I reply that it is, on the contrary, an argument in favor of my position, that this is proper legislation if coming from a State, but at least doubtful legislation when coming from Congress.

I overheard the other gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] speaking this morning saying something about the "higher law." I could not catch the sentence, but I know of none higher than the Constitution. In it alone is the ark of safety for the weak against the powerful, for the poor against the rich, for private rights against monopoly and the greed of corporations. And that man who would deprive me of that weapon in the fight for my rights, either by breaking it from my hand or blunting its edge, is a public enemy.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] further said:

It has always been conceded by every statesman, or less, who has ever discussed a tax law, that it was proper to discriminate in favor of, protect, if you please, one industry if it needed it as against another.

It has never been conceded by anybody, whether "statesman, or less," that such things were proper. But that the gentleman may not be misunderstood, I again emphasize his position by reading another sentence of his speech:

I refer to it again and urge it as a power that we have, as a duty that is imposed upon us here, to so legislate, so tax, that industries of this kind—industries which ought not to prosper, industries that if we had the power, the constitutional power, we ought to strike down and out of existence—should pay their proportion of the taxes for the support of this Government.

As I understand him, he has quit the system of levying customs duties to protect our industries from foreign competition, and comes now within our own realm, and declares that whenever Congress thinks one industry bad it may make it extinct by a vote on this floor and the Senate of the United States. Such a doctrine to me is monstrous.

The first speech which I ever had the honor of delivering in this House was in part against the report of the Committee on Patents, which received no favor here, in which they used this language:

It is the paramount interest of the Government to protect innocent purchasers of manufactured goods from deceptions, frauds, and countless impositions.

I replied:

That is not true. This Government has naught to do with the protection of purchasers of manufactured goods. It ought not to have; that work properly belongs to the several States.

And so the House voted. But I will not rest entirely upon my own opinion, nor do I care to go back to the Supreme Court reports, which are full of authority upon this subject, but I wll ask the Clerk to read an extract from a speech delivered on the 2d October, 1820, at Faneuil Hall by "the Great Expounder." The Clerk will read the passage marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

He certainly thought it might be doubted whether Congress would not be acting somewhat against the spirit and intention of the Constitution in exercising a power to control essentially the pursuits and occupations of individuals in their private concerns, a power to force great and sudden changes both of occupation and property upon individuals, not as incidental to the exercise of any other power, but as a substantive and direct power. If such changes were wrought incidentally only, and were the necessary consequence of such impost as Congress, for the leading purpose of revenue, should enact, then they could not be complained of. But he doubted whether Congress fairly possessed the powers of turning the incident into the principal, and instead of leaving manufactures to the protection of such laws as should be passed with a primary regard to revenue, of enacting laws with the avowed object of giving a preference to particular manufactures with an entire disregard to all considerations of revenue; and instead of laying such imposts as would best answer the purpose of raising revenue with the least burden on the public, carrying the impost on certain articles to a burdensome excess with a full knowledge that the increase of duty will diminish the amount of revenue raised.

Mr. Chairman, that is the declaration of Webster, that when one comes to vote for a tax bill the question is put to his conscience, "Is the tax needed—shall I vote for this bill to raise the tax?" If it is a bill honestly intended to raise the tax, all right; but if it is a bill to strike down one industry in favor of another, it is all wrong. 'Choose ye this day whom ye will follow, God or Baal"—Webster or Hiscock.

I yield five or ten minutes, as he may desire, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. The first time I had the honor to address this House in the first Congress to which I was elected I denounced the whole system of internal revenue, its means of collection, its enlargement of power of the courts of the Government, and the system of espionage by which it was conducted and collected. This bill is a bill for internal revenue, and my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] says that a convention of men engaged in the production of butter have intimated to this House that the butter produced called oleomargarine is impure and its sale should not be permitted. And if all the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] says is true, it is poison to all the people who use it.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and will advocate it to the extent of a fair and just examination as to any article of food used by the people of this country; but I am opposed to excluding that article of food from the people of the country by means of taxation. Taxation is a burden upon the people. Legislation should not be made to tax an article out of existence if it contributes to the general welfare of the people or the enjoyment of life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness. The question should be dealt with in a fair, open, and manly manner. If this is an evil, correct it in the proper manner. Do not meet it by the imposition or indirection of an onerous tax, but let this Government go straight to the mark; and if there is in this country produced an article of food which the poor will buy that is injurious to health or spreads contagion, as the gentleman from New York has said, let us legislate it out of existence by an examination such as the bill provides for and by adopting measures that will prevent its being given to the people.

It is true the dairymen did hold a convention. They wished to advance their side of the question. That is to their profit and their business. It will be to their profit if they can exclude this article from competition with their industry. Mr. Chairman, we are all mortal; and in the struggle for wealth, and power, and consequence it is not strange that the men who produce butter should combine in their convention and indicate to this House what they should do to exclude from the use of the people an article which gives cheap butter to those who can not buy their dear, expensive production.

I know full well how much the farmer has done for this country. I know equally well how much he has developed the resources of the new country dedicated to the people from the overflow of the Eastern States by the States of Virginia, North Carolina, and Connecticut, and the almost prophetic wisdom of the purchase by Mr. Jefferson of the vast territories from France which make up the homes of so many American citizens. All that may be true; but, Mr. Chairman, there are not cows enough in America to supply all the people with butter, unless you put it at a price the poor man in his necessities can not reach from the means of the payment of his labor. The best butter in Pennsylvania sells for a dollar a pound. It is purchased by the wealthy. In the butter produced all over this country there is an admixture of potatoes and carrots and beets, which give it weight and color. Why not inquire into that? By a process now patented people can take stale, rancid butter and convert it into what seems like a good article of food. Why not go for that? If you go down to the market and find a man who sells the butter made in this way, if he is an honest man he will tell you, "I will sell you butter with 60 per cent. of milk and 40 per cent. of lard, and I defy the most refined and exquisite palate—the palate of a member of Congress—to detect the difference between that butter selling at 15 cents and the butter selling at 25 cents."

Lard is not unwholesome. You all use lard; if you do not now you used it in your early life. It is used in cooking every day. And where a man is not able to buy butter at an extravagant price he will use the lard. Lard is wholesome, except to the Hebrew. [Laughter.] All of you in your boyhood used lard. You fried your potatoes, &c., in the lard. And the poor man to-day uses the lard because in its cooking properties it is equal to butter. When you get the lard mixed with the milk you get butter, and not the unwholesome compound productive of the contagious diseases which the distinguished gentleman from New York represents.

Mr. Chairman, a convention of dairymen has been heard upon this subject; let us now have a convention on the other side of the question. As to the dairymen, of course they have consulted their own interests. That is inevitable. It is an infirmity of humanity. We are all selfish, and the dairymen, notwithstanding the simplicity of their pastoral life, are not exempt from the common weakness. They meet together and propose that this article of cheap food shall be excluded from the market. In that they consult their own interest. But turn now to the other class who are chiefly interested in this question, the laboring men of the country. They want butter as much as you gentlemen do; they buy this butter and subject it to the severest examination, and they find it acceptable food. Now, I say if this food is impure, if it is unwholesome, if it breeds disease, let us so declare, and legislate accordingly. But let not this great Government attempt to tax this food out of existence.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the whole system of internal taxation is wrong, unjust, and not needed by this Government, and I do most decidedly object to making any addition to it. And as to the quality of this food, after all, Mr. Chairman, it is the American man who must judge of what he shall eat and give to his family. The average American man is quite capable of judging whether butter made in this manner is good or bad for him—whether it is a wholesome article of food or whether it is a source of contagious disease. With my experience of life I am willing to submit that to every American citizen as what is best for himself and family, and the Congress of the United States can neither regulate his independence of action nor appetite. I admit, however, that it is the right and duty of the Government to inquire into the wholesomeness of this food, and to make the inquiry as strict as may be, but even if investigation shows that it is not fit food for the people, let us not attempt to destroy it by taxing it out of existence. The more you tax the American man the less he likes it. [Laughter.] As to food, there is a great variety of taste. When I was abroad I saw a man on the Neva, from the frozen regions of the North, eat a tallow candle, and he looked as happy and cheerful and complacent and smiled as pleasantly as my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and my colleague from Pennsylvania would after an elaborate dinner at Delmonico's. [Laughter.]

Let us not attempt to regulate this matter by taxation. I admonish my friends on this floor that there is in this country an organization numbering a million of members which meets in convention to-day in the city of Cleveland. Thank God the proceedings of that great organization—republican in form, within the Constitution and the law, conservative in all its operations—will be controlled by my friend Powderly, and its action will be in the interest of labor in this country without interfering with the rights of capital. Now, that organization desires that this legislation shall not pass. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has told us that the seats of members have been piled high with literature recommending the passage of this bill. Sir, I have piles of literature opposing its passage, and I allege that if you enact the taxation which this bill proposes it will do much to deprive the members of the great organization to which I have referred of a necessary article of food; and I warn you if you pass this law that you do not provoke the hostility of the men who labor and require cheap food for themselves and families. [Applause.]

IMITATION-BUTTER PRODUCTS.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, when I had the honor of presiding over the deliberations of the Committee on Ways and Means of the Forty-seventh Congress two deputations appeared each several times before that committee to protest against the cheapening of certain food products. One of them was headed by a distinguished representative from New York, Mr. Jacobs, who claimed to represent the greatest dairy district of the country. He and the deputation he led appeared for the purpose of protesting against the manufacture of oleomargarine, and I have never forgotten one of his vigorous statements in support of a rate of taxation that would be prohibitory. It was that the manufacture of this objectionable article had reached such perfection that no test that could be applied by science or the human senses could distinguish it from the best gilt-edged butter ever produced from a churn.

It was not possible for me to abstain from asking him whether, if his statement were true, it did not establish the fact that oleomargarine was pure butter. I can not with propriety repeat the precise language of his reply admitting the truth of the suggestion, because it involved an unparliamentary expletive. [Laughter.]

The protest of the other deputation was against permitting the manufacture of sugar or sirup from corn or sorghum.

The allegation by which the demand for prohibitory taxation in this case was sustained was that sugar sirup from corn or sorghum was promotive of Bright's disease, and that we should avail ourselves of the taxing-power to prevent the production of these articles from anything but tropical cane. In each case the application was for an internal tax involving the use of a stamp on the cheaper commodity. I was then, as I am now, opposed to adding to the resources of a Treasury that so overflows with revenue as to require us to erect United States court-houses where no courts are held and custom-houses where no customs are collected, and the appointment of commissions to inquire whether the beds of certain supposed streams had better be deepened and broadened into navigable proportions or be so smoothed down to make the bed of a railroad. [Laughter.]

We do not want any additional revenue, and I agree with Thomas Jefferson, who earnestly and continuously protested that internal taxes were an infernal system and incompatible with a republican policy. Thus believing, I have from the day the war closed steadily demanded the repeal of internal taxes, and I will not now vote to establish one. Were I a member of a State Legislature whose treasury was empty I would vote for any law to ascertain the purity and regulate the sale of any of these new grades of butter. The subject belongs to State Legislatures and not to Congress. If, as the friends of this legislation insist, dairy butter and that article can not be distinguished by science or the human sense the people should have access to the cheaper article, and the State should see to it that adulteration be prevented; but it is not for the General Government to do it.

If we enter this field of regulation where will the end come? Can Congress prohibit men of science from making new discoveries? Can it prohibit ingenuity from making new inventions? Can it deliberately assume as a duty resistance to mental and material progress?

I am opposed to all such schemes, sir. My legislative life draws to its close. Its best and ripest years have been devoted to the promotion and development of a system the tendency and effect of which is to utilize all the material resources of my country and in developing them and bringing them into useful forms, to provide employment for the idle, to give remunerative industry and independence of character to every man and woman, to quicken every faculty which may be made useful to its possessor and available in a country of highly diversified industries and therefore of manifold employments for the people. And having devoted my mature life and the energy of my concluding years to this labor, I will not vote to add to the corrupting overflow in our Treasury in order to say that our material resources shall not be further developed, that our people shall not have cheap food and that employment may not be created for intelligent girlhood, vigorous manhood, and old age—employment adapted to the necessities of each period of life.

In conclusion, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] for his courtesy in giving me this time, and I desire so far as I heard his remarks this morning to say "ditto" to the gentleman from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I recognize the compliment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with pleasure. I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, Chief-Justice Marshall well said, the power to tax is a power to destroy. It is that attribute of the taxing power which is invoked by the friends of this bill. It is not their desire to carry out the objects of the framers of the Constitution, to impose taxes to raise revenue to carry on the administration of government. Our fathers supposed when they were creating this Federal Government and prescribing the limitations to its powers that they were creating a government to take care of our people in all controversies with foreign peoples, and a government that would determine all differences between the several States and the citizens of the several States. They believed they were able to establish a government that would guard the rights of all, protect the lives, liberty, and property of all, and protect all in the pursuit of happiness.

The corner-stone upon which they erected the edifice was the virtue which they supposed would reside in the hearts of their children. They knew well if the limitations which they prescribed against the encroachments of power were not to be preserved the Constitution would prove but a rope of sand. When the power of taxation is invoked not to raise revenue but as an engine of destruction to crush out a legitimate industry, and when Congress responds to that invocation and abuses the power of taxation and blots out of existence a branch of industry that for the time may be unpopular or less popular than its rival, that virtue which was supposed would keep the covenants of the Constitution is gone. When we have so far retrograded that we refuse to observe these landmarks of right, there is nothing left but the code of the highwayman that might makes right.

The Supreme Court told us a few years ago that the power to tax is the power to raise revenue for public purposes; and when it is used for any other purpose it is legalized robbery. They said to take from one man and give to another by taxation was not legislation but a decree of confiscation.

Sir, if I were in the Legislature of my State, and this subject should be brought before it, I would do as my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] said that his State had done: I should favor compelling the manufacturers of this product to brand it with a stamp showing its real character, to expose it, so that all fraud would be eliminated from it, and if the people with the facts before them want to buy and eat the oleomargarine they will do it with a full knowledge of what it is, or they can let it alone.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not what this measure proposes. You are not protecting the people against a fraud, but you are proposing to use the power of the Government to do what under the Constitution you have no right to do—that is, to destroy one industry of the country in the interest of another.

It is that feature of the bill to which I object, and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is unnecessarily alarmed about the revenue to flow into the Treasury under the operation of this bill. Not a farthing is to come from it. It is not designed to produce a dollar of revenue. Not one cent can be extorted for purposes of revenue from this industry; but this will follow when the bill becomes a law. When it shall have passed both Houses of Congress and is signed by the President, its purposes will then have been accomplished and the industry of the manufacture of oleomargarine will be a dead corpse in this country. It is not intended by its friends to produce revenue. They are frank enough to acknowledge it.

They do not deny that it will not produce a cent of revenue; but they seek to abuse the power intrusted to them for the preservation of the Government, and by its abuse to destroy one of the legitimate industries of the country. If you can destroy this industry, you can destroy any other by abusing the power of taxation.

Mr. HAMMOND. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] long enough to have a dispatch read.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to have read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 24, 1886.

J. S. NEGLEY, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Grain and Flour Exchange of the City of Pittsburgh, Pa., held May 24, 1886, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved by the board of directors of the Grain and Flour Exchange of the City of Pittsburgh, Pa., That the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine specially branded as such is legitimate and lawful business, and an industry which by providing cheap and wholesome food is in the line of American enterprise and American progress, and we hereby earnestly protest against any action by Congress tending in any way to depress or discourage this important industry.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

B. MCCRACKEN, President.
JAS. A. HENDERSON, Secretary.

Mr. HAMMOND. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained by my deep convictions of the impolicy and impropriety of the passage of this bill to enter my protest against it. It presents itself to the House in an extraordinary attitude—a revenue bill coming from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana (from his seat). And for revenue only.

Mr. TUCKER. No, not for revenue at all, but for damnation to an industry in this country. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, is this a revenue bill or is it something else? I put the question to every man's own conscience here, as I put it to my own: Do I vote for this bill, if I vote for it at all, for the purpose of raising revenue to support the Government; and if I do not for the purpose of raising revenue, but for the purpose of raising none, and in order to destroy an industry of the country, then I ask the question, if I use the taxing power to destroy an industry which I may not do directly, what right have I, by an evasion of constitutional obligations, to attempt to do through the taxing power what I admit I can not do by any direct action of the Government?

Do we need the revenue? Why, sir, during the last six months of the year the imports of this country have been forty millions more than for the corresponding six months in the last year, and that would be eighty millions increase in one year. At 40 per cent. it would raise an increased revenue in this country amounting to $32,000,000. There are two hundred millions of oleomargarine made in this country, by the report of my friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]; 10 cents on that is $20,000,000 more. With an overwhelming Treasury, why put twenty millions more into it?

Ah, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] said this morning, the tax will not add to the revenue of the Government, but will destroy the production of an article; furthermore, we do not need the revenue. Very well, sir; then if you do not want the revenue for building fortifications, as the gentleman said, what do you want it for?

Mr. ROWELL (from his seat). For a navy.

Mr. TUCKER. You want it for the purpose of destroying the production.

Now I put it again to gentlemen, could you by law pass an act preventing the production of oleomargarine in any State of this Union? A man in the city of Boston makes oleomargarine and sells it to a citizen of Boston who consumes it in Boston; and I want to know if there is any power in the Congress of the United States to prevent that from being done in Massachusetts.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir, if you will take it out of somebody's fifteen minutes other than mine. Go on, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I want to know what impropriety there is in taxing this article; and if already we have too much revenue, and this should yield more than is desirable, what impropriety is there in reducing the internal taxation upon other articles, and reduce the taxes also upon imported articles?

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, sir; if the gentleman will go with me in a motion I shall make at the proper time to commit this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, we can then bring in a bill to reduce the duties on foreign imports and take off the tax on tobacco and put it on oleomargarine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Would not that still further increase the revenue?

Mr. TUCKER. If you take the tax off tobacco you take off $26,000,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is true as regards the tax on tobacco, but not as to the other matter.

Mr. TUCKER. That taking off the duty will not increase the revenue? You get the increase by the tax on oleomargarine.

Mr. KELLEY. But we do not want an increase.

Mr. TUCKER. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will not expect me to go now into the old argument with him on that question, for we agree so delightfully upon it.

Mr. KELLEY. It would refresh our younger brethren to hear it.

Mr. TUCKER. I am very willing they should. There is such a reduction of duty when the point of maximum revenue is passed as will increase the revenue. When you get the duties below the maximum revenue point, the reduction of duties will decrease the revenue.

Mr. KELLEY. And will bring bankruptcy to the manufacturer and idleness to the laborer.

Mr. TUCKER. As some of your friends are proposing to do with reference to the manufacture of oleomargarine, by turning out of employment those who are now engaged in that manufacture.

But returning back from that old controversy into which I was about being betrayed, I will say there is the germ in this bill of a power claimed for Congress of interfering in all the industries of all the States. It is in fact exercising such a power if you lay a tax merely for the purpose of destroying the production of the article. My friend from Pennsylvania [Governor CURTIN] said this morning he would rather be in favor of a direct law to prevent its production. Now if you have that direct law to prevent the production of the article, why could you not pass a law to prevent the production of any other article that may be produced in any other State? I say, therefore, this bill in its purpose and object is directed to the creation of a power in Congress which shall regulate all the industries of the country in all the States, and put down any one that comes under its ban.

Now, sir, my view of this whole question is this: We live under a Government the wisest that was ever constructed by the wit of man. I believe in this Constitution of ours as the grandest monument of human wisdom. But it is grand in this, that all the interests that belong in common to the whole country are to be regulated here, while the local interests and the local industries are to be regulated by the States in the localities where they exist. The instant you bring the local interests which are in the States within the power of the General Government then you destroy not only State autonomy, but you destroy individual interests all over the country. I am opposed to it. I am opposed to this bill not on any technical constitutional ground, but on the broadest constitutional ground, that it breaks down the line of demarkation between Federal and State power completely, and gives all the power over these industries and employments in the States to this Government.

You say this is a tax. Gentlemen have asked me and they asked my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] the other day, Do you not believe this tax is constitutional? Yes; I believe that Congress has the power to lay the tax on oleomargarine. For what purpose? To raise revenue. Can you use a power—I put it to any gentleman here who has ever been a trustee—can you use a power delegated to you as a trustee for a certain purpose for some other purpose that is denied to you in the trust? Can you use that as a weapon to destroy some industry that is not within your power merely because you have that weapon to use for the purpose of raising revenue? The question to me is too plain. I do not mean to judge for any other man's conscience, but I mean to say that honestly I could not vote for such a use of the power, because to use a power given to me for one purpose in order to accomplish another purpose that I have no power to subserve is really dishonest. It is evading my constitutional obligation to excercise a power which was never given me for the purpose at all for the purpose of accomplishing an object not confided to me by the Constitution.

Mr. BURROWS. Would it annoy the gentleman if I should interrupt him to refer him to a decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. TUCKER. A decision of the Supreme Court is rather long to come into my fifteen minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire only to call his attention to one point.

Mr. TUCKER. I will take the gentleman's reference and give my decision afterward. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], to the continuance of this internal-revenue system. I am opposed to it because in its very nature it is inquisitorial. It claims to look at any particular article or any particular interest in a State and say "we will select that as the object of our taxing power." It arranges an enormous machinery, by which the whole of that industry, the tobacco industry, the whisky industry, for instance, is put under the surveillance—by the bye, that word is in this bill—under the surveillance of the internal-revenue system. I am opposed to that system as a system, and I say the tendency to its increase is an alarming feature of the times in which we live. Here is an industry which you say is dangerous, deleterious, injurious to the health. Is tobacco injurious to health? You tax that, but you tax it for revenue. Is whisky injurious to health? Yes; you tax that, but you tax it for revenue. For when you laid the tax at $2 and it prevented production, you lowered it to 90 cents to go partners with the whisky distiller and make more money out of it than he did.

You do not lay the tax on whisky or on tobacco to prevent the production. But you do on oleomargarine. Why should you not lay it on butter? Why not say if a man makes pale butter out of poor milk it should be marked and a tax laid on it?

A MEMBER. The color would show that.

Mr. TUCKER. But they put the coloring matter in it and then you can not tell the difference; and this bill says if the butter is made from milk whatever coloring is put in it is all right. Now in order to prevent fraud by the seller on the purchaser I would be in favor of marking and branding the thing you sell. But the power to do that is full and complete in the States of the Union and in the municipalities of the Union.

Why, the city of Cincinnati, or the city of Baltimore, or the city of Philadelphia, or any other city can pass a law that if a man brings butter or oleomargarine into the market he shall brand it so that every one who buys it shall know what he is buying? Now, suppose he does know what he is buying. They say it costs 7 or 8 cents a pound to make oleomargarine, and that when it is well made you can not tell it from butter. The dealer who sells it, properly branded, to the poor man who says, "I can not afford to buy that beautiful print butter, because it costs 35 cents or 40 cents a pound, but I will buy this other article at 15 or 20 cents a pound." "No," says the Government, "the poor man shall not buy that kind of butter unless he pays an additional tax of 10 cents a pound." But what about the rich man who buys the butter? Oh, he goes scot-free. Therefore I say your tax is laid upon the poor man, not upon the rich.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAMMOND yielded his remaining time, two minutes, to Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to say further that some time ago a number of bills of this character were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I thought it was a strange place to send those bills.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It seems so now. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. But it was not at all more strange to send those bills there than it was to send a revenue bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We will see about that.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, you will see about that. Why did gentlemen vote to send this bill to the Committee on Agriculture? Why, sir, it was a declaration by the friends of the bill that it was not a revenue measure at all, but a bill to break down a particular industry in this country.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I made the motion to send the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, and I will answer the gentleman's question, if he desires.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman may answer it in his own time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If you do not want it answered, all right.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, I do want it answered, but not in my time. You have plenty of time of your own.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to claim that there is anything in the report that is worth anybody's reading, but when those bills were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary the committee said they should lie upon the table because the subject was not a proper one for them to act upon, and the opinion of the committee was given in a report which I have before me and which I ask leave to print with my remarks.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman will perhaps correct his statement by saying the opinion of some of the committee.

Mr. TUCKER. The honorable gentleman from New York is the only member of the committee whom I understood to dissent from the opinion.

Mr. PARKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, it is due to other gentlemen of the committee to say that they have regretted that they did not join in that dissent.

Mr. HEPBURN. When that matter was considered it was not in a full committee.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, I will say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that no matter has been considered there in a full committee for a long time, because he has been absent quite often. [Laughter.] However, Mr. Chairman, I desire to print the report with my remarks as my views upon this subject.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It does not appear that it was so very unanimous after all.

Mr. TUCKER. I never said that it was unanimous. I said it was the action of the committee, and nobody denies that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] printing a report as part of his remarks?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report, to accompany bills H. R. 4809, 4171, 4172, and 1054:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom have been referred House bills 4809, 4171, 4172, and 1054, ask leave to report:

The questions submitted by these bills to this committee are of great importance, and involve the fundamental principles of the Constitution.

For our purpose the evil consequences to the regular producer of butter or any other article by the permission of a product by the spurious competitor, and even the results to health of the people, may be conceded. The contention is not as to the existence of the disease, but what is the remedy, and by what authority is it to be applied?

Your committee do not think that the evil complained of can find its remedy from what Congress can do, except as hereafter stated. The legislation, if proper, must be sought from the States.

No grant of power to Congress in express terms or by fair inference from express grant can be found which would authorize any law by Congress to prevent the production of anything by a person in a State of the Union. Congress may have some power over production in the District of Columbia, or where its power of exclusive legislation extends, or in the Territories. But the power to forbid the production of butter, or wheat, or tobacco in a State will scarcely be asserted by any one.

Questions which concern the production of the soil or otherwise, the health and well-being of the people of the State, belong to that large class which, for want of a better name, has been termed the police power.

The powers of Congress refer to the foreign relations of the State, to their relations inter se, and do not pass within the confines of that interior life which constitutes the being and the civilization of a commonwealth. These are subjects for State legislation. A stranger to these local interests and internal concerns, under our system, must not intermeddle with them.

The evil to result from the exercise of the power as to oleomargarine is not seen by one who looks only to the extermination of the unwholesome product, but dairymen would readily perceive it if the power were directed against the production of butter. The question, then, of power is the primary one.

The concession will be made by most constitutional lawyers that Congress can not directly forbid the production of this or any other article in a State. But there are two modes in which it is supposed that Congress may operate on such a product; these methods are indirect.

First it is said that Congress may act upon it through the power to regulate commerce; and second, that as it may tax any article, it may tax oleomargarine, and so heavily as to put a stop to its production. Let us examine these in their order:

First, The power to regulate commerce is one of the most valuable and important of all those granted to Congress. It had two prominent objects; affirmatively, to give to the Federal Legislature the control of foreign and interstate commerce; and negatively, to take it from the States. The use of it by the States, under the confederation, put restrictions on trade and intercourse, and created inequalities between the States, which it was believed the Federal Government would not do if the power were vested in Congress.

It is an interesting phase of this discussion, whether the purpose to deny to the States this important power was coupled with a purpose to give to Congress the power to do all that is intended to be denied to the States. For example, it is clear that a State may not prohibit the transit or admission of the ordinary products of another State through or into its territory. But does it follow that Congress may do so? May not the absence of right in the State to do so rest upon another clause of the Constitution which gives equivalent privileges and immunities in every State to citizens of every other with its own citizens?

Your committee are not aware that it has ever been asserted for the power to regulate commerce that it involved a power to prohibit the free transportation of the products of each State through and into every other; and it could hardly have been within the minds of the framers of the Constitution to give to Congress the power to do so, when history shows that the purpose of giving the power to Congress and taking it from the States was to prevent the very result which this construction of the clause would involve and bring about. Be this as it may, no such power under this clause has been heretofore claimed, and has in regard to the interstate slave trade, been denied by the dicta of eminent judges. (Groves vs. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 449.)

It may be within the meaning of this clause to require such needful regulations as to articles transported from State to State as will conserve the safety and well-being of the transportation, but the right to say what articles shall and what shall not be the subject of commerce is not included in the regulation of the commerce in such articles. The transportation of the article is the commerce in that article; the regulation of that transportation does not touch the right to transport the article under the regulation. Freedom as to the articles to be transported is reserved to the citizen; its transportation, as to mode, &c., is subject to the regulation of Congress.

And this is the more clear because the judicial decisions have never impinged upon the power of each State to control the right of its citizens as to food clothing, &c., under what is called its police powers, and the right of Congress to enact anything like sumptuary laws for the States is nowhere granted, was expressly refused by the convention (3 Mad. Papers, 1369, 1370) and has never been seriously claimed in this first century of our constitutional history.

Your committee therefore do not think that Congress can, as a regulation of commerce, forbid or restrain the free transportation of any article from one State into another. It can regulate its transportation for its safety and for the safety of other articles or persons transported in the same or annexed vehicles provided for their carriage.

The question remains whether, under a regulation of commerce, a duty or tax may be laid upon it. Clearly not, when carried from place to place within a State, for that is not interstate commerce in the article. But how when carried from one State to another?

Regulations of commerce and revenue are wholly distinct in constitutional language. The first clause of Article I, section 8, gives the revenue power to Congress. The third clause of the same gives the regulation of commerce to Congress. In Article I, section 9, clause 6, the phrase "regulation of commerce or revenue" is used, thus emphasizing the distinction. In the convention, at one time, the revenue power was left to be exercised by a majority vote of Congress, the regulation of commerce by a two-thirds vote.

These facts, and the preconstitutional and revolutionary assertion of this distinction, leave no reason to doubt that it was never intended that Congress should lay any tax or duty on the transport of an article from one State to another. Nothing in the debates of the Federal convention, nor in those of the States ratifying the Constitution, nor in the Federalist, gives any shadow of claim to this power, and such a construction of the clause has never been asserted in any act of Congress or in any serious proposition to that effect.

Your committee therefore conclude that under the power to regulate commerce no power to forbid, restrain, or tax any product of industry is conferred on Congress.

Second. It remains to inquire whether oleomargarine or any other product may be subjected to an internal-revenue tax.

If the power to lay taxes (Const. U. S., Art. I, secs. 8 and 9) involves the power in Congress to select any article for excise or other tax, as seems to be now settled by the practice of the Government (and no doubt properly so settled), then the right to tax oleomargarine is undoubted.

But your committee are constrained to add that this is a revenue power. The right "to lay" is conjoined with that "to collect taxes," and the right to lay and collect is conjoined with the purpose "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare." The power is conferred in order to the duty imposed on Congress. It is a trust power, and becomes a right only when used for the purpose in view. The tax is the means to the end, and is only legitimate and rightful when needful for the end.

To use the tax when needless for revenue merely to strike down a product or an industry is to abuse a constitutional trust; and while the power may be conferred, the right to use it in such case can not be asserted. All power under our system is trust power; to use it for the trust makes it a rightful power; to use it diverso intuitu is wrongful perversion and abuse of power, and is contrary to the Constitution. In other words, as Congress can not forbid the production of an article in a State by direct legislation, it can not use a power conferred for another purpose to destroy and prevent such production. To do by indirect means what it could not do by direct legislation would be an unworthy evasion of constitutional limitations, which can not be sanctioned by an enlightened construction of the Constitution.

It is true that in such case the judicial power may not be able to declare such taxation void, because the judge dare not look into the intents of the legislator's breast, but the legislator who so abuses his trust and wrongfully misuses power can not avoid responsibility to his own conscience, bound as it is to support the Constitution; for by personal introspection he will find his motive not to be a tax for revenue to the Government, but a tax as a means of destruction to the product subjected to it; that is, tax used as an instrument of destruction and not as a means of revenue.

Your committee therefore think that Congress may lay the tax, if it be needed for revenue, but does it against right if only to restrain and destroy the use and sale of the article in question.

Your committee will now proceed to consider these various bills in detail.

Bill H. R. 4809 is broad in its terms and makes it unlawful and a misdemeanor for any person or corporation to make or sell any adulterations or imitations of food anywhere, and punishes it by fine and imprisonment. If this were passed all the industries engaged in food production in every State would be subject to the absolute power of Congress. This claims the direct power for Congress to permit or prevent production, to allow or to destroy it, and to regulate all sales and transfers of any such product in a State. Unless your committee have greatly erred in the views presented this bill is clearly unconstitutional.

Bill H. R. 4172 limits the power to the District of Columbia, forts, &c., and to the Territories, and while not forbidding production or sale, requires notice of the nature of the article to be labeled upon it. This bill does not conflict with the Constitution, as exclusive legislative power is vested in Congress over these places, except the Territories, and the power to govern these last is fully recognized as in Congress. Your committee, however, do not recommend its passage. The policy of this legislation is more proper for other committees, and is hardly within the jurisdiction of this committee except upon the inquiry as to power to pass it.

The same general remarks apply to H. R. 4171. The question of power is settled as to places by the considerations applied to H. R. 4172. But the bill is indefinite in the description of the offenses, and dangerous in the powers conferred on the so-called sanitary board, and the effect given to their reports. The bill should be carefully restrained in its operations, the offenses accurately defined, and the reports of the said board be allowed no such effect against the property, liberty, or other rights of the citizen. The policy of this bill is not proper for the consideration of this committee, and should be referred to some other.

Bill H. R. 1054 is liable to the objection that it, under the apparent purposes to regulate interstate commerce, forbids the commerce between the States in certain articles. It strikes at the articles, and does not regulate commerce in them. It is not a regulation of commerce, but a destruction of all commerce in certain condemned articles.

Its other provisions for enforcing the law and defining the offenses are not satisfactory, but these are more proper for the consideration of some other committee of the House.

Your committee therefore report back bills H. R. 4809, 4171, 4172, and 1054 with a recommendation that they do lie upon the table.

Mr. FREDERICK. Mr. Chairman, the rich prairies of the West can not be maintained in their fertility if grain-raising is the only industry, and if they could be commerce has extended by water and rail to the ends of the earth, bringing the grain-raising of the West into competition with the cheaper transportation and labor of India and other countries, thus necessitating the pursuit of other productive industries.

If the fertility of the Western prairies is to be maintained cattle-breeding, grazing, and feeding, together with the dairy, must be a leading industry. And, sir, the State of Iowa, being the second State in the number of head of cattle and second in valuation, the dairy business is of vital importance to the people whom I represent. The butter and cheese manufactured by them is a large source of revenue, and any interference with this industry is a very serious matter to them. Many are poor and on small farms, and rely almost entirely on the golden issue of the churn for the common necessities and comforts of life. Iowa has 2,613,063 head of cattle, of which 992,313 are cows, which have decreased in valuation in the last two years $10 per head, amounting to $9,923,130, on account of the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine. A gentleman from Fort Dodge, Iowa, told me a few days ago that one year ago he bought cows for a dairy at an average price of $36 per head; this year he again bought for the same purpose at an average price of $26 per head, showing an actual decrease of $10 per head.

These are startling facts, and all on account of the fraud perpetrated by the manufacturers and dealers in the imitation of the dairy product. The dairy industry in the State, amounting to $13,797,327, has depreciated at least 20 per cent., amounting to $2,759,465; this, together with the depreciation in price of cows, amounts to the fabulous sum of $12,682,595. This fraudulent manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine is carried on by such men as Armour & Co., of Chicago, who have already grown rich at the expense of the farmers and stock-growers of the West, and are able to live in luxury, and only wish to add to their already fabulous wealth by robbing the farmer and honest laborer of their deserved reward. Little do they care for the distress and want they cause all over the land, and the many little children on the farm and in the agricultural districts that may suffer for the commonest comforts of life, so long as their own are raised in the lap of luxury. It is the manipulation of the wealth of the earth by the few to the detriment of the many. They say oleomargarine and butterine are the poor man's food.

This is an insult to the poor and laboring classes. Where is the man, be he ever so poor, who will buy a compound of villainous mixtures knowingly for food for his family? Not one exists. At least so far the manufacturers of oleomargarine and butterine have failed to show that any one ever bought and used it knowingly and claimed that it was a good and wholesome article of food. Even they themselves do not say that they use it on their tables; and Mr. Stearne, the advocate of this fraud before the Agricultural Committee, on being asked why they did not brand it so that the purchaser might know what it was, answered: "It would prejudice the sale of it." This reply shows that it would not sell to any one who knew what it was. The fact is, as shown by all testimony, that it will not sell when known. It has been tried on the markets in the city of New York, also in this city, and no one buys it knowing what it is, and only by deception and fraud can they carry out their nefarious schemes. By this gigantic fraud millions of farmers are defrauded of an honest business and grow poor; and millions of people are caused to eat the abominable compound. Had it been placed on the market for just what it is, there would never have been an objection to it.

Is it any wonder that the people all over the United States are petitioning this body and asking it for protection against the fraudulent imitation of their honest industry? The farmer and laborer, as a rule, are unsuspecting of fraud, and thinking men are honest many have been defrauded out of their business and homes. The speculator robs them of the small deposits they may have, and many are driven from their farms and their homes for debts which in all probability they could have paid were it not for these gigantic frauds and being robbed of the fair valuation of their labor. Many are in debt for half or more they are assessed for. How can this debt and these taxes be paid if they are robbed of their most productive industry? Give them the protection that is due to one of our greatest industries, that pays the taxes of the country, that keeps our Government in motion. This class of men should be treated like men and honestly and fairly dealt with. It is time this Government stopped fostering monopolies, frauds, and millions of capital that pays no tax, and imposing the whole burden upon labor and the producing classes. Capital pays very little tax; labor and realty pay almost all of it. Can we hold America as America if we do not protect her honest industries? There is no one objecting to this bill except the manufacturers of oleomargarine and butterine, and all circulars favoring the manufacturers of this substitute apparently come but from one source. There should be a law compelling all manufacturers of adulterated food of whatever kind to brand and to stamp it plainly, giving the name of the ingredients used and the relative proportions of each. Patents are issued for almost every description of adulterated food, and the law in regard to this matter should be revised.

The profits of farming are always a little less than the profits of other industries, and a larger proportion of the laboring classes are engaged in agricultural pursuits than any other industry, and therefore are entitled to that recognition and protection that they deserve as the producers of much of the wealth of this continent in the growing of the grain, raising the cattle that fill the markets of the world.

The manufacturer of adulterated food, or one who buys imitations of food of any kind and sells it to consumers without telling them what it is, endangers life by so doing. The introduction of poisons and compounds that are taken into the stomach under the name of various kinds of food is getting to be enormous; coffee, sugar, flour, sirups, butter, cheese, all kinds of jellies, and various other articles, are eaten daily by people who buy and pay a price for a genuine article, and the man who sells such truck is allowed to do so to the detriment of honest people who manufacture the genuine article.

Such offense should be punished by fine and imprisonment the same as any other crime. The honest farmer who makes a pure article of butter to sell has to go into the market and compete with imitations and adulterations manufactured out of lard and poisonous compounds that are dangerous to life, and the purchaser does not know what he is eating. For the protection of the farmer, who sells a pure article as well as the people who buy the imitation, there should be such laws as would compel manufacturers of all kinds of imitations or adulterations of food to brand every package, giving each ingredient contained therein; then let the purchaser take his choice, and no one will be to blame if he eats that which he knows not to be pure. Every one can not tell the inferior article from the genuine, and any person selling such food is as guilty of wrong as one who administers poison in a slow form to take the life of another. Each and every article of food should stand on its own merits, and every one knowingly selling them under guise or misleading the purchaser by misrepresentations should be punished the same as a horse thief.

What protection is there to an honest man who by the sweat of his brow is trying to make an honest living? Can he manufacture good butter and take it to market and compete with butter made out of cheap grease? Is there no protection for honesty? Who is there that would not pay more for a genuine article of butter than for what he knew was an inferior and adulterated article? Yet how will you tell which is the pure article unless it be branded and stamped, plainly telling what it is? There are men who would not willingly deceive the public, but there are many, I am sorry to say, who for the immense profit there is in it will use deception. And they must use deception to sell it. The agricultural people are the largest class of producers in this country, and their dairy interests are one of their most profitable industries, and by the imposition of this fraudulent imitation of butter that only adds to the wealth of monopolies and those already rich the dairy interests of the country are already depressed, and the loss to the industry is at least 25 per cent.; this is a fearful rate of reduction, and it will continue if not put under control. The growth of our population and the increase of our commerce are bringing to the front many questions affecting our laboring classes—questions of capital and labor that can not be thrust aside. This bill is of more importance to the industrial classes than anything else before this body, and I therefore hope that it will pass this House and become a law.

I yield twenty minutes to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have in addition twelve minutes, which have been yielded to me by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important question. In the production of the dairies of this country two and a half billions of dollars are invested. The butter produced in the United States amounts to something in excess of $250,000,000 in a year. In my own State it amounts to about $14,000,000 a year. The butter product in the United States exceeds in value the product of cotton; it exceeds in value the tobacco and sugar united. It is an important industry, and one which is entitled to the careful attention of this House; and when gentlemen sneeringly say that the use of two days for the discussion of a matter of such transcendent importance as this is a waste of the public time it seems to me that they do not properly estimate the interest that is involved here. We are told that this bill ought not to pass because (among other reasons) it has emanated from the wrong committee, the Committee on Agriculture.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have had one revenue bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, and I submit, at least to this side of the House, that the revenue bill that has come from the Committee on Agriculture is infinitely the superior of the two, and if we take the merits of the work performed by the two committees as the criterion of what they can do, I insist that hereafter the Committee on Agriculture should be intrusted with all the revenue measures of this House. [Laughter.]

We had yesterday a constitutional argument from the constitutional lawyer from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who always has a copy of the Constitution under his seat to whack over the head anybody's measure that he does not happen to like. The gentleman says that this bill upon its face—the bill as it is written—does not contravene any provision of the Constitution; but that when you take the terms of the bill, and add to them the arguments of its friends, it at once becomes unconstitutional. He says you must unite the argument that is made in support of the measure with the letter of the bill, and that when thus united they make an unconstitutional measure, and therefore he is opposed to it.

The gentleman says if it is a revenue measure, that is, if it produces revenue, it is constitutional; if it is prohibitory of the manufacture of oleomargarine then it ceases to be constitutional. Now, Mr. Chairman, suppose that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, on reporting his bill, had at once moved the previous question and the bill under the operation of the previous question had been passed without a solitary word of comment pro or con; then according to the gentleman from Texas it would have been a constitutional measure—entirely so. Again, supposing it to have been passed in that manner in this year, 1886, it would have been constitutional; but suppose that next year under the the operation of the tax and the very low price of butter, the manufacturers of the spurious article could not compete, but were obliged to go out of the business entirely, so that the production of oleomargarine would be absolutely destroyed, then in the year 1887, according to the gentleman from Texas, it is an unconstitutional measure.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not suppose the gentleman wishes to misstate my position. What I said was that taking the face of the bill itself and the arguments used in support of it, it was unconstitutional.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir; that is just the way I stated the gentleman's position.

In the year 1887, when the effect of the bill, we will suppose, is to prohibit the manufacture of oleomargarine, the bill becomes unconstitutional. But suppose the next year, on account of the withdrawal of 200,000,000 pounds of this spurious butter that is sold and used as butter, leaving in the market 1,000,000 pounds of good butter, the price of butter is enhanced, going up to 25 or 30 cents a pound. The manufacturer of the bogus article can then compete; he can make the article and pay the tax, so that there will be a revenue of $20,000,000 to the Government. Then the law becomes a constitutional measure!

So that according to the gentleman's argument the bill may be constitutional in 1886, unconstitutional in 1887, and again become constitutional in 1888. The bill is not constitutional or unconstitutional because of the nature of the enactments that it contains, but because of the price of butter! [Laughter.] When butter is high this law is constitutional; when butter is low and the manufacturer of oleomargarine can not compete and pay the tax, so that this manufacture is practically prohibited and destroyed, then the bill becomes unconstitutional again. So that it is butter and the price of butter that determines, according to the argument of the gentleman from Texas, the question whether this bill is constitutional or unconstitutional.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman a question on the constitutional view of the case. If it is in fact the purpose of the bill to tax this industry out of existence or make its prosecution impossible, I want to know whether the bill in that case is constitutional?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I am unable to answer the gentleman. I find here certain printed lines in the bill. I do not find in any of those lines any provision that contravenes the Constitution of the United States. Possibly there may be from this enactment a result different from that which I expect or that which the gentleman expects; but I do not know that any question as to the constitutionality of the bill ought to be determined because of a possible contingency which in the future may arise, and which now can not be with certainty foreseen or foretold.

But these gentlemen who are such extremists with regard to the Constitution have been accustomed to fluctuations of this kind all their lives. I would like to know what provision of the Constitution there is that the average Jeffersonian Democrat has not been willing to violate and has not violated when it suited his interests. You (addressing the Democratic side of the House) always do it. Why, within my recollection in this House there came here a gentleman from the State of Alabama with a proposition to take of the people's money $300,000 for the purpose of supporting the poor of Alabama, and some of the Jeffersonian Democrats on the other side of the House had no hesitation at all in voting for it.

Then, again, there is another proposition to appropriate $7,000,000 or $17,000,000 or $37,000,000, as the case may be, of the public money to build a railway far beyond our jurisdiction, in Tehuantepec; and many of the Jeffersonian Democrats of this House are able to vote for that proposition. You have no difficulty about that. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], with all his constitutional scruples, reported it. Here is another proposition: Your levees in the South need rebuilding, and under the pretense of improving a water way you are able to spend $1,800,000 of the people's money in building levees to protect your lands. You have always been able without apparent constitutional scruples to pass measures of this kind. Mr. Jefferson purchased Louisiana, himself admitting that he had no power under the Constitution to make the purchase, and insisting for a time that there should be a constitutional amendment to justify him in that act. But the Jeffersonian Democrats made progress in a little while. Sixteen years after that you violated—according to your view of it—the Constitution again in the purchase of Florida without any qualms of conscience and without any offer at all to improve and perfect the Constitution to justify your action, and in that trade gave Spain Texas and absolutely transferred the allegiance of native-born citizens of the United States to Spain, then the most tyrannical government on the face of the globe. We had then owned Texas for sixteen years. There were then native-born citizens of the United States fifteen years of age whose allegiance was sold to the Spanish Government—their allegiance transferred without any volition on their part. But there was no question of constitutional power in that case. You wanted to do it, and therefore you did it.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman tell me——

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not time to answer questions.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman tell us how the Constitution of the United States operates upon foreign nations?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not talking about its operations upon foreign nations, but of its operation upon the Jeffersonian Democracy of the United States, who at that time had charge of the Government. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. They just now are a foreign nation.

Mr. HEPBURN. A little later, in 1844, you had no difficulty in purchasing Texas.

Mr. OATES. I deny your doctrine and your history altogether.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, perhaps you have not sufficiently read the history of the country. Read, and you will know more about it. [Laughter.] If you will only take the time to read you will know as much about it as I or any one.

Mr. OATES. I have no doubt but I have read as much about the history of the country as the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. You had no difficulty at all about the purchase of Texas. You had no difficulty at all about the appropriation of $10,000,000 of the people's money in order to pay the debts of Texas.

Mr. OATES. This is the first time I ever heard that the United States purchased Texas. I thought it was an independent republic.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, you have read illy. We purchased Texas, or rather you Jeffersonian Democrats did, at a cost of fifteen thousand lives, at a cost of $150,000,000, at a cost of $10,000,000 paid directly to Texas, at a cost of $10,000,000 indemnity paid to Mexico directly for the territory we forced her to cede to us. You ought to have known something of this.

Mr. REAGAN. But the gentleman should not forget we acquired thereby Arizona, New Mexico, and other valuable and important territory.

Mr. HEPBURN. Who were benefited by it? Those who lived in Texas were permitted to come in as owners of the soil. It was not contributed to the general fund.

We have Arizona, have we? Well, we spend more money in the government of Arizona and New Mexico—in all those Territories—to survey the land than we ever have received from the sale of lands there.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How about California?

Mr. HEPBURN. How about what? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much have we got from California in the way of investment?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a matter of doubt, and the gentleman should know it, whether the people of the United States have been benefited one single dollar by the acquisition of California. For, sir, every dollar of gold of the $800,000,000 taken from the sand and mountains of California we have spent a dollar in the procurement of it. It has cost in actual labor and other expenditure everything that has been realized from the mines of California.

But I do not propose to digress in this way. I was simply illustrating by these references to the history of the country why the Jeffersonian Democrat could do whatever he pleased under the Constitution that inured to his benefit or to the benefit of his section.

Mr. OATES. Allow me to request that the gentleman before closing his speech will cite, or attach to his speech so it may be printed in the RECORD, where Thomas Jefferson ever said or wrote that he had no constitutional power to acquire the territory of Louisiana.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no question about that fact.

Mr. OATES. Then attach it to your speech when it comes to be printed, so that we may see what authority you rely upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, he sent a message to Congress asking for the passage of an amendment to the Constitution giving him that power and validating his act. Why, sir, that is the history of the country, and the gentleman should be familiar with it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am fully satisfied these gentlemen do not see the serious constitutional objection in the way of this bill that some of them would have us believe.

Mr. REAGAN. Does it satisfy the gentleman's conscience because others have violated the Constitution he also can do so?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not propose to violate the Constitution. I am not one of those, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, who can in the morning take an oath to support the Constitution and before night begin to plot against its integrity and seek to overthrow it. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have read the Constitution, and it has so impressed itself upon me that I do not think I can ever raise my hand against it. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. It is always the last resort of the gentleman from Iowa, when he is cornered in argument, to talk about the rebellion.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know and I do not care whether it is the first or last resort, but it is something men have the right to talk about. For, sir, it was the grand transcending theme of this century. It was the great crime of the century. It was the most useless and wicked expenditure of noble lives, of blood, and of treasure which men have ever indulged in in this century or in any other. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. Of course I am not going to enter into any discussion of the reasons which induced millions of honest men to peril their lives and all they had——

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not hear what the gentleman from Texas is saying, and I hope he will speak louder.

Mr. REAGAN. I state that I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the reasons which caused that rebellion and which induced millions of honest men to peril their lives and everything they had, and devoted women to pray for their success. But it seems they should be entitled to some consideration even at the hands of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I never questioned the devotion and sacrifice of the people—of the masses—in that rebellion. I never tried to array the condemnation of public opinion against them; but, sir, whatever I have said has been against the men who led them into that causeless rebellion, the men who took oaths to support the Constitution of the United States and then plotted against it, who led other men into the rebellion; they are the men, sir, who are deserving of the deepest execration.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not believe history will write it down that there were any such men as that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not catch the gentleman's remark.

Mr. REAGAN. I say I do not believe that such will be the verdict of history, that there was such a conspiracy. It was a movement, not of individual men, not by a conspiracy, but was the growth and outcome of a quarrel of thirty years of differences of opinion between the masses of the people, which culminated at that time as by a common impulse, and not as a conspiracy, in which the masses of the people were led by a few.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that during all of the months of 1860 and 1861, while the Congress of the United States was in session, there were men here, high in authority, who had taken the oath as officials of this Government, who were nightly plotting and devising, consulting with each other and with individuals in the States as to how they were going to destroy the Union? Is not that a part of the history of the country, I ask the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. It is, as everybody will understand, a fact, that on the eve of a great event like that, men on both sides were consulting as to how they were to be governed in their future movements; but that there was a conspiracy on the part of the leaders of the people I do not believe history will warrant the gentleman in saying.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah! but they were here consulting as to how to destroy the Constitution, these very men, high in authority, who had within sixty days before taken an oath to support it. I ask the gentleman were there not men of that kind?

Mr. REAGAN. My attention was drawn off while the gentleman was asking his question.

Mr. HEPBURN. But, Mr. Chairman, aside from this digression, it is said that this bill is against the interests of the poor man. I submit that that can scarcely be true, and I would ask any gentleman in this House if he has ever known of an instance where oleomargarine was sold as such. I ask if he has ever known of an instance where the purchaser did not pay the full price of a genuine article of butter whenever he has bought this counterfeit article?

Mr. LAWLER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWLER. I would answer the gentleman's question by saying that at this very time in the city of Chicago it is sold as such.

Mr. HEPBURN. At retail?

Mr. LAWLER. At retail.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know there is testimony to establish the fact that there is one citizen there who sells 9,000,000 pounds every year; and that may account for the zeal with which this measure is being opposed by certain gentlemen in the city of Chicago.

Mr. LAWLER. The health department in every large city in the country can regulate the sale of this commodity just as it is done in Chicago.

Mr. FREDERICK. And there never was a pound sold in Chicago for what it really was, not one. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. The gentleman is altogether mistaken, for we have passed ordinances regulating the sale of it in Chicago.

Mr. FREDERICK. There is none of it sold for what it is, for we have the testimony before us, which is conclusive.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa if he does not know the fact that in Pottsville, Pa., they are selling it by retail in open market under the name of "butterine?"

Mr. HEPBURN. I have never known an instance of any of it being sold except as butter.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me say to the gentleman, if he will permit me, as he was not present when the proof was taken in the committee, that it was fully established to our satisfaction that there is not 1 per cent. of the entire amount sold in the United States that is sold as oleomargarine, sold for what it really is.

Mr. HENDERSON, or Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. It was so admitted before the committee.

Mr. FREDERICK. The people of Chicago have got so used to fraud that they want to palm this stuff off upon the whole country. They have grown rich by just such means.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think I have yielded all the time I can spare.

Mr. LAWLER. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa, that Chicago to-day is one of the most healthy cities in the United States. The death rate is lower there than in any other city in the United States.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It went up a little the other day. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. Not a bit of it.

Mr. STRUBLE. With the certainty before them of going to hell, they don't want to die on that account. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. There are men getting fat making butterine right here in this city, within sight of the Capitol. You do not get pure butter here at all.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to know what this has got to do with the war?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is entitled to the floor and will be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that a gentleman occupying a seat on this floor has received from an association of cotton-seed oil manufacturers in the city of Memphis a very earnest appeal urging him to oppose, as best he can, and to the utmost of his ability, the passage of this act, for if it should happen that this bill becomes a law, that their industry, the manufacture of cotton seed oil, will receive a serious harm, and, as friends, they urge him to oppose the present legislation. Now, why is that? Simply because cotton-seed oil that costs 3 cents a pound can be converted into oleomargarine or any of these fraudulent butter products. It has been said here that the cost of making the article is from 7 to 8 cents a pound.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the very best article that is made, the best article of oleomargarine at the present price of tallow, 5 cents a pound, can be manufactured for between 6 and 7 cents a pound—the very best and purest that is made. If that is true then it can well afford to sustain the tax of 10 cents a pound. That will make its cost amount only to 16 or 17 cents in the market; still leaving a handsome margin to the manufacturer, for it almost invariably sells at the price of good butter. Men have been astonished by the sudden activity that has been inspired in opposition to this bill. Every member of this House has had his desk fairly weighted down by the resolutions of this cattle association, the cotton-seed oil manufacturing establishment, this board of trade. I am glad to say that the whole of this opposition emanates from a single house in the city of Chicago which manufactures 9,000,000 pounds of this bogus butter; and yet I am free to say that in my humble judgment it is the best and the purest that is made. Where it comes into competition with butter at 25 cents a pound, the manufacturer and retailer are enabled to have a joint profit of not less than 18 cents a pound, giving this Chicago manufacturer as the result of his production a revenue of a million each year.

Mr. Chairman, if this proposition that I have made as to the cost of this article is true, then it will be in the power of the manufacturer after the payment of his tax to come in fair competition with the butter that costs 16, or 17, or more cents a pound. If that be true then a revenue can be raised from this article.

But gentlemen say that the purpose of this act is to drive the article out of use, and they are unwilling to do that they tell us, but that they are entirely willing to indulge in such legislation as will mark, brand, define it. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is claimed by some that is as certain to drive it out of the market. I insist there is none of it, or comparatively none of it, that is sold under its own appropriate name. It is when it steals the name of the genuine article that it has a marketable value.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The gentleman states that none of this oleomargarine is sold as such. I will inform the gentleman that a law of the State of Florida requires that this oleomargarine shall be so branded, and it is sold in my State both wholesale and retail as oleomargarine,

Mr. HEPBURN. For axle grease or for butter?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As oleomargarine; and every State has the power to do what the State of Florida has already done.

Mr. BEACH. And the only people who buy it are the boarding-house keepers.

Mr. HEPBURN. The experience of the gentleman from Florida is different from mine. I have never seen an ounce of it knowing it to be such. I may have eaten my weight of it several times over, but not with my knowledge. I do not know but there are some varieties of these articles that are wholesome. I think I may say I have no doubt the pure article of oleomargarine may be entirely without deleterious qualities. But, Mr. Chairman, that is the exception. The proofs that have been taken in this investigation show there are more than a dozen articles that enter into the composition of this bogus butter. It has been shown in some instances it is made of articles that are known to be most deleterious to health; that they now have a process by which the most disgusting specimens of grease, filthy beyond description, are to a certain extent purified and made into the various forms of imitations of butter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FREDERICK. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] has promised to yield me thirty minutes of his time when he takes the floor as a member of the committee. I would be glad if I could use both the twenty minutes and the thirty minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have next to recognize in regular order some one in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then I will go ahead with my twenty minutes, trusting to the good temper of the House to extend to me the courtesy I have asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, I am very glad to say, is one that involves no political issue, but purely an economic question. In this debate, I recognize no Democratic or Republican side of the Chamber. A great industrial interest is knocking at the Chamber of the national Capitol, and the law-makers should forget the interest of a political party and advance the standard in behalf of the industrial interests of the country. This is no bill upon which to try to make political capital for man or party, unless laboring honestly and bravely for the very best interests of the people may give that result.

While touching this thought, I want to say that I am heart and soul with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], whom I regret not to see in his place. He says that it has been the effort of the best part of his life to develop the resources and industries of his country. No man respects the gentleman more than I do and have done for years, but I regret that the trembling hand of age is now being laid upon the very foundation industry that gives life and vitality to the Republic. He would defend a few glutted moneyed corporations and capitalists and strike down the purest industry that gives safety and business prosperity to the nation—the great farming industry. I comprehend the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the others from Pennsylvania who have shown and will yet show their hands in this debate against the appeal of the dairy interests in this land. The reason is obvious. We will get some revenue from this industry, and possibly the tariff laws will weaken some in consequence. Now, I am not an iron-clad, iron-bound protectionist.

I believe in protecting all of the interests of this country that need protection; but I serve notice on Pennsylvania here and now that if there is to be no interest protected in this Chamber but iron, and if the farmers of this land and the great, glorious West are to be sacrificed to protect your iron industry, you will get your "eye-teeth" cut before many Congresses come and go. [Applause.] We have got to have fair play in this Chamber, and the powers are in the land that will take it if you do not come up like men and give it. I think I understand perfectly well why the gifted old legislator turns his face against us now, but I think there is strength enough on both sides of this Chamber to protect the interest that is now clamoring for justice without depending upon men who seem to care nothing about it and who never raise their voices except to defend the protective tariff, and especially when the iron industry of Pennsylvania is at stake.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me to say a word?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will permit the gentleman if I have the time; but I have a good deal to say, and if I begin with one I shall have to yield to others. However, I will hear you.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish merely to say that my colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] and my colleague who spoke to-day [Mr. CURTIN] do not speak for Pennsylvania upon this bill. One of my colleagues spoke yesterday in favor of this bill, and I myself am for the bill, and I believe the people of Pennsylvania are for it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is always a bright and shining light, and on this occasion he marks an oasis in what I supposed to be an unbroken Pennsylvania desert. [Laughter.] Now,

WHAT IS THIS BILL?

What is it for? Mr. Chairman, it is a true, clean-cut revenue bill. Its provisions are simply these: It levies a tax of $600 per annum upon every manufacturer of oleomargarine, a tax of $480 per annum upon every wholesale dealer, a tax of $48 on retail dealers, and a tax of 10 cents a pound to be paid by the manufacturer, to be evidenced by a stamp upon the box containing the article. The manufacturer is also required to give bonds for his faithful compliance with the law.

In addition there are, and most wisely, strong fines and penalties imposed for violating the law, and these are none too severe. My distinguished and always beautiful friend (in debate), the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, says that this bill is "inquisitorial." I reply that it contains no element that has not been for nearly a quarter of a century in successful operation in this country. So far as it can, it embodies the provisions of the law relating to snuff and cigars and makes them applicable to oleomargarine or bogus butter. There is no novelty in this bill. It is patterned after one of the plain, simple internal-revenue laws of the land, and there is nothing startling in it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the first question that naturally arises is this:

DO WE NEED THE MONEY?

We have heard some talk about an overflowing Treasury. I say to gentlemen that we do need the money, and in evidence of that I will quote the official head of this Government. I refer to pages 8 and 9 of the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which contain the following:

Fiscal year 1887.

The revenues of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, are thus estimated upon the basis of existing laws:

From customs	$175,000,000 00
From internal revenue	116,000,000 00
From sales of public lands	5,000,000 00
From tax on national banks	3,000,000 00
From repayment of interest and sinking fund, Pacific railroad companies	1,500,000 00
From customs fees, fines, penalties, &c	900,000 00
From fees—consular, letters patent, and lands	3,000,000 00
From proceeds of sale of Government property	300,000 00
From profits on coinage, assays, &c	4,000,000 00
From deposits for surveying public lands	400,000 00
From revenues of the District of Columbia	1,900,000 00
From miscellaneous sources	4,000,000 00
Total estimated ordinary receipts	315,000,000 00

The estimates of expenditures for the same period, received from the several Executive Departments, are as follows:

Legislative		$3,275,828 92
Executive		18,491,311 70
Judicial		408,300 00
Foreign intercourse		1,604,961 60
Military establishment		25,680,495 51
Naval establishment		30,836,357 74
Indian affairs		6,051,259 84
Pensions		75,830,200 00
Public works:
Legislative	$6,000 00
Treasury Department	4,823,869 17
War Department	16,572,630 18
Navy Department	4,968,337 41
Interior Department	411,880 00
Department of Justice	77,300 00
		26,860,016 76
Postal service		7,443,914 25
Miscellaneous		20,356,082 03
District of Columbia		3,839,868 99
Permanent annual appropriations:
Interest on the public debt	48,500,000 00
Sinking fund	46,659,000 00
Refunding—customs, internal revenue, lands, &c	13,152,400 00
Collecting revenue from customs	5,500,000 00
Miscellaneous	5,099,555 00
		118,910,955 00
Total estimated expenditures, including sinking fund		339,589,552 34
Or an estimated deficit of		24,589,552 34

As will be seen the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that there will be a deficit of $24,589,000 on the 30th day of June, 1887, and he states in detail the basis for his conclusion. Now, this is not any rambling statement. It is a careful official estimate submitted by the official financial head of the Republic. In addition to that this Congress, with a patriotism that I commend, has added to the pensions of the widows and orphans of the Union soldier $6,000,000 per annum, not taken into account by the Secretary of the Treasury, but which will be added to the expenses of the Government, thus raising the amount of the deficit to $30,000,000. Then, if the Mexican pension bill goes through the Senate, as it has gone through the House, we shall have from forty to fifty millions more to pay. I need not call the attention of the House to the fact that we have a vast debt still unpaid, that we have appealing rivers and harbors, that public buildings are needed—nearly every State demanding them—until we are afraid we have not money enough to give all that is needed. I need not remind this Chamber that the Army of the United States has been reduced to a platoon, and the Navy to a naked flag-staff. I do not need to remind this Chamber that we have no merchant marine, and let it not be forgotten that the idol of one great party in this nation, "the Old Sage of Gramercy," has counseled and appealed for the expenditure of millions for our coast defenses. We stand to-day a stingy and cramped nation in regard to many needed expenditures; and I say, with Secretary Manning, that we do need this money. Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass from that.

The next question that naturally arises after the question, Do we need the money? is this:

IS THE PROPOSED LAW CONSTITUTIONAL?

Upon this point I am compelled to be brief, but I want the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] or the chairman of the Judiciary [Mr. TUCKER] or any other lawyer in this Chamber to lay his finger on a line or a sentence or a proposition in the bill that the Supreme Court can set aside. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] said—and I thank him for his candor—that he had to couple the remarks of friends of the measure with the language of the bill itself in order to hold it to be unconstitutional. Mr. Chairman, that will not do. This debate is no part of this bill, and never can be considered by any court that may pass upon its constitutionality. I am very glad that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is going to print his report against one of these bills, as I had intended to print it myself in connection with my remarks.

In that report the majority of the Judiciary Committee are forced to admit the constitutionality of this measure, because it is based on Article I, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States, giving absolute power to Congress to lay and collect taxes; and the chairman of the committee in that report admits that the judicial power dare not enter the chamber of the lawmaker's mind to find motives for the passage of a law, but is bound to accept the law itself for that guide. We have a right under the Constitution to levy and collect taxes. Here we are deciding whether it is necessary or not to do that. We exercise the power; and the mode of its exercise can not be questioned by the highest judicial tribunal in the Republic. I say, then, it is a waste of time to discuss this bill from a constitutional standpoint.

If we need the money, if we have the right to pass this bill—a bill to raise money—the next question that ought to arise in the mind of a thoughtful legislator is, in order to do the least harm and the most good? Now, I appeal to gentlemen in this chamber, if you look over the list of articles to decide upon which you will levy a tax, upon what other article could you levy it to do so little harm and so much good to the masses of the people? No man who wishes to withstand criticism will dare to say that the lawmaker should not take such considerations into account.

UPON WHAT SHALL WE LEVY A TAX

During the late war and for some time after its close we levied internal duties upon hundreds and hundreds of articles. We imposed an income tax; we imposed a stamp-tax on checks. The farmer could not slaughter a cow, or a sheep, or a pig, without rendering account and paying a tax. He could not open his door and take in half a dozen men to stay over night and accept a trifling compensation without being compelled to pay $10 tax as a hotel keeper. The hand of the law was everywhere upon the industries of this country. By Congress after Congress, as the war receded, the hand of the law was removed from various articles and various lines of business. Upon what was it left? Distilled spirits, fermented liquors, snuff, and tobacco. Why were these left? Because it accorded with the judgment of almost the entire nation that internal taxation should be restricted chiefly to these articles. Some were in favor of this form of taxation because they thought it would be a restraint upon the manufacture of the articles; others were in favor of their taxation because they were luxuries. Whether the tax was paid by the big-hearted German with his overflowing glass of lager before him, or by the millionaire sitting at Delmonico's with his sparkling champagne in his hand, or by the sturdy old Kentuckian with his "old reliable bourbon," we all felt and admitted the propriety of laying the hand of the law upon those particular industries. So too the State banks were deliberately taxed out of life and the destruction of those banks was the sole aim of the law taxing them.

Now, we have presented here the question, is oleomargarine something to be picked out and designated as a thing to be thus handled and taxed?

WHAT IS OLEOMARGARINE?

And I will say to gentlemen who criticise my pronunciation that it is natural to give the soft sound in speaking of so soft an article. [Laughter.] Now, I do not find oleomargarine referred to in the Bible, but I do find it in the works of Shakespeare.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do you find butter in the Bible?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes; you will find butter in the Bible from Genesis to Revelations. You will hardly find a book in the Bible that does not speak of butter. The article came into use before profane history was written. Milk and butter have been the food of man from time immemorial, and you do not need medical certificates or the resolutions of boards of trade to tell you that butter is a wholesome article of food. The experience of generations testifies to it. In all times it has been on the table of the king in his palace, and the poor man's in his cabin. "Milk and honey!" Why, it was promised to the children of Israel in the desert. Herodotus speaks of butter four hundred and sixty years before the Christian era. The cow has taken the motherless babe through infancy and equipped with strength the gladiator struggling for life in the bloody amphitheaters of Rome. Such articles of food, of all things, are entitled to kind consideration and the fullest protection from the lawmaker.

Now, let me give you the first record I find of oleomargarine. In the fourth act of the play of Macbeth, where there was a little cotillion of witches, I find oleomargarine completely described.

These witches had a great caldron in their midst, something like what our good friend Armour has in Chicago, to work up this product, or like the one which was testified about by a gentleman before the Committee on Agriculture. A witness appeared before that committee when I was present, and testified as to the manufacture of oleo oil in Washington city. I heard him state that dead horses, dead cows, and even dead dogs, when they had been shot for hydrophobia, the rotten carcasses of the city, were gathered up and taken to a rendering establishment here where the great bulk of these things were made into "pure" oleo oil (these boards of trade always pick out strong adjectives) and shipped away to be sold for the making of butter, while the rest was made into soap.

Now, it is a caldron like that the witches are about, and here is the process of making oleomargarine. It has improved little, if any, since the days of the bloody Macbeth. Here is the process:

FIRST WITCH. Round about the cauldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw——
Toad, that under coldest stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot!

[Laughter.]

SECOND WITCH. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth, boil and bubble.

[Great laughter.]

THIRD WITCH. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witches' mummy; maw, and gulf,
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,

HECATE. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

Her nine farrow; grease, that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

[Great laughter and applause.]

So much for oleomargarine, as Mr. Shakspeare has described it. It could not be more fitly done; but I will call up other witnesses who know what they are talking about to tell us the character of bogus butter. I will introduce seventeen patents for the manufacture of bogus butter granted by the Patent Office of the United States. These patents name forty-nine distinct ingredients that are used in the manufacture of bogus butter. They are capsic acid, nitric acid, sugar of lead, benzoic acid, butyric acid, commercial sulphuric acid, boracic acid, salicylic acid, chlorate of potash, caparic acid, caustic potash, carbolic acid.

The twelve ingredients are each and every one poisons.

Then there are sulphate of lime (used to poison rats), tallow, butyric ether, caul, bene, turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, stomach of sheep, stomach of calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, alum, cows' udders, sal soda, nitrate of soda, dry blood albumen, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, sulphate of soda, chalk, slippery-elm bark, bromo chloralum, oil of peanuts, caustic soda.

The foregoing twenty-six ingredients are more or less dangerous to health, depending upon the proportions employed.

Then there are glycerine, castor oil, gastric juice, curcumine, cotton-seed oil, peroxide of magnesia, pepsin, lard, farinaceous flour, olive oil, and sugar—eleven ingredients that are comparatively harmless and may be used if one is willing to have his stomach turned into an apothecary-shop or a pork-packing establishment.

It must not be forgotten in this connection the character of the lard and tallow used in the manufacture of this product. It should be borne in mind that the system described before the Committee on Agriculture as obtaining in the city of Washington obtains in every large city of the country in a greater or less degree. The dead animals in the city, the animals that die in transportation from the far West and are brought dead into the great packing center of Chicago, are taken and worked up into oleo oil, lard, and tallow, possessing unwholesome ingredients that are dangerous as food. But there is another article largely used in this production. I refer to cotton-seed oil; and this may throw some light upon the opposition that we are encountering from our brethren in the South in connection with the discussion of this bill. I will read in this connection an article just clipped from the Daily Register of my own State, and which comes from the pen of one of the most enlightened agricultural writers in the United States, well known as Father Clarkson, of Iowa. Here it is:

A BAD CONFESSION.

The manufacturers of fraudulent butter and their friends have all along been contending that oleomargarine and suine butter were made entirely of pure, healthy, and palatable animal fats; and that they were as pure as cow butter. The patents obtained from the Patent Office showed differently. This, the manufacturers contend, was not general or successful ingredients used by the real fraudulent butter makers. But last week, fearing that the bill for the protection of butter would pass, the following telegram was sent from Memphis to a few Southern Congressmen, who they thought could be controlled by their devotion to the cotton interests, by which they effectually give themselves away in acknowledging that cotton-seed oil enters largely into the composition of butter. The telegram was as follows:

"The undersigned, at the request and on behalf of the Cotton-Seed Crushers' Association, now in convention assembled at Memphis, earnestly request your influence and co-operation in defeating a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture by Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, to impose a tax upon manufactured butter. If passed this bill would strike directly at Southern cotton planters, whose seed is crushed by about one hundred and thirty mills, and the oil from which enters largely into the manufacture of butter. Furthermore, it would deprive poor classes of a cheap butter, pronounced by eminent chemists to be wholesome."

The dispatch is signed by J. W. Allison, president; E. Urquhart, vice-president, and J. H. Duggan, secretary.

It will thus appear that, in addition to the deadly poisons, unwholesome articles, and those of a quasi-unwholesome character, we have to encounter cotton-seed oil in the manufacture of this bogus article. We may as well be plain on this subject. It has reached the point in the history of our country where and his reeking hand decks your table with one of the most necessary articles of food. The production of this article has reached the point where 200,000,000 pounds are annually produced in this country.

From the Department of Agriculture I gather a few facts which may be worthy notice.

Kansas City turns out 6,000 pounds of oleomargarine daily. Saint Louis manufactures weekly 6,000 pounds of lardine—a composition of hog fat and decayed vegetable matter; but she manufactures, as I understand, no oleomargarine.

The same information states that 100,000 pounds of this combination is made daily in Chicago; but Colonel Littler, secretary of the National Dairyman's Association, I believe, living in Chicago, making close investigation into this question, stated before the Committee on Agriculture that there were sixteen houses in Chicago making bogus butter and turning out 200,000 pounds daily. Although the bogus butter men were represented at that meeting none rose to contradict the statement of Colonel Littler. Then there is oleo oil—pure beef fat. Of this 250 tierces are made weekly in Saint Louis for shipment to Rotterdam and Holland; of the same material Kansas City produces 200 tierces, and Chicago from 1,200 to 1,500 tierces of the same weekly. Saint Louis, during the three winter months, made from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds of butterine daily, and at least 100,000 pounds for the three months. Kansas City during the same time was grinding out 6,500 pounds of this "colored grease" daily. The same authority states that East Saint Louis used cotton-seed oil occasionally in the manufacture of "pure dairy butter."

From information received, also from the Agricultural Department, I learn that the Standard Butter Company of Boston made, during 1885, of oleo oil 148,814 pounds; of artificial butter, 180,000 pounds; the Providence Dairy Company, of Rhode Island, made of butterine, in 1885, 1,750,000 pounds. During the same year there was manufactured in Cincinnati, of butterine 766,956 pounds. N. I. Nathan & Co., of New York, made of butterine 2,000,000 pounds in 1885; John Reardon & Sons, of Boston, of oleomargarine 2,740,687 pounds; of oleo butter 1,158,706 pounds. The Woodlawn Dairy Company, of Pawtucket, R. I., made of oleomargarine 931,200 pounds; in Pittsburgh, Pa., one factory makes in one week of oelo oil 50,000 pounds, mostly shipped to Holland. Louisville in 1885 manufactured of butterine 500,000 pounds. It is estimated that in Chicago there is made of butterine annually not less than 20,000,000 pounds.

These are some data that I have been able to gather from the Department of Agriculture, and is doubtless far short of giving us the amount of business now being done in the manufacture of this counterfeit article. Not less than $12,000,000 are now invested in its production, and if the wealth of the men and companies engaged in its production were taken into account it would exceed $100,000,000; and these gentlemen engaged in producing this article are compelled, in order to reap a rich harvest in the way of profits, to so conduct their business as to enable the retailer to sell it in disguise. But they are open and above board in their advertising of this abomination. I will read from the New York Produce Exchange Bulletin of May 15, 1886, one advertisement as a sample:

In order further to throw light upon this mode of getting this before the public I now submit for the consideration of the committee a verbatim copy of a letter sent from N. I. Nathan & Co., of New York, to a firm in Washington city, which speaks for itself:

[N. I. Nathan & Co., manufacturers of butterine, under patent granted to N. I. Nathan, 21½ Grove street.]

NEW YORK, March 30, 1886.

SIRS: We have taken the liberty of forwarding you per Pennsylvania Railroad one 10-pound tub of our creamery brand of butterine, which we claim is the finest in the market, for which we do not charge you anything. We guarantee uniformity in quality at all times, and our present price for the same is 10 cents per pound net f. o. b. New York in the following packages, namely: Half firkins, 10, 20, 30, 40, and 56 pound Welsh tubs; 1-pound rolls, thirty, forty, and fifty in a tub; 60-pound tubs, catch-weight rolls; 1-pound round prints, forty in a case; 1-pound square prints, 52 pounds in a case. If the quality and price are satisfactory we would be pleased to receive your valuable orders.

Yours, very respectfully,

N. I. NATHAN & CO.

So much for the production of the article. A word further as to

ITS GENERAL CHARACTER.

The advocates of this article claim that it is wholesome. It may be admitted that it is possible to make something approaching the appearance and taste of butter that is comparatively wholesome; but it is true that the great body of it is not wholesome, and that with the temptation to gather in everything capable of being manufactured into butter, getting it cheap and throwing it upon the market, but few of the manufacturers will confine themselves to a wholesome article. In this connection I submit, for the information of the House, an article clipped from the Dairyman of April 8, 1886, which speaks for itself:

SOME PROOF OF GUILT.

[Reproduced by special request.]

Professor Nachrieb, of the Minnesota University, has been analyzing some butterine. The best samples, he says, had many living organisms and spores in them, with masses of dead mold, bits of cellulous wood, various colored particles, shreds of hair, bristles, &c., while other samples teemed with life. Doubtful portions of worms were also noticed. The great number and variety of organisms found in the samples indicate the use of foul water and a criminally filthy process in making. He states that there can not be the slightest doubt that the person who eats so promiscuous and so lively a mixture as the butterine examined is running great risk morally as well as physically. This is the evidence of filth in making butterine that is coming to the surface even now, when butterine manufacturers should be on their good behavior while active war is being waged against them. What may be expected should the war abate and these people be left to their own sweet will in making this counterfeit compound? Any one who has had doubts about the propriety of interfering with the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine should carefully reflect upon the results of these scientific tests, and then reason in his mind what will probably be done by these manufacturers if the attention of the public is withdrawn from their work.

Think of the temptation they will be subjected to! For instance, A renders the bodies of dead animals from a large city, including cats, dogs, horses, &c., a perfectly legitimate industry, for he sells the grease to a wholesale dealer who may make it, or a part of it, into lubricating oil or axle grease; but B comes along, and, examining some of the barrels, says he will try it in his oleomargarine factory, not knowing or caring where the oil came from. He finds it a success in deceiving the public and soon he buys directly from the horse-rendering establishment. It is not necessary to prove that this is now being done, but the practical mind can see how quickly it will be done if there is no supervision of the matter by the State or General Government. Then, again, the class of men occupied with this industry are proven beyond all peradventure to belong to an order of loose speculators with weak and nimble consciences. They know the stuff is sold in a deceitful manner, and hence put themselves outside of that principle of the law that proclaims all men innocent until they are proven guilty. We know that all men are not innocent, and in proof of this we lock our doors and take precautions to guard our lives and property long before we attempt to prove that the villains are guilty. Have we not the same moral right with our food, and should we not make laws to take all the legitimate precautions we can procure and maintain a high standard of unadulterated food?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, my honored friend [Mr. KELLEY], contents himself because bogus butter can be made so that it can not be detected. This he does on the statement of some gentleman whom he tripped up before his committee when he was the chairman of it. My honored friend has not been keeping pace with the investigation of this question. If he had he would learn that by the use of the microscope. In this connection I submit herewith a letter from Thomas Taylor, M. D., microscopist of the United States Department of Agriculture, which shows that the bogus butter is absolutely certain of detection:

BUTTER FAT AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The following letter to Dr. Sturtevant, of the New York experiment station, explains Dr. Taylor's method of discriminating between genuine butter and the counterfeits sold as oleomargarine butter, &c., at the close of which he pays his respects to Professor Weber and Bulletin 13:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., March 21, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I regret that when you were in Washington, on the 24th ultimo, you were not able to devote a portion of your time to my division work relating to butter and fats.

In answer to the note you left on my desk, requesting a statement of my claims and methods of testing suspected butter substitutes, I submit herewith, by the courtesy of the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture, Norman J. Coleman, a brief outline of the tests I employ.

I have deemed it unnecessary thus far to publish anything special regarding the originality of my discoveries, having considered it of much greater importance to make my investigations regardless of the experiments or views of any one else. My object has been, primarily, to demonstrate the possibility of distinguishing, by means of the microscope, pure butter from the butter substitutes of commerce—an achievement hitherto considered impossible by the leading chemists of Europe and the United States. Hassal says, in his edition of 1876: "It is erreonous to suppose that butter and fats can be distinguished from each other, even by means of polarized light." The late Professor Voelcher, chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, stated before a Parliamentary committee that he was unable to discriminate between butter and the other animal fats.

When I commenced my microscopic observations of butter and fats several years ago it was with a firm conviction that I should be able to discriminate between pure dairy butter and oleomargarine by means of polarized light, basing my convictions on the fact that pure dairy butter is a non-polarizing substance, while the solid and semi-fluid fats contained in such substances as lard and beef-fat oil are polarizing bodies.

When a specimen of butter-like material is presented for testing, I mount about a grain of it upon a microscope slide (a piece of glass 3 by 1 inches), over which I place a circular glass cover, and compress the substance into a thin film, or until it appears semi-transparent. If it presents a white, even, cloud-like appearance, and has the odor and taste of butter, I conclude that it is probably butter. If, when boiled over the flame of a spirit lamp, it gives off the odor of butter, I consider this another indication in its favor.

If, when triturated with a few drops of strong sulphuric acid, it slowly becomes of a pale salmon color within five to twenty minutes, or a light brick red, changing after the lapse of about twenty-four hours to a tallow color, this is another indication of its genuineness. Lard and beef-fat in the same length of time and under similar conditions each assumes a walnut color. (For a fuller explanation of my acid test, see my first paper on the acid treatment of butter and fats.)

If the sample is submitted to the action of polarized light and selenite plate, and appears of a uniform green, red, blue, or yellow color, according to the selenite used, we have another indication that the substance is pure butter; normal butter under these conditions never exhibits prismatic colors.

Sometimes large crystals of salt cause the appearance of prismatic colors in pure butter by refraction. These should be removed. Butter that has been exposed to light until it is bleached, or butter that has been in immediate contact for a long time with a substance that absorbs its oil, as when placed in wooden tubs, has undergone a chemical change, and should not be considered as normal butter. A superior butter when boiled with or without oil will yield large crystals of fat by attending to the following directions: Place from half an ounce to an ounce of butter in a test-tube of sufficient capacity, holding the tube by means of a twisted wire over a spirit-lamp until the butter is thoroughly boiled for about one minute; then in order to crystallize, let it cool in an atmosphere of from 59° to 60° Fahrenheit during a space of from twelve to twenty-four hours, so that it will crystallize slowly; this will give the best results. Take a portion of this when cooled on the point of a pen-knife, place it on a glass slide, add to it one drop of sweet oil, and with a pin separate the crystals, which are large enough to be seen with the naked eye. Your microscopist should now make a "varnish ring," within which the butter and oil are to be secured under a glass cover, care being taken not to crush the crystals. The "ring" should be about one-tenth of an inch in thickness, and may be made in advance. Subject the specimen to polarized light, turn the polarizer until a dark ground is produced, and the butter crystal will appear bright, exhibiting upon its surface a black cross, in outline the same as that known as the cross of St. Andrew.

When old butter or butter which has been kept in a warm atmosphere is boiled and cooled, a secondary crystallization quickly takes place, of a rosette-like form, which generally proceeds from the center of the cross. A very superior freshly made butter rich in fats, which has been kept cool previous to boiling, may be preserved a long time at a temperature of 60° without exhibiting the rosette crystal. I send you a slide of butter crystals, some of which may be observed in the act of "budding," the interspaces filled with the rosettes which have floated off from the original globose forms which show the black cross. These appearances are among the conditions which distinguish pure butter from the fats of beef, mutton, and lard. Use a magnifying power of about 100 diameters for the globose of crystals and a power of about 250 diameters for the small rosette-like bodies, which vary greatly in size and might be mistaken by an inexperienced observer for the crystals of the fat of beef in their early stage of development.

A SECOND METHOD.

To an ounce of good butter add half an ounce of pure cotton-seed oil. The amount of oil used will depe nd upon the quality of the butter. If the butter is naturally of an oily character, less oil may be used. If the proportions are properly adjusted, the composition, when cold, will be semi-fluid, such as the sample I send you. The second method has this advantage over the first, namely, that in specimens so prepared the crystals retain their form for a longer period.

BEEF-FAT.

Take any portion of beef-fat, render it slowly in an iron pot without water, strain it, and set it away to cool. To an ounce of solid fat thus obtained add cotton-seed oil, heat in a test-tube nearly to the point of decomposition, and let it cool for about twenty-four hours at a temperature of about 60° Fahrenheit. Its consistency should then be semi-fluid. Mount with a "varnish ring." The crystals of the fat of beef are very small on first boiling, and should be reboiled and cooled several times. In this way the crystals enlarge and become better defined and appear quite different from the secondary crystals of butter. High powers are required for this fat, say from 450 to 1,000 diameters. The crystals of beef-fat treated as above and viewed under high powers present a foliated appearance.

In my ordinary methods of mounting, for temporary use, I dispense with the "ring," taking care to press the covers very gently, especially when mounting large crystals of butter. Beef, mutton, and lard may be pressed without damage.

LARD.

No reliance can be placed upon the lards of commerce as to their purity. Leaf-lard is now rendered by some firms with a small quantity of soda for the purpose of dissolving the tissues; by this means an impure lard is produced which contains a small amount of soap in which the crystals are not so well defined as in lards rendered without the aid of chemicals.

Lard composed of stearine and cotton-seed oil is also on the market; it may contain beef fat, for one of the forms of stearine is a roughly made biproduct of the oil of beef fat. A lard thus made will show strongly marked stellar crystals. To avoid mistakes in regard to the crystallography of the fats or plants and animals I always render the fats I used in my experiments, noting the stages of crystallization through which they pass in oil solutions.

Having noted some of the peculiarities of normal butter, the crystalline character of boiled butter, of lard and of tallow, one is in a position to discriminate between pure normal butter and the butter substitutes containing free fats. That pure normal butter viewed under polarized light and selenite plate shows no prismatic colors, the following experiments demonstrate: Place a green selenite between the polarizer and the analyzer and a plain green color will be observed. Then place a mounted slide of normal butter, under the selenite, view again, and the same even green color is observed. Now place a small portion of lard or beef-fat oil on the same slide, and with the polarized light and the same green selenite the fat will exhibit prismatic colors, showing the contrast between a polarizing body, such as the semi-solid fats, and a non-polarizing body, like pure butter.

BUTTERINE AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The preceding experiments explain why butterine, which contains solid or semi-fluid, translucent fats, such as lard and tallow, in combination with unboiled butter, is so easily detected when submitted to the action of polarized light and selenite plate. The crystals of lard or of tallow generally observed in great numbers are easily distinguished from the mass of amorphous fats with which they are combined. This is one of the most important of my tests of oleomargarine and butterine.

Professor H. A. Weber, chemist of the Ohio Experiment Station at Columbus, Ohio, who says he has been testing my methods of detecting the butter substitutes of commerce, reports in bulletin 13 of that station, under date March 1, 1886, that by the use of my butter tests on a variety of butters procured from those on exhibition at the stock show of Chicago, he observed invariably the form of the Saint Andrew's cross as I have described it; and further, that on submitting lard to polarizing light "nothing but the small irregular stellated bodies could be seen, in which the cross was entirely wanting. A large number of slides were mounted and examined, but not a single 'butter crystal' could be found." Professor Weber further states that oleo oil (beef-fat oil) treated in like manner gave similar results, "only small stellate crystals were present. Thus far the results and statements of Dr. Taylor were fully corroborated." He thus acknowledges the correctness of three of my original experiments, but he fails to apply them in practice. According to his report he made fifteen experiments in all; of these only the first three have any relation to my methods. The remaining twelve are based on his uniform plan of boiling all of his combinations of butterine at a high temperature.

Let us review experiment No. 4. He says: "A mixture consisting of 90 per cent. butter and 10 per cent. "oleo oil" (beef-fat oil) was boiled and cooled as before. The mounted slides could not be distinguished from the pure butter slides." (He means that they showed only the butter cross.) Why should he boil this oleomargarine, when by simply mounting a portion and viewing it with polarized light and selenite plate the prismatic colors, which show the presence of foreign fats—the object to be attained—are at once observed? I have just examined a composition of butter and "oleo oil" (beef-fat oil) in the proportions given above. The butter was melted at a temperature of 104 degrees Fahrenheit, and combined with the beef-fat oil. The mounted slide shows no butter crystals, while it did exhibit those of beef fat (oleo oil). In this case I imitated the methods of those engaged in the production of butterine and oleomargarine by only melting the butter and fats at a very low temperature. Professor Weber erred in boiling his oleomargarine, and this holds good with all his experiments from No. 4 to No. 15 inclusive. His last twelve experiments must be eliminated from the consideration of this subject, because they have no relation to my methods of discriminating between butter and oleomargarine; nor do the characteristics of the butter crystal of necessity have direct relation to the detection of oleomargarine. It is only when the differentiation of the respective crystals of the fats of the various plants and animals is considered that the cross of butter becomes an important factor.

Professor Weber's experiments, wherein by triturating lard and oleo oil with a little salt and water he forms globular fatty bodies which exhibit a cross like that of butter, afford an interesting confirmation of my statement to the Commissioner of Agriculture. (See the annual report for 1885, wherein I say that any body which is globular, translucent, smooth, and polarizing will show a cross. See, also, the annual report of the American Society of Microscopists for the same year.)

That which Professor Weber terms a "fat globule" is such a body as I described—"globular, translucent, smooth, and polarizing"—polarizing, because it contains semi-solid, translucent fats. Had Professor Weber examined such globules by plain transmitted light, he would have discovered that they have no resemblance to the globose butter crystal, viewed under the same conditions, which has a uniform structure peculiar to itself. (See figure 2 of the abstract of my paper on butter and fats, read before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, last September.)

In an experiment made as late as the 20th of this month, in the presence of Professor Wiley, chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture, and two of his assistants, Mr. Richardson and Mr. Richards, I demonstrated that a butterine, made at my request in the laboratory, which contained but 1 per cent. of lard to 99 per cent. of pure butter, exhibited, when examined by polarized light and green selenite, well-defined crystals of lard, of a rich golden color on a green ground, the green representing the butter. In this way the adulteration was at once detected.

The experiments of Professor Weber are calculated to introduce confusion and difficulty into a matter in itself comparatively clear and easy. In short, the object on which his efforts have been concentrated, like that so sedulously kept in view by the British Circumlocution Office, as portrayed by Dickens, appears to have been "how not to do it."

It must be borne in mind that the manufacturers of counterfeit butter are obliged to limit their treatment of the substances they use to such manipulations as are consistent with the salability of the product.

I am, sir, yours very truly,

THOMAS TAYLOR, M. D.,
Microscopist United States Department of Agriculture.

Professor E. LEWIS STURTEVANT,
Director New York Agricultural Experiment Station, Geneva, N. Y.

WHO ARE INTERESTED IN THE PASSAGE OF THIS BILL?

My answer is that sixty millions of consumers are interested in its passage; that every farmer and dairyman in the land is interested in its passage. In this country there are from five millions to six millions of men engaged in raising dairy products. Over 1,000,000,000 of pounds of butter are produced annually. According to a table of information prepared carefully by Mr. Edward Atkinson, $912,000,000 of dairy products are annually produced and consumed in the United States. These products, as I have before said, need no certificate as to their character, and stand to-day threatened with destruction by an article which can only come under the same rank and title as forgers, thieves, highway robbers, plunderers, and counterfeiters. With 200,000,000 pounds of bogus butter secretly crawling on to the tables of the people, under a false name, coming into competition with the dairy products of the country, is it to be wondered at that a voice is rising from every part of the land against the evil which this bill, in its results, may, in a sense, prevent? We have reached the point, Mr. Chairman, where we must determine this simple question.

SHALL THE DAIRY BUTTER GO?

Must it cease to be an article of food among the people? In this connection let me read a few extracts from a letter recently received by me from the firm of Thompson & Hanod, of Waterloo, Iowa, in my own district:

It has now become a question of life or death to the interests of the dairyman if this bogus butter is allowed to be sold in future as it has been allowed in the past. It is going to ruin our dairy interests in the whole country. It is not a local issue by any means.

Again:

In your own State (Iowa) it has been sold during the last winter to a large amount, and in this city of Waterloo there has been quite a large amount of this butter sold, and in every instance it was sold as genuine butter. If this bogus butter is sold to such an extent in a dairy State like Iowa, to what an extent must it be sold in the Eastern States? We claim this bogus butter has been a damage to Iowa dairymen to the amount of over $1,000,000 during the last year.

And again:

On the line of the Illinois Central Railroad there have now nearly one-third of the creameries quit running, as this bogus butter can be made so much cheaper than the genuine butter can.

And still again:

We made 315,000 pounds of butter in our factory last year, and, owing to this bogus butter, we made it at a loss of over $3,000; and we paid the farmers over $93,000; and if there is not something done soon we will be obliged to quit making butter and turn our attention to something else.

On receipt of the letter I telegraphed to a leading citizen and public officer in the city of Waterloo, asking as to the character and standing of the firm. The wires brought a quick response that the parties were "honest but embarrassed;" and so is every dairyman in this country embarrassed by this product, and they form the smallest part of the people that should appeal to us in this connection, because the dairyman furnishes a market at the farmer's very door for the sale of the products of the cow, and when you strike down the dairyman you strike the cheap, near, ever-convenient market of the farmer.

Mr. Atkinson states, as I gather from the Agricultural Department, that there were produced and consumed in this country in 1884 of dairy products, $912,000,000; of bread, $450,000,000; vegetables, $360,500,000; of sugar and sirup, $352,000,000; tea and coffee, $185,000,000; fruit, green and dry, $113,000,000; eggs, $91,250,000; cotton, $300,000,000; pig-iron, $85,000,000; wool, $64,000,000; silver product, $40,000,000. It will thus be seen that dairy products exceed three times the cotton produced in the country, and were more than the combined consumption of tea, coffee, wool, cotton, pig-iron, and the silver produced, all taken together, by $34,000,000. Here is an industry that invites guarding and protecting, if wisdom should be the rule, when internal-revenue laws are enacted by this body.

I submit herewith a statement of the exports of butter and cheese from 1821 to 1886:

It will be seen that the value of butter per pound in 1881 was 19 cents—very nearly 20 cents; in 1882, 19 cents; in 1883, 18 cents; in 1884, 18 cents; in 1885, 17 cents; in 1886, 15 cents per pound. It is evident, therefore, that under the influence of the competition from a product which it has been proved again and again can be manufactured at from 6 to 7 cents per pound the price of butter must come down until it will be compelled to retire from the field of industry. It not only is affecting the price of butter, but it is affecting the value of milch cows. I submit herewith a statement showing the number and value of milch cows from 1880 to 1885:

Number and value of milch cows in the United States for each year from 1880 to 1885, inclusive.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, May 20, 1886.

Put your pencil to the figures above given and you will see that cows were worth $31 per head (nearly $32) in 1883; $29 per head (nearly $30) in 1884, and $27 per head in 1885; so that cows are worth $4.50 less in 1885 than in 1883. The loss to the farmers in this country in two years was $64,059,246. It is claimed by those representing the agricultural interests and who have made a careful study of the condition of things this year that the value of cows has fallen off more rapidly than in 1885, until the total loss per head is now $10. Apply this to the total number of cows now in the United States, which must be nearly 15,000,000 and you have a total loss to the farming interest of the country of $150,000,000. In order that there may be a more complete appreciation of the growth of bogus butter I submit herewith a statement made to me by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics showing the amount of imitation butter and the oil exported from the United States since 1876. A study of these figures will be interesting as showing the growth of this dangerous business:

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, May 20, 1886.

To sum up in this connection it may be safely set down that unless something be speedily done:

First. The value of the milch cows will fall so low that they will cease to be considered as milch cows and only be raised for the butcher.

Second. Butter made from milch cows will be compelled to retire wholly from the field of competition and bogus butter must become the sole reliance of the people.

Third. Since many States, like my own State of Iowa, have practically abandoned the raising of wheat and have turned their attention to raising cows, &c., their lands being less valuable than years ago for wheat raising, and now rendered valueless as a milk and cheese producing field, must continue to be less valuable, until millions of dollars will thus be lost to the farmers of the great West.

Fourth. The food that has been on the table of man from the earliest period of history, sacred and profane, must surrender to a villainous compound and fraud.

the passage of this bill? I hold in my hand an immense bundle of resolutions, passed by boards of trade and boards of produce exchange in different large cities of the United States, and which are now flooding Washington, to try and prevent the passage of this bill. From no other quarter does the opposition come, unless I include the great cattle-kings of the far West, who think they see in a manufacture which will use every part of their animals shipped, whether dead or alive, a prospect of increased valuation to their productions. What have these boards of trade to do with this matter? They are simply middlemen. They transact business for the people around them and charge a commission for handling.

What is this question to them unless forsooth they want another article upon the boards for stock-gambling purposes? We know that these corner-makers and speculators are the ones who are fighting us in this contest. I clip from the Saint Paul Despatch of May 19, 1886, an article which shows that the board of trade in that city, a bright and glorious exception, voted down a resolution asking Congress to defeat this bill. But in the Despatch occurred the following which is significant. Speaking of the board of trade and the discussion of the resolution—

Mr. Oliver Armour's agent spoke in favor of butterine, saying that their factory was always open to inspection and that nothing but the pure leaf-lard and tallow were mixed with the best creamery butter. Mr. Marvin was willing to except Mr. Armour's establishment, but wanted to know about the other ninety-one establishments. After considerable more discussion, and finally upon being put to a vote, the resolution requesting a tax of 10 cents was adopted by a vote of 13 to 11.

The Despatch lets the cat out of the bag. It seems that Mr. Armour, the largest bogus-butter manufacturer in the United States, a man of great brain power and tremendous intellectual activity, a man who has amassed his millions through his energy and skill, and who already holds in his grasp, practically, two of the immense boards of trade of this country, has his agents going about the country, from board of trade to board of trade and from produce exchange to produce exchange, to get through these resolutions, to try to affect the action of the American Congress. It remains to be seen whether this power shall obtain with Congress instead of that great, silent, industrial force that lies back and beyond, waiting, quietly waiting, for our verdict upon this question.

But we are told that the States have ample power in this connection. True it is that they have great power. True it is that the State is only limited by the language of the Constitution, while the United States has only such powers as are granted by the Constitution and those incident to the grant. But it is also true that so peculiar is our form of government that it is impossible to reach this question by State action alone. This needs no argument. Every thoughtful man knows the reason, and since twenty-one States through their Legislatures have acted upon it, and are still pressing Congress for national legislation, it is evident that State legislation does not reach the root of this great evil. Yes, the States are at work. The civilized world is at work to put upon this infamous counterfeit. In this connection I submit a statement prepared by the Commissioner of Agriculture which is full of interest in connection with this discussion:

IMITATIONS OF BUTTER—THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE REPORTS ON THE SUBJECT.

Laws for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of bogus butter have been enacted in many States—These laws are regulative and prohibitory—The law enacted in New York declared unconstitutional—Most European countries have adopted regulative laws.

[Special.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18.

The Department of Agriculture has been gathering some facts with reference to butter imitations. They are of special interest just now in view of the legislation asked of Congress by the dairymen. The report says:

"The laws for the protection of consumers against the purchase as butter or cheese of spurious or adulterated articles called by these names may be divided into two general classes, namely:

"First. Regulative laws or those which require that such spurious or adulterated articles shall be sold only for what they really are, and to secure this end provide regulations as to marking, labeling, or otherwise giving public notice of the true character of the article sold.

"Second. Prohibitory laws or those which forbid the manufacture of such spurious or adulterated articles or the offer of such articles for sale.

"The earliest laws were of the former class, but a number of the more recent ones are of the latter. Regulative laws are in force in the District of Columbia and the following States: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Georgia, West Virginia, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, Nevada, and California. Prohibitory laws are in force in Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, while Ohio has a law of the same class, but with an important limitation.

"It appears that a fair proportion of this local legislation has been within a recent period, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Iowa having passed 'regulative anti-butterine' laws within the last two months. The main features of these laws are substantially the same, the difference being in the details for carrying them into practical operation. Some of the States have legislated only with an eye to imitation dairy products, while others have covered the whole subject of food adulteration. The tendency to advance from regulative to prohibitory laws makes the States in which the latter have been enacted of more importance, as it is claimed by the butterine people that the proposed tax of 10 cents per pound would amount to practical prohibition.

"The New York law is the most elaborate and it is quoted in full. The legal status of this enactment is thus stated. Section 6 of the law is as follows:
